Observing, from your monthly return of the 20th ultimo, that, notwithstanding the positive injunction contained in the letter from the department dated the 23d of June last, (of which a copy is herewith enclosed), the public moneys have been permitted to accumulate in your hands, in violation of the law and the instruction of the department, since the 31st of May last, and that it amounted on the 30th ultimo to the sum of $10,976 39, I am constrained by your continued neglect to call your immediate attention to the subject, and again to require that the whole of the public moneys in your possession be deposited forthwith. Unless you exhibit to the department satisfactory evidence of your having done so prior to the 1st day of December next, accompanied by a statement showing your receipts and disbursements, and the balance with which you are chargeable at the time of such deposit, it will be my painful duty to submit the case for the action of the executive, and to recommend the appointment of another person as your successor. I am, &c.

CHRONICLE.

The Great Western sailed from New York on Monday last with a large number of passengers. Among them were M. Pothou, minister of France to the United States; Mr. Cowell, agent of the bank of England; Mr. Jackson, late representative in congress from Georgia; Dr. Polz, hospital surgeon U. S. N. for the Mediterranean; and major Van Buren, late secretary to the president.

Inland route to Boston. The legislature of Massachusetts have passed an act to incorporate the Hartford and Springfield rail road corporation. This completes the rail road line from New Haven to Boston, so far as citizens are concerned. The link between Hartford and Springfield, 25 miles, is the only portion of the road not yet in operation or in process of construction. In about a year from this date, we calculate to go to Boston, via New Haven, Hartford, Springfield and Worcester, in thirteen hours. When the rail road goes to New Haven it will be built, we will make Boston in twelve hours from New York. rain or shine, snow storm or gale.

The above is from the New York Journal of Commerce; and it we add six hours more for Philadelphia, we shall have 18 hours between Philadelphia and Boston. Oliver Evans was deuced crazy, when he prophesied that the distance would be run in twenty-four hours.

Steam route from Maine to Florida. The steamer Florida runs once a week from Savannah to Picolata, and returns touching at the intervening places of Brunswick, St. Marys, Jacksonville and Black creek, and completes the route of steam navigation from Maine to Florida.

Georgia Central rail road. We learn from the Savannah Georgian that this road is now in daily use to the extent of seventy miles, and that by 1st of November ensuing a continuous line of one hundred and one miles will be completed for the season.

Good business. It is stated in the U. S. Gazette, that the receipts of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore rail road, for the month of March, amounts to $49,350.

Rail road improvements. A gentleman went with us yesterday to examine an improvement on the rail road car wheel, for the purposes of insuring safety at short curves in the road, and at "turn outs." The improvement consists in having the flange of the wheel in the centre of the flange, or perpendicular to the curve, and is made by attaching these on the curves on the city rail road, the outside rail is not changed. On coming to the curve, the flange on the inner wheel runs between the double bar rail, while that on the outside drops inside of the outer rail. Each wheel, it will be understood, has a double bearing, and consequently does not run on the flange in the curves, unless the curve should be exceedingly short. This saves the flange, which is endangered by a heavy load, when it sustains the whole weight.

The improvement of which we speak, and which we have scarcely described, is made by Mr. Peet, and the model is exhibited at the second flat store on the west side of Second street, below the place where an model is made by Mr. Peet, turn out, of great simplicity and ingenuity, which is worthy the attention of persons concerned in railroads, to which regard we commend the improvements on the wheels and curves, and the inventions of the turn out. (Phil. U. S. Gaz.)

Naval. The U. S. ship North Carolina, commodore Ballard, was to sail from Valparaiso for the United States about the 1st February.

The U. S. brig Boxer was at Callao at the end of January.

The Norfolk correspondent of the exchange, in his letter of Monday, states that repeated firing of guns was heard by persons on board two pilot boats on Saturday afternoon and night, no doubt from the North Carolina 74, com. Ballard, daily expected from the Pacific. A line-of-battle-ship was seen off the Chesapeake a few days since.

Frigate Constitution. "Old Ironsides" was towed up to the city of New York on Saturday, by two steamboats. It is stated that this old and favorite ship requires some fifty petty officers and seamen to complete her crew, when she will sail for the Pacific.

There were no United States government vessels at Rio de Janeiro on the 24th. They had sailed on the 10th to Montevideo for the protection of American commerce in that quarter.

From the Pensacola Gazette, April 5. The U. S. ship Natchez, com'd Benjamin Page, arrived here yesterday in 10 days from Jamaica, after a fourteen weeks' cruise—officers and crew all well. During her voyage she touched at Havana, St. Bartholomew, St. Thomas, Guayana, Ponce, Port au Prince, St. Jago de Cuba and Port Royal. Reports nothing new of importance. The American flag as usual much respected.

We learn that her majesty's ship of the line Hercules left Jamaica on the 24th ult. for Halifax, with 500 soldiers and 400 marines, com'd March. They had no wind.

The Macdonion, com. Shubrick, and Levant, com'r Paulding, sailed on Monday last for the Gulf. For three days during the present week not a U. S. ship has been in our bay, a very rare, if not unprecedented occurrence. It is understood that the ships now in the Gulf are to rally at some port, and return in squadrons about the 1st of March.

The Boston, com'r Babitt, sailed on Saturday last for New York, via Key West, Havana and Matanzas.

The senate of Michigan have passed a resolution to remove the seat of the state government from Detroit to Marshall's Ferry, in Calhoun county.

The first fruits. Baltimore, April 15. We happened to be present yesterday afternoon at the warehouses of Messrs. O'Connor & Co. near the depot of the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road company, when the train of burden cars arrived. Five of them had come all the way from Pittsburg, and were filled with goods which had been packed in them in that city, and had never been touched until they arrived at the depot here. This was the first arrival of any freight in the portable car bodies of Messrs. O'Connor & Co. and the condition in which the goods arrived, and the expedition with which the train may be made, are strong recommendations.

The car wheels are lifted, at the proper stations, from the car bodies to the wagons, and thence into the canal boats, without any delay, and with the most perfect safety to the goods. Nearly 17,000 pounds of bacon, and 7,000 pounds of hemp, we observed as part of this freight. [Chronicle.]

Atlantic steam ships. A letter from Glasgow, to a merchant in Boston, under date of March 20, says: "We feel highly gratified to inform you that the keels of three steamers of 1,100 tons and 420 horse power, are now about being laid. No expense will be spared to make these boats equal in every respect to the best of the kind. One is ordered for the line Liverpool and Halifax twice a month, with a continuation from the latter port to Boston."

Common schools in Pennsylvania. By the school law of 1836, the state of Pennsylvania, (exclusive of the city and county of Philadelphia), was divided into 1,032 school districts. Of this number, as appears by a late report, no less than 649 districts have assessed a school tax, and received their quota of the state appropriation, within the past year. In these 649 districts, in which the law has gone into operation and is now producing its salutary effect upon the men of the next age, there are 5,269 schools; 4,753 male teachers, 1,464 female teachers, and 233,719 scholars. Nobly is the old Keystone state vindicating herself, after all, on the great question of common school education—a question which she had so long and so decidedly refused to be or to be the very highest importance to the prosperity of a free country and to the stability of its institutions.

Robbery of the express mail. The Nashville Union says, that on the evening of the 8th inst. Ralph Austin, a rider on the express line in Alabama, was apprehended and committed to the jail in Montgomery, for robbing the mail under his charge, of a letter containing eight hundred dollars principally in cut bills, forty of which he had spent, he having a pension of $100. The balance has been recovered. Austin states that he took the money out of a letter, about the 1st of April, which was postmarked "Nashville," and addressed to N. Orleans. He recollects neither the writer nor the person to whom it was directed. He further states that he opened the letter letters containing enclosures, both of which he destroyed.

Trade of the west. The Pittsburg Gazette of Friday says: "On the arrival of the steamer from Paris, from Bardistown, Illinois, having on board, among other articles, seventy-five tons of bacon, to be sent seaward by the canal. Also, the Detroit, from the Missouri river, with twenty-two hundred bags of corn."

Extraordinary resuscitation. In Barzou, last week, a child five years of age, was re-suscitated, after lying three quarters of an hour at the bottom of a well with ten feet of water in it.

Canada. We have seen the public accounts, from which it appears that the provincial civil expenditure for the last year, over and above the ordinary annual expenditure is $20,000, or $80,000; that the annual interest on the provincial debt is 4,630,000, $233,000; that there is a deficiency in the resources of the province, to meet the expenditures of the present year, of 420,170, or $260,650, for which the provincial parliament is called upon to provide in some way or other. Such are the first fruits, on the score of finances alone, of the present system of government commenced in good earnest in 1836. [Toronto Gazette, March 27.]

Pennsylvania canal freights. The forwarding merchants of Philadelphia have had a meeting, and agreed permanently to fix the price of freights from that city to Pittsburg, by the Pennsylvania canals and rail roads, as follows:

$2.00 per hundred pounds, for dry goods.
1.75 " " " hardware and grocers' ware.

Rail road accidents. On Saturday last, at Brooklyn, a load of fourteen years attempted to get upon a rail road car which was in rapid motion, but missed his hold and fell under the wheels, which severed his head from his body.

On Monday morning the rope at the inclined plane on the Columbia rail road broke just after the passenger load had passed. Four burden cars, loaded with flour, were attached at the time, and rushed down near the top of the plane with tremendous velocity. The cars were of course destroyed, as well as others which arrested their progress and were standing at the foot of the plane. The West Chester stage, full of passengers, was on the bridge at the time, and had not the rapid career of the cars met with an impediment, the probability of life would probably have been very great, but luckily no personal injuries were sustained.

On Sunday, at Philadelphia, a boy fell under a rail road car, the wheel of which cut off his leg.

Destructive fire. A fire broke out in Albany, N. Y. on Saturday evening last at about 3 o'clock, in a stable connected with the Pearl street house, in a stable of a block, bounded by Lydius, Pearl, Hamilton, and Rose streets. About fourteen houses were burnt on Lydius street; ten or twelve, including the Pearl street house, on Pearl street, and several old buildings on Rose street. The Methodist church, in Herkimer street, took fire from the stacks and was entirely destroyed, with a large wagon establishment on the corner of Franklin and Herkimer streets. The loss is estimated from $80,000 to $100,000.

Great fire at Ogdensburg, N. Y. On Tuesday night the 16th, about 11 o'clock, a fire broke out in a barn behind Haskins' old tavern in Ford street, which in its progress destroyed the bank, the post office, and a large portion of the business part of the place.

All the buildings between the sides Ford street, between Isabella and State streets, one side of State street to Green street, one side of Green street to Isabella street and one side of Isabella to Ford street, including post office, Ogdensburg bank, seven dry good stores, fourteen grocery stores, one tavern.

The whole loss is estimated at about $100,000.

Asphalt. Workmen were busy on Monday in laying an asphaltum pavement over the brick-side walk in front of the State street, Philadelphia. It is the Seyssel asphalt, used in Paris and London, of which an account was given by Mr. Walter, the architect, in his late letter on European improvements in paving.

The Baltimore American states that purchases of asphaltum to a considerable extent have been made for purposes connected with the works of the general government. The agent of the London Asphaltum company in Baltimore is Francis H. Smith, esq. at whose office specimens of the asphaltum are to be seen.

The Alexandria Gazette of Wednesday says: "The weather has lately been very fine for the Potomac fisheries, and great quantities of shad and herring have, we understand, been caught, especially on the Maryland shore. Shad have been selling at the fish-wharf, in this town, (the great fish depot), at from $8-50 to $10 per hundred, and the herring at from 25 to 53 cts per thousand, and the demand has not yet been supplied."

It is stated that Messrs. Prince, of Fushing, L. I. have within a short period, disseminated 400,000 marus tinctorialis trees throughout the country, and realized a profit of $200,000.

Michigan. The Niles Intelligence gives a cheering account of business in that quarter. It says:

Steamboats are arriving and departing from our wharves daily. Every vessel that can be made to float, is now in requisition to get off the surplus produce of the country, that has been accumulating at this point during the past winter. An intelligent gentleman who is very extensively engaged in business, assures us that not less than three hundred thousand dollars worth of produce will leave this port for the eastern market in the course of the present season. One man made sale of wheat and flour amounting to twenty-five thousand dollars, on the 16th inst.

The senate of Michigan have wisely rejected the monstrous agrarian proposition of the other house, proclaiming that real estate, valued at such extravagant prices as the arbitrary will of land speculators shall put upon it, shall be a legal tender for the payment of debts.

Election for congress in Illinois. By an act, passed by the last legislature of Illinois, the election of members of congress, deferred until 1841. This was done in the hope that before that time the new appropriation would have been made, when Illinois will doubtless have at least five, probably seven, members.

Russian forests. The northern provinces of the Russian empire are almost entirely uncultivated, and covered with interminable forests. In one government alone, containing 50,000,000 of acres, 47,000,000 of which consists exclusively of forests.

The great sale of public lands in the Milwaukee land district has just terminated. It is the largest public land sale ever held in the United States. The quantity of land sold was four hundred and twenty-five thousand five hundred acres; and amounted to five hundred and sixty-seven thousand three hundred and thirty-nine dollars. Nearly nineteen-twentieths of the whole quantity sold was purchased by actual settlers and all at the minimum price of the government.

Honorable Luther Lawrence, on visiting the site of one of the new factories at Lowell, on Wednesday the 17th inst., tripped and fell into the United States. He was so much injured as to survive the accident only half an hour. Mr. L. was at the time of his decease mayor of Lowell, and president of the Rail Road bank, and universally esteemed as a good citizen.

Departure of the U. S. dragons. The Carlisle (Pa.) Herald of the 16th inst. states that a detachment of about 100 of the handsome looking men, left that place, on the preceding day, and had taken the cars for New York, and thence for Fort Gibson. They had been recruited and drilled at the Carlisle barracks by capt. Sumner, and "were accompanied to the cars by a splendid band of music, as well as by many of their companions who remain behind." The whole (says the Herald), presented a very interesting and animated appearance.

GEN. GRATIOT. We learn from the St. Louis Republican, that the jury in the United States court, in the case of the United States vs. gen. Gratiot, retired on Friday morning, the 12th ult. under the charge of the court. When the court adjourned on Saturday the jury were still in session, being unable to agree. The court having adjourned over until Monday morning, at 10 o'clock, they were still detained, and had not agreed upon their verdict.

FROM FLORIDA. A letter, to the editor of the Savannah Georgian, dated Gary's Ferry, E. F. April 20, notices the arrival of general Macomb at that place, and says he is empowered to treat with the Indians, allowing them to remain in the territory within prescribed limits. The letter adds:—"As soon as they become aware of this, it is thought that the war will be at an end. They are rather tired of it.—They have been prevented from making their crops of corn, and their ammunition is nearly exhausted."

Gen. Macomb was expected to leave the Ferry shortly for Fort King, more in the interior of the Indian country. Five companies of the 2d dragoons were to leave ere long for the north; head quarters, Baltimore.—All of the 4th artillery, save one company, capt. Harvey Brown's, have left for the north.

MR. DE WITT, late Charge d'Affaires at Guatemala, who committed suicide on board a steam boat on the North River, was said to have been dismissed by the president, and that this, with the pecuniary embarrassments with which he was threatened, induced him to perpetrate the fatal act. The following is the Globe's account of Mr. De Witt's reception and treatment by the president.

"We were casually present when Mr. De Witt called to see the president. He was received with more than politeness—with an expression of solicitude for his strangely altered look. Mr. De Witt responded to the president's inquiries by stating, the exposure in the vessel had greatly affected him. In regard to the mission to Guatemala, the president informed Mr. De Witt, that it had been determined to dispense with it, as not now required by the interests of the government. He told him, however, that he might return and close the affairs of the mission himself. After expressing his anxiety for the success of the president in the public cause now in contest, and his desire to contribute to it, he took his leave in the most friendly manner. The pathos of the federal press, so far as it is made to turn on the president's unkindness, is sheer misrepresentation. Mr. De Witt was not superseded; the mission was discontinued.

LETTER FROM MR. HAYNE. From the Charleston Courier of the 27th ult. MESSRS. EDITORS:—Having withdrawn myself entirely from public life, and standing aloof from the party contests of the day, it is with great reluctance that I find myself constrained to notice the allusions, in your paper of yesterday, to my vote and remarks in the senate of the United States, on the nomination of Mr. Van Buren as minister to England.

Your correspondent quotes a part of my speech on that occasion, in which I stated, "that if I were a juror in the box, sworn to give a true verdict on the issue made up between Martin Van Buren and his country, I should feel myself constrained to give that verdict against him."

On this your remark "that it was party opposition that prompted this proceeding against Mr. Van Buren, and to that cause may we ascribe the ferocity of the warfare waged against him. To say the least, it was an unwise and impolitic warfare, and we know that it was against the judgment of one of its distinguished supporters, to whom our correspondent alludes. He predicted the result with unerring sagacity—he foresaw that it would be an element of Mr. V. B.'s success—and yet the exigencies of party arrayed him in debate against his deliberate judgment."

Without further explanation, it might seem that I had, on this occasion, expressed opinions that I did not entertain, and pursued a course which was contrary to my own conviction of what was right.

Now, the truth is, that the nomination of Mr. Van Buren, as minister to England, was seized upon as a suitable occasion for making up an issue between the two parties as to his merits as a member of general Jackson's administration. His whole conduct, and especially his instructions to Mr. Mr. Lane, in relation to the West India trade, came up for discussion, and for condemnation or approval, and the vote was regarded as a test question between the parties. In my "deliberate judgment" it was unwise and impolitic in the opposition to make up such an issue on the question then before the senate. I believed, as it has turned out, that the rejection of the nomination by the senate, would make Mr. Van Buren president. My political friends thought otherwise—the issue was made up between the parties, and Mr. Van Buren was put upon his trial. Compelled to take ground on one side or the other of the issue thus presented, I acted in conformity with my own conviction; "in giving my verdict against him." The grounds on which I then acted, are fully explained in the speech delivered by me on that occasion. My explanation is due to myself, and to the truth of the case, in the controversy now going on between the friends of Mr. Clay and Mr. Van Buren, I take no part—I am otherwise, and, I trust, better employed. I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT Y. HAYNE.

A CURIOUS AFFAIR. We learn from Mobile, that the schooner Andrew Jackson, capt. Meldrum, has arrived there. This vessel was one of those which were chartered by general Pedraza and his party, to carry troops and munitions of war to the neighborhood of Vera Cruz, in order to carry on warlike operations there. She arrived at her place of destination, landed the troops, and then set sail with her cargo of arms, provisions, &c. and touched at Mobile, where she now lies sequestered, until she can be disposed of according to law.

The Mexican consul here was duly informed of these facts by the collector at Mobile, and he is about to report them to the truth of the case in the affair, and other persons will go to Mobile, in order, if possible, to make the schooner return to the place to which she was bound.

It is reported that the captain was fearful of falling in with a Mexican cruiser in that latitude, and made for an American port in consequence.

The conduct of the captain is quite inexcusable, as he has compromised the fate of an expedition, by causing the loss of a principle part of its provisions, ammunition and arms, and he was moreover paid in full by general Pedraza the amount of his freight. The mere suspicion of a Mexican cruiser being on the coast was not sufficient to authorise him to create a real danger and to break his engagement. [New Orleans, April 16.]

CONVICTION OF THE BRAGANZA PIRATES. In the United States circuit court, sitting at New York, Cornelius Wilhelm and Joseph Van Bruggen were on Wednesday tried and convicted of piracy and murder on board the brig Braganza, bound from Philadelphia to Naples. Hans Knudseff, implicated in same crime, on motion of counsel was granted a separate trial.

The evidence against the accused was concluded at 9 o'clock in the evening. The principal facts elicited are as follows:

The brig Braganza, captain Armet T. Turley, sailed from Philadelphia in July, 1838, which port she had put into in distress, being originally from Porto Rico, bound to Genoa, with a cargo of sugar. On the 5th of August, the second mate, Robert Moir, was awakened by cries of murder, while sleeping in his state room. Moir rushed on deck, and there beheld the first mate, Vanderslice, lying on the deck, bleeding, with two wounds on his head. He observed immediately after the captain engaged in a struggle with some of the crew. Capt. Turley was armed with a cutlass, with which he wounded one of the mutineers, Van Bruggen. The captain was overpowered and cast into the sea. He regained the brig, and begged his life for the sake of his wife, but was remorselessly again thrown overboard. He, however, once more made the brig and gained the main chains, but was thrust off and drowned.

There were on board at this time, independent of the crew, Mr. Diehl, the owner of the vessel and his wife, and the wife of captain Turley. These were below when the horrible transaction with Mr. Vanderslice took place, as were also the captain and second-mate. There were four seamen on deck at this time. The three prisoners now on trial and another John Adams (since dead). A boy named James Davis hearing the scuffle with Mr. Vanderslice came on deck. He clearly gave his evidence, and particularly to the facts, that the captain was attacked immediately on gaining the deck, as was the second mate, Mr. Moir. The cook was in the fore-castle, and took no part in the mutiny and murder, having been fastened therein by the mutineers. The companion way was also fastened down to prevent assistance being afforded to the captain.

The boy James Davis was told to remain quiet, and he should not be hurt. Mr. Diehl begged to come on deck, but was answered, "we have killed three, and will kill you if you are not quiet." The murderers took possession of the vessel; Wilhelm acted as captain. Mr. Moor, Mr. Diehl, his wife, and Mrs. Turley, together with the cook, who sprang in the boat after them, were set adrift in the log boat. They wished to take the first mate, Mr. Vanderslice, with them, but were refused. They were fortunately picked up by a vessel that hove in sight and carried into Greenock. The first mate left with the mutineers, died of his wounds, and his body was thrown overboard.

The district attorney concluded his case against the prisoners at 11 o'clock last night. After an excellent charge the jury retired.

In five minutes after leaving the court, the jury returned, with a verdict of guilty against both prisoners. [Ball. American.]

OUTRAGE UPON AN AMERICAN SCHOONER. From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser. We have heard this morning of an outrage committed a few days since upon the schooner Stephen Girard, of Oswego, J. C. Hagan, master, while passing through the Welland canal, of which, as highly colored statements will undoubtedly go abroad, we hasten to give a correct version. While a schooner was passing one of the locks a parcel of drunken militia went aboard, cut the haliards, hauled down the American flag, indulging at the same time in abusive vituperative language, and endeavored to prevent the lock tender from passing the schooner through. In the alley the yawl boat was seized or destroyed.

The vessel was then permitted to proceed. As soon as the affair became known to the collector, the perpetrators of the outrage were arrested, and, as we have been informed, have been sent to Toronto, to await their trial. A boat with the haliards was sent after the schooner, but was unable to overtake her, the master refusing to stop, probably from an apprehension of farther violence. The outrage has been promptly disavowed by the Canadian authorities, and vigorous measures will be taken to prevent a repetition. We understand that full reparation will be made for all the damage done the vessel.

The perpetration of this outrage and those on the St. Lawrence, is probably owing to the fact that the militia who have been in service for some months are about to be discharged, and many of them find it much more pleasant to draw their pay and rations with nothing to do, than to go to work and earn their bread. If by firing upon an unarmed American vessel, or insulting the American flag, they can succeed in keeping the frontier in such a state of excitement as to create an apparent necessity for retaining them in service, it is all they want.

NORRIS' LOCOMOTIVE MANUFACTORY. The amount and value of the manufactures of this city and neighborhood are but little known even to our own citizens. We have taken means to procure the same, and shall present them in detail to our readers.

We have before us to-day a statement from Mr. William Norris, of the amount of work done, at his extensive establishment at Bush Hill—as follows:

Seventy-eight locomotives and tenders, &c. have been completed since the establishment of these works, of which

1	has been sent to Canada.
1	" " Cuba.
2	" " England.
2	" " Germany.

THE LATE FRAUD IN PHILADELPHIA. The North American Advocate says: "The developments in relation to the late fraudulent issues of certificates of stock and loan of the Norristown rail road, evince as they progress, a degree of depravity of moral feeling on the part of the delinquent, which have been rarely paralleled in the annals of villainy in our community. The hardihood and coolness which characterised some of them are astounding. An instance has come to our knowledge, in which, after the president knew that the suspicious of the directors had been aroused and he had been peremptorily forbidden by the board to do any official act until some investigation had been made, he carried false certificates of 400 shares of stock into the street, and obtained a loss of 4,000 dollars upon them. This occurred on the day prior to the disclosure. We have heard censure passed on the board, that such things should have gone on without their knowledge, and attributing carelessness to them. This censure we think unmerited. The books showed everything straight and correct; and it was only by the attentive vigilance of some of the directors, that any discovery was effected at all.

UGLY AFFAIR. The Philadelphia North American says:

"Considerable excitement has been manifested to-day, by the announcement that illegal certificates of stock and loan of the Norristown rail road company, have been issued to a large amount. The exact amount is unknown, but we understand it cannot be for less than $55,000. The president of the company is implicated in the matter, and has resigned. There are various rumors on the subject."

LOTTERIES. By an act of assembly, of 1834, lotteries, and the sale of lottery tickets, are prohibited in Virginia, after the first day of January, 1840.

ZERAH COLBURN. The Vermont papers notice the death of Zerah Colburn, at the age of thirty-five. The public mind was at one time much engaged with the anticipation, that Mr. Colburn, from his remarkable facility in calculations, would rival and eclipse the fame of all former mathematicians of celebrity. The process by which he arrived at his extraordinary results was peculiar to himself. He was sent to Europe that his talent might be cultivated and developed to the utmost. But the anticipations of his friends were never realized, although he excited great attention there. As he advanced in life, his extraordinary powers "faded into the light of common day," and he was in no wise distinguished for other than his literary attainments. He became a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, and was of late a professor in an eastern institution.

ADDRESS OF BUSTAMANTE, previous to marching against the Federalists. Fellow citizens: In separating myself temporarily from the supreme magistracy, in order to command the army in person, I comply with the duty imposed upon me by public exigency, and in obedience to the vote of the national congress, which has thought proper to grant me its permission.

I have felt grieved that it was not in my power, before this, to act on the resolution entertained by me ever since the commencement of the foreign war, to march to the field and partake of the toils of my valiant companions in arms. A conjunction of circumstances, which are well known, made me believe, contrary to my wishes, that my presence was necessary in front of the executive. Although peace with France is adjusted, grave motives exist for my taking the command of the troops of the nation, and occupying myself with important matters, in which are involved the well being and prosperity of the nation.

I do not seize the sword to prosecute a war of extermination, or to provoke resentments, which may prolong the evils of civil discord. The discussions, which we lament, should be terminated speedily, and my presence in the army will tend to establish peace, make the authority of the government respected, and restore the supremacy of the laws. If, contrary to my expectation, turbulent spirits persist in fanning the fire of discord, I will repress them with the severity of the laws; and those Mexicans shall only encounter, in my military operations, the most unequivocal proofs of my noble resentment, conciliatory justice, and the most earnest desires for the general felicity.

The sad prospective presented by our differences with France, is completely changed by the honorable transaction which is to establish our relations with that nation. The antipathies engendered by war, ought to be succeeded by a frank friendship that to power, which, if it sought to offend us, has made evident that it knows the spirit of conciliation and the justice and equity of the nineteenth century. Heaven grant that the peace may be as solid and durable as the interest and well being of both parties require.

I cannot conceal that the choice made of me for the supreme magistracy, although it has engraven on my soul a lively and eternal gratitude, was contrary to my inclinations, and made me feel all the disgust and bitterness inseparable from the exercise of the supreme executive power. In circumstances of unparalleled difficulties and opposing factions, and without those means which could insure abundance and peace, you could not but notice that the conduct I have observed as first magistrate was only for the purpose that the civil war would not assume that sanguinary character which would cause the ruin of the nation and its discredit abroad. Let us fix our attention on the events which have been successively presented, and give thanks to Providence that we are yet preserved for happier days and general reconciliation.

The citizen who has been called to take charge of the presidential chair during my absence, shall not lack means to attend to the wants of the administration, and to improve, progressively, the lot of the people. The noble services which he rendered to the nation at Vera Cruz, and the painful task to which he has consecrated himself, entitles him to our complete and cordial co-operation. I shall be the first to give an example of the respect due to the authority which he exercises, toiling in perfect unanimity with him, in order to expedite a termination to those evils which have placed the national interests in such jeopardy. The good feeling of our people, their mild and generous character, and the painful experience of the past, ought to dictate a new course—having union and tolerance in our councils, as the surest guarantee of future prosperity.

Animated by this confidence, I expect from every one of you those sacrifices which the nation has a right to exact, when it is bowed down by civil discord, and cries energetically for the extinction of factions, calumnies and mudsling in all acts, and with a general unanimity hasten those means for aggrandizing the republic, and acquiring the respect and benevolence of civilized people.

I march where duty calls me; and be assured, Mexicans, that at the head of the army, with the olive or the sword in my hand, my object shall be to serve you nobly, and to make my deeds correspond to what I announced to you—to bring about internal peace by those means which prudence shall exact, or the energies of the laws demand.

ANASTASIO BUSTAMANTE.

MR. PAPINEAU. The London and Paris papers, received by the Great Western, announce the arrival of Mr. Papineau, in the latter city. The Paris correspondent of the New York American gives the following notice of his reception and employment.

"Papineau has been favorably received in Paris by all the political parties. It is not true that he experienced, at Havre, any obstacle to his coming thither. After the feasting of Louis Napoleon in England, and the Court party in France may be expected for investing even a Papineau with some consequence. As the emancipation of the Canadas is deemed certain, sooner or later, the general French policy would seem to dictate that the reformer who can be considered as the representative of the French Canadian population, should be respectfully and kindly distinguished. He is understood to be already engaged in writing for the press, a critical reply to Lord Durham's report on Canadian affairs. Such information and views as he must be able to present, if skillfully exhibited, in a volume of moderate size, would probably circulate and make an impression, not merely in France, but over a large part of the European continent."

ANTICIPITY OF NEWSPAPERS. Mr. Fitzstrathern, on occasion of a toast in complement to "the press," at a dinner lately given by the West London Gardeners' association, said:

That the press was the fourth estate in parliament, and nothing could be accomplished without it.—Newspaper literature in particular had much power, and governed the world through the opinions of mankind. The editors thereof were commonly men of talent, with strong nerves, a quick discernment, a liberal mind, and a decision of character seldom to be shaken. Their duties and responsibility were incalculably great, and they had materially assisted in disseminating useful knowledge in an expeditious, cheap form. Like members of the army and navy, politicians and lawyers, some of them ought to be made peers as a reward for their extraordinary abilities. Writing news of the day, and afterwards circulating it for intelligence to a community, was more ancient than was generally supposed. It commenced by MS. in Egypt, was practiced in Greece and Rome; and, if an old author was to be relied on, Julius Cæsar, who visited London nearly 1,900 years ago, wrote periodical news of his successes abroad, and the characters and customs of the people he subdued, for the information of the warlike conquerors of the world at home, which was copied by numerous scribes, the only printers of that time, for circulation; some of which news-sticks or papers, though long since torn up and destroyed, referred to our own savage illiterate ancestors, and were written in Alban and Gaul. In these days, such eminent men as Sir Samuel Romilly, Sir John Campbell, Sergeant Spankle, and others, had been reporters of the press.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The packet ship Silvie de Grasse, capt. Weiderholt, arrived at New York on Monday from Havre, via Plymouth, England. Captain W. sailed from Havre on the 19th of March and from Plymouth on the 25th. The editors of the Commercial Advertiser are indebted to captain Weiderholt for the London Chronicle of March 21th and Plymouth papers of 25th.

H. M. ship Winchester, of 52 guns, is ordered to be commissioned at Chatham for the flag of vice admiral Sir Thomas Harvey. Captain John Parker is to be his captain.

The lords of the admiralty have ordered five new engines for war steam ships, one of which, to be named the Cyclops, is to be of 1,500 tons burthen and carry 26 guns—the largest armament yet placed on board a steam frigate, in any navy.

The following paragraph is the conclusion of an article on the late boundary troubles, in the London Weekly Chronicle of March 24. It affords an indication of the masses of the "war bill," as it has been called, would not be regarded as a very portentous event in England.

The congress, however, was expected not to separate, (the session being upon the point of ending) without providing for the opposite alternative, by placing large resources at the disposal of the president, to be used in the event of any attempt on the part of Great Britain, to take military possession of the territory in dispute. We see no reason to fear this, as Sir John Harvey, in the midst of great provocations, on the part of gov. Fairfield, has evinced a temper, and a moderation, which will ensure his ready acquiescence in the arrangement sanctioned by Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Fox.

Captain Harvey and the officers of the Malabar have subscribed for a silver tea and coffee service, to be presented to Mr. Joseph Wightman, of Three Rivers, Nova Scotia, in acknowledgement of the important service rendered by him to the Malabar, when she struck on the rock of Cape Bear, Prince Edward Island, on the 19th of October. Mr. Wightman went off to the ship in a small open boat, and piloted her to a place of safety.

LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The New York papers of Tuesday contain full extracts from the English papers received by the George Washington, from which we select the following items, furnished for the most part, by the Commercial Advertiser:

Parliamentary proceedings.

March 22. In the house of lords the marquis of Normandy desired to be excused from serving on the committee raised the night before on the state of Ireland, inasmuch as the vote by which it was ordered was to some extent a vote of censure on his government in Ireland. Lord Normandy then proceeded to comment on some expressions used the night before by lord Brougham, convicting his lordship of inconsistency, by comparison of those expressions with other expressions uttered by him in November, 1837, and concluding with a remark that, painful as it was to sever friendships of twenty years' standing, he must now forego the friendship of lord Brougham, because that noble lord had not acted towards him with sincerity.

Lord Brougham reciprocated lord Normandy's regret, but vindicated his conduct with characteristic ingenuity.

Lord John Russell gave notice that in the course of the first week after the recess he should ask the opinion of the house of commons upon the government of Ireland, (in consequence of the vote in the other house on the preceding night), and that if the opinion of the house should be against the ministers, they would resign.

Mr. O'Connell inquired of lord Palmerston if any steps had been taken to end the war between Peru and Chili. Lord Palmerston answered that an offer of mediation had been made and accepted by the Peru-Bolivian confederation, but rejected by Chili. Negotiations, however, were still in progress.

Lord Howick moved the army estimates. He entered into full explanations, and stated that the increase, as compared with 1838, would be about 5,600 rank and file, and, as compared with 1837, about 9,400. He said:

It would be necessary hereafter to propose a supplementary estimate in order to provide for the expenses incurred in keeping up a very considerable irregular force in Canada (hear, hear), of militia and volunteers, which it had been found necessary to raise in that country. What the estimate of that augmentation of force was he could not say, as it had not yet been received. Beyond these additions, he was not at that moment aware that any further increase of the army was likely to be required; but of course he need not tell the right honorable gentleman that in making that statement he did so with reference only to the present time, and to present circumstances, as it was impossible for any government or any secretary at war to say that it might not be necessary in the course, perhaps, of a short time to make a further augmentation. (Hear, hear.) He could only say that he was not aware of the existence of any circumstance creating such a necessity, and that, should such necessity hereafter arise, it would be to him a matter of great surprise and of deep concern.

The amount of the estimates for which lord Howick moved was £3,476,609, for the year ending April 1, 1840.

Sir Henry Hardinge objected that the estimates were altogether too small, and went into a long exposition of the political condition of the world, to show the necessity of keeping up a large force every where.

In the course of his reply, lord Howick said:

But here a very serious question arose out of the remarks of the right honorable gentleman. Were we to assume that we were so near a quarrel with the United States of North America as to think it necessary at once to put our establishments in their vicinity upon a war footing? (Hear, hear.) If that was the opinion of the right honorable officer, he could only say that opinion was very different from that which the (viscount Howick) entertained; (hear, hear); and he believed that if one thing, more than another, could tend directly to that result, it would be to show the Americans that we felt a jealousy of them, and that we took these steps of increasing our establishments without adequate cause. (Hear, hear.) He believed that war would prove the greatest calamity to both countries that could possibly befall them, (hear, hear), and therefore that we were bound to avoid, by every means in our power, every thing which could, by possibility, lead to hostilities. With respect to the state of Maine, the right honorable gentleman must remember that if the existing dispute goes on, it must be with the general government of the United States, (hear, hear), because the federal government must be responsible for the constituent states. (Hear.) If a war became necessary, we must therefore make corresponding efforts; and whenever that emergency might arrive, he believed this country would not be wanting to itself in the preparations of vigorous measures; but he thought it would be to adopt a highly impolitic and dangerous course, if we were now to act as if that emergency had already occurred. (Hear, hear).

Mr. C. Buller joined Sir H. Hardinge in censuring the government for not keeping up a sufficient force. Alluding to the boundary dispute, he said that Sir John Harvey had less than 500 regulars at his command, and added:

To oppose to that force the state of Maine had been regularly increasing its military force. He (Mr. Buller) had been told by an experienced military officer that the militia of Maine was totally unlike the other American militia; that they were well kept up; for the Maine people felt very strongly a wish to fight for this territory, and that really they would not be contemptible adversaries of regular troops to fight man to man. Was the noble lord aware that there were more than 42,000 of this militia so trained? He had talked of the militia of New Brunswick. They were, he (Mr. Buller) believed, a very gallant body, but they did not amount to more than 15,000, and they had only this number to oppose to 42,000 men. The noble lord had said that Sir John Colborne would send troops over there; he would have to do so by balloon, or when he had got a railway there, for he, Mr. Buller, did not know any other way of conveying them. (A laugh.) But what was to become of Upper and Lower Canada, if these troops were sent? Did they suppose that the instant these troops were sent off, or that they could get away, the sympathisers would not rise?

He (Mr. Buller) was not afraid of the United States, gallant as they were; he believed the gallantry of England need not to be feared in a just cause. But there was no one with the feelings of humanity who could contemplate the horrors of such a war—not only a war between men of similar social relations, but a war between industry and commerce. He really believed it would entail on both countries consequences fearful to humanity; it would seriously endanger and injure the social organization of both countries. But with these feelings of horror of war, ought their army arrangements to have been in such a state at this time, that at that moment they might be from the Liverpool despatch on Sunday, the account of some collision, contrary to the will of both governments? He would venture to say that never was there a time when the people of the United States were more friendly to us; never was there a time in which the great mass of the people felt more the advantages of peace and security, or a greater horror at the idea of war. But nations were not guided by their passions; and the passions of a few intemperate men might bring on a collision, the consequences of which no man could tell. No people in the world were more sensitive of national honor than the Americans; and if a few lives should be lost amongst the lumberers on the borders of their territory no one could tell what the consequences would be.

The governor of New Brunswick to whom had been entrusted 500 regulars, set up a claim never admitted by the American government. He had set up a claim, it seemed, to settle the whole question; that until it was settled by negotiation, Great Britain should have jurisdiction over the whole territory. It appeared that the orders of this lieutenant governor were to enforce this claim with his 350 to 500 men, and it appeared that the governor of Maine said he would not submit to it; that he would send militia there. The governor of New Brunswick said he was ordered to repel force by force. The governor of Maine said he did not fear that; that the troops of Maine would do their duty. By the arrangements of Mr. Fox this threatening aspect of affairs had been in some degree averted, and he had withdrawn the pretences of the governor of New Brunswick. But what a humiliating position was that which in the last hour restricted a claim set up over the disputed territory. (Hear.) One thing would stop these proceedings, and that was, he believed, that the only road up to this disputed territory by the Aroostook river was impassable, and the roads on the New Brunswick side were still worse, and this would prevent the forces passing by each other unless Sir John Colborne could pass by balloons with his troops.

The present emergency has arisen on account of a dispute having been left open on 1815. The noble lord might say that was not his fault; that he did not make the treaty of 1783; that he had nothing to do with the treaty of 1815; but the noble lord ought to have been aware that there had been circumstances attending this boundary question, which had made the Americans much to be regretted on having ever made it. It was important that this should be known. In the first place, the province of Maine had received a great increase of population. America had pressed on the old means of subsistence, and the population had moved off into the next vacant country, and had moved towards this disputed territory. It was a very singular feature in the United States, that all of a sudden the supply of pine timber had failed all over the United States; from the way in which they had wasted the timber they had wasted the whole. The whole of this disputed territory, which had been represented as of no value at all, was filled with the finest and most abundant quantity of this fine timber which had risen immensely in value. Many had gone there to obtain it, they saw that the land was very fine, and they wanted to go and settle there, and hence arose the increased desire of Maine to possession of this country.

In such a state of things as this, it was perfectly obvious that collision must happen. Numbers of men could not live together without law, and they had recourse to the next authorities; and when one party had got a decision of a British magistrate, the other party called them over to the next American station, about 240 miles, and got an opposite decision, so that constant squabbles were kept up by this mode of governing the district. It must be obvious to any man of common sense that that state of things could not last long between the subjects of two high-spirited nations; they must come to blows at last, and the government must take up the quarrel. But was this the only disputed territory? The whole frontier, for 1,500 miles was exposed to the part on which we joined America on the east, and in that part which we territory of Maine and Massachusetts was in dispute; a territory equal to this country. He had forgot one reason which made the people of Maine so bent on having this country. It was this territory which furnished the whole revenues of the United States, or almost the whole. The greatest revenue was derived from the sale of lands. The state of Massachusetts thought it was their property which we were keeping from them, and, right or wrong, they were very intent on keeping possession of what they thought was their property.

Upper Canada came into dispute with New Hampshire next; a great portion of land there was disputed between us. That was left as an open question. That was very good policy on the part of America. The Americans, however, had no idea of this nonsense of open questions, (hear); and what had the New Hampshire militia done? They had taken on every British subject who had got property there, and kicked them out of the territory, and Englishmen were to be seen wandering about utterly dispossessed of their lands. The states of Vermont and New York had a quarrel with us about the parallel of latitude. He did not know whether that quarrel was settled or not. The only thing he could state was a matter of fact, that the quarrel, as it was, had left every title of land along that strip of country under dispute. The next dispute was about the islands on Lake Superior; but he trusted that dispute would not arise till four or five years hence, when the province of Wisconsin was inhabited. Then another very important question arose between us and the United States, which would be very easily settled now, but might not hereafter—that was the dispute about the Oregon territory. This was a matter in which the Americans had very great interest, and in which they complained very much of our encroaching upon them.

Now, he would ask, was it prudent to allow these disputes to exist so long? He said that it was the duty of that house to take every measure to compel her majesty's ministers to settle these disputes, which had remained so long unsettled, and the inconvenience of which they had so long experienced, that those horrors of war the noble lord had described, might be avoided. These disputes ought to be settled, because, by leaving them open, it was in every way bringing on quarrels. He wished, before he sat down, to say one thing, which he said with great pain, because he knew the kind of awkwardness it was for a man, in any case when his own country was in contention with foreigners in such a way that war was likely to be the consequence, to state these things. It was very dangerous and very imprudent for the citizen of one country to state his opinion of the other country; nor did he mean to do so entirely. He believed very few gentlemen of that house had really attended to the question of the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick and Canada—such was the way in which they managed their foreign business. Circumstances had induced him to attend to it, and he would state that he had never met one Englishman, who had read the account, who did not agree with him (Mr. C. Buller) in saying, that whatever might be the claim of the Americans, the claim set up by the British government was the most superstitious and absurd that ever was heard of in British diplomacy.

(hear) but he must say, taking the claim advanced by us in our negotiation, he could not conceive a rightful cause so much prejudiced by unjust negotiations as our cause had been. What he wanted to call the attention of the house to was, that this was a very general feeling throughout the United States. The people of that country had very naturally attended to the question; they had a very strong notion about it; he (Mr. Buller) did not say whether they were right or wrong; all he said was, they felt very strongly on the subject. The feeling was very high in the United States, and it was a matter that would not admit of postponement any longer. If we intended to adhere to our pretensions advanced, we ought to be prepared for war and give up the idea of peace. But if we were to shrink from the horrors of war, it was our duty to see instantly, and without delay, that negotiations were established on a stable and fair basis, which might secure, not only our rights but the rights of the United States. That security alone was the only secure foundation of a permanent peace between the two nations. (Hear).

Lord Palmerston controverted the positions of Mr. Buller—vindicated the pretensions of Great Britain to the disputed territory—but declared in the strongest terms that there was no probability of a war with the United States.

After a protracted debate the vote was agreed to. March 25. Monday—In the house of lords viscount Melbourne gave notice of a motion to adjourn until the 11th of April.

March 26. In the house of lords a number of petitions were presented, against the appointment of Lord Ebrington to the government of Ireland.

Lord Brougham renewed his motion for returns respecting the Canadian prisoners—which were ordered. His lordship said:

He did not wish to press the subject on their lordships, or to raise any discussion, farther than earnestly to call the attention of government to the situation of those prisoners. In consequence of what had passed last night, an individual had called on him and stated how deplorably those prisoners were situated. Some of them were men who had been a respectable situation in society, and were well educated; others of them had been all the way in the mercantile sphere of life; but they were all of them, though slight offenders, thrust into convict ships, amongst thieves, swindlers and bad characters of every description. He did hope that this matter would be seriously considered, and that a proper distinction and classification would be made. The noble and learned lord said he should take that opportunity to express a fervent and earnest hope that every exertion would be made by her majesty's government to settle our differences with the United States in an amicable manner, and to avert that most deplorable and greatest of evils, war.

He was the last man in that house to counsel any course to the government, and he was sure if he did that their lordships would not listen to it, that was calculated in any way to lower the honor or character of this country; for he felt how infinitely important it was that we should maintain the great name, and that warlike character all over the world, which, thanks to our great naval and military heroes, we had achieved in every quarter of the globe. Through them we had been placed in the proud, commanding and unquestioned station which we had long enjoyed; and holding which, it made it proper, prudent and safe for us, without any possibility of reproach, without having our honor in the smallest degree soiled, or tarnished, or reflected on, to lower as much as possible our demands, in order that we might secure, he repeated, without blemish to our honor, the inestimable blessing of peace. It was, in his opinion, the ground and foundation on which her majesty's government ought to take their stand. He had the consolation of believing, of being convinced that we were undeniably, clearly and manifestly in the wrong; and when a man or a nation was in the wrong, to acknowledge error did not make the case of either worse.

The marquis of Normanby said the cases referred to by the noble and learned lord should be inquired into. He believed, however, that every thing had been regularly done. No doubt could exist as to the legality of the trials and sentences of these people. The returns required should be laid before the house.

In the house of commons there was no quorum. Both houses adjourned on the 27th—the house of lords to April 11th, and the house of commons to the 28th.

Lord John Russell gave notice, previous to the adjournment, that the measure for the future government of Canada would be brought forward on the 22d April.

It was reported in London that a fight had taken place between the 49th and 82d regiments, stationed at Gibraltar, in which lieutenant Campbell of the 46th was killed.

[The London Globe says there is not a word of truth in this rumor. "Blaze of the United States had been a small crew of soldiers, but nothing calling for more than the application of ordinary discipline.]

FRANCE. At the date of our last advices from Paris, March 25, the ministerial crisis still continued. The king issued an ordinance, on the 24th, postponing the meeting of the chambers from the 26th of March to the 4th of April.

On the 23d marshal Soult having failed in his effort to construct a cabinet without M. Thiers, waited on the king to throw up his mission. The Duc de Broglie was then sent for by the king, but again declined entering into any cabinet. It was reported that after this the king got for M. Thiers, and that the result of their interview was an agreement.

The trial of Marsand and Raymond, of the ship Alexandre, on the charge of murdering the captain and several others, and feloniously taking the vessel to the United States, had commenced at Brest, and had been going on two days when the last accounts reached Paris. Marsand had made a full confession, alleging, however, that he took no part in the murder, and that Raymond was the instigator and projector of the crime.

IMPORTANT FROM VERA CRUZ.

From the New Orleans Bulletin, April 22. The arrival at Vera Cruz of the United States brig Consort, has brought advices from Vera Cruz as late as the 10th inst. the day of her sailing. By letters received by her, we learn that a fire broke out in the custom house at Vera Cruz on the 6th instant, by which merchandize valued at a million of dollars was destroyed. Among the property consumed, was one thousand packages of goods belonging chiefly to German and English merchants. Admiral Baudin sent a detachment of sailors to the succor of the inhabitants, and it was chiefly by the aid thus furnished that the flames were at last extinguished.

The castle of San Juan de Ulloa was delivered up by the French to the Mexican authorities on the 9th inst. An express reached Vera Cruz on the 8th inst. bringing intelligence that general Mexico, with 1000 men, was marching on the city on his way from Tuspan, and had reached within the distance of fifteen miles. Great consternation prevailed among the inhabitants, who supposed that the garrison would join the invaders, and their city thus fall into the possession of an enemy. In the following letter, addressed to the collector of this port very interesting particulars are stated.

Consulate of the U. S. of America,

Vera Cruz, 8th April, 1839.

Sir: I have the honor to communicate the gratifying intelligence, that the castle of "San Juan de Ulloa" at this place, and which for some months has been in possession of the French, was yesterday restored to the Mexicans.

The troops of vice admiral Baudin, commanding the naval force of the French for the Gulf of Mexico, evacuated this fortress at an early hour yesterday morning, when the government troops under command of general Herrero, resumed possession, under a display of the national flag, and the discharge of artillery, and in which the public and private armed vessels of all nations in port, (save the French) united in salutes of gratification.

The French commander has withdrawn his frigate the Neptune, to a short distance without the harbor, and the remainder of the French force are at anchor. The rest of his naval force is, for the most part, still at Sacrificios. It is understood that he intends quitting the coast in the course of a few days, and also that her Britannic majesty's force is likewise soon to depart for the north.

An express, it is said, arrived here this morning from the capital by which it is stated that general Mexico, at the head of a force of 1000 men, more or less, left Tuspan on the 2d instant, with the intention of making a descent upon this town, and is now hourly expected to show himself.

Should the report prove true, and he have courage enough to attack the town, we have no hesitation in saying, that he will meet with a warm reception. The troops so far as I have seen, appear in good condition, and commanded by gallant and experienced officers, and who, I have the best reason to believe, will make good their defence, and faithfully discharge their duty to themselves and country.

Among the many calamities that seem of late to have befallen this city, I have to notice this time, the conflagration of the custom house, a fine and spacious building, with all its contents. It took fire by some unknown cause in the course of last night, and at daylight was found to be almost wholly in flames, and had continued to burn throughout the greater part of this day.

The loss to the mercantile community, the foreign merchants principally, is heavy, and cannot be estimated at less than half a million of dollars, and the building itself is valued at nearly the same. The French, English and Germans, having merchandise there, are said to be the heaviest losers. I am not aware that any citizen of the United States has suffered seriously by the disaster.

The U. S. brig Consort, William H. Gardner, lieutenant, by which I forward this, carries away about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, ($250,000) for account of our friends at your city, and at New York, and with which I hope he may arrive in safety. I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

M. BURROUGH.

James W. Bredlove, esq.,
collector of the customs, New Orleans.

STILL LATER FROM VERA CRUZ.

The captain of the barque Tinamora, who left Vera Cruz on the 13th instant, reports that the French fleet (including admiral Baudin's ship), excepting five vessels, were to sail from Vera Cruz on the same day, touching at Tampico and Havana. The English squadron still remained watching the movements of general Mexia's troops who were reported about fifteen leagues north of that port—the British commodore's ship Madagascar having taken on board the specie and valuables of British subjects and foreigners of any nation who desired that their property should be thus protected, in case the federal party should land and attack the city.

The loss by the destruction of the custom house, had been ascertained to be $1,500,000, which would principally fall upon French and German merchants.

A conducta from the interior had arrived on the 12th with $3,000,000—its destination unknown.

VIRGINIA BANKS.

An act concerning the banks of the commonwealth of Virginia, passed April 14, 1839.

By it the banks are relieved from the penalties and forfeitures incurred by their failure to pay specie, and their charters are restored.

It provides that if the bank of Virginia, the Farmers' bank, and the Valley bank accept the provisions of the act increasing the banking capital of 1837, as modified by it, the bank shall discount to any amount exceeding twice their capital.

The benefits of this act and the act of 1837, above named, are denied to the bank of Virginia and the Farmers' bank, if they fail to accept the provisions of those acts within sixty days after the passage of this act, and the same benefits are denied to the Valley bank, unless it accept those provisions within four months from the passage of this act.

The bank accepted as above, is not required to change the number of, or mode of appointing its directors.

The bank of Virginia is authorised to increase its capital to $600,000. The Farmers' bank to increase its capital $750,000, (being an increase in each, in addition to that authorised by the act of 1837). The branches to be established and the increase to be distributed according to the act of 1837, and the remainder to be retained in Richmond.

The bank of Virginia is required to increase the capital of its branch at Buchanan $100,000 out of the $600,000.

The 15th section of the act of 1837 is repealed. The treasurer is required after the first of June, 1842, (if the banks accept) to deposit one-third of the public moneys in the bank of Virginia, and one-third in the Farmers' bank, and one-third in the branch of the Exchange bank in Richmond; and if only one accepts, then one-half in the bank so accepting and the other half in the Exchange bank, and if neither accepts, then the whole in the Exchange bank.

When the Virginia bank, the Farmers' bank and the Valley bank, or either of them, accept according to the condition of this act, the treasurer is required to subscribe in the name of the commonwealth for the stock in each or either of them authorised so to be subscribed by the act of 25th March, 1837; and to pay for such subscriptions out of the money heretofore loaned the said banks by the state.

The bank of the Valley is authorised to increase its capital $150,000; is required to establish the branches heretofore authorised, and to increase the capital of its branch at Warrenton (authorised by the act of 1837, with a capital of 135,000) $15,000.

If the bank of Virginia shall accept, or in case it refuse, if the Farmers' shall accept, the terms of the act above named and establish the branch at Portsmouth with a capital of $175,000 by the 1st of July next, the bank so establishing such branch shall not be required to furnish the other sum of $175,000 until the first of July 1840.

The Exchange bank is authorised to increase its capital $200,000, on condition that the same be made by individual subscription; and that the bank establish a branch at Falmouth, in Stafford county, with that capital, by the 1st day of July, 1840, or as soon as $100,000 shall have been subscribed and paid for.

The banks accepting are required to class all applications for discounts into three classes thus: 1st, notes of $1,000 and under; 2d, notes of $1,000 and not exceeding $10,000; 3d, notes of $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000. A list of such applications, the names of the parties thereto, and amounts with the decisions thereon, is required to be kept. The bank of Kanawha is also subject to these provisions, and further, is relieved from the requirements of the classification on the provisions in its act of incorporation.

Limit of indebtedness. No individual or firm is allowed to be indebted to any one bank, as drawer or acceptor, a greater amount than $50,000.

Ten and five dollars prohibition. All laws which prohibit the issue and circulation of notes under $5, are declared in force, and applicable to notes under $10, but the circulation of notes under $10 by all others except the banks which issued them is authorised.

If the Farmers' bank and the Virginia bank refuse to accept the acts before mentioned, and the Merchants' and Planters' bank of Lynchburg shall go into operation, the law declares that it shall be subject to this act and that of 1837.

REQUISITIONS UPON GOVERNORS.

From the Albany Argus.

A good deal of misapprehension seems to prevail on the subject of the power of the executive to make requisitions upon governors of other states. As it is a matter of considerable importance, we have obtained a copy of a correspondence between governor Seward and the secretary of state, in which this question is briefly discussed. It commends itself to general attention.

Albany, March 8, 1839.

H. R. Curtis, district attorney of Orleans co.:

DEAR SIR: The complaints against Nathan Aldrich and John Aldrich, are not deemed of such a nature as to justify me in granting a requisition upon the governor of Illinois. The reasons will be found in the annexed correspondence between the secretary of state and myself. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

[Signed] WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Albany, March 5, 1839.

The secretary of state.

DEAR SIR: In consequence of the illness of the attorney general, I am under the necessity of asking your advice upon the within application for a requisition upon the governor of Illinois for the delivery of John Aldrich and Nathan Aldrich, who are indicted for certain frauds. While the power to demand fugitives from justice, embraces every grade of crime, you are aware that it is to be exercised with a sound discretion. It has not, as far as I am informed, been exercised in any case of mere fraud. I do not feel at liberty to extend or cheapen it. Pray give me your opinion upon the present case. Yours, very respectfully,

[Signed] WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Secretary's office, March 6, 1839.

His excellency Gov. Seward.

SIR: Pursuant to the request in your letter of the 5th instant, I have examined the papers in support of the application for a requisition upon the governor of Illinois, for the delivery of John Aldrich and Nathan Aldrich. I have very great doubts whether the indictments charge any offence, as they appear to me defective in some essential averments; and in reference to the nature of the offence for which it was intended to indict the Aldrichs, it seems to me that it is not of such a character as to justify the imposition of your excellency in the manner described in the constitutional provision under which requisitions may be made by the governor of one state upon the governor of another, was a substitute for the principle recognised by the law of nations, by which one sovereign is bound to deliver to another, fugitives who have committed certain offences. These offences are of the deepest grade of criminality, and robbers, murderers and incendiaries are those enumerated, as proper to be surrendered. Following the analogy thus suggested, the provision in our constitution it would seem should be construed to embrace similar cases only, except perhaps those offences which arise from an abuse of the same constitutional provision—that provision must be guarded with the utmost care or it will become intolerable.

I do not think the circumstances of the case before me are of such grave import, or the offence itself of such high grade, as to justify the requisition desired. The power given by the constitution ought not to be cheapened, nor applied to trifling offences, nor indeed to any that was not originally contemplated. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

[Signed] J. C. SPENCER.

Secretary of state.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CASE.

From the United States Gazette.

A gentleman of the bar, in whose prudence we have great confidence, has, at our request, supplied us with a notice of the case which closed yesterday. It will be seen that the verdict of the jury is for the relators, or new school. The counsel for the respondents (or old school) moved for a new trial.

IN THE SUPREME COURT.

Before hon. Molton C. Rogers and a special jury. Commonwealth.—At the suggestion of James Tod, John R. Neff, F. A. Raybold, George W. McClelland, William Darling and Thomas Fleming, Ashbel Green, Thomas Bradford, Solomon Allen, Cornelius C. Cuyler, and William Latta, not summoned.

Information in the nature of quo warranto, and ordered by the supreme court to a jury to try questions of fact to inform the conscience of the court.

The proceeding in this interesting case is founded upon the statutory power given to the supreme court, declaratory of the common law, by act of assembly of Pennsylvania, passed 14th of June, 1836, entitled "an act relating to writs of quo warranto and mandamus." That act provides that the writ of quo warranto may issue in a designated description of cases, among which is the present, viz: "In case any question shall arise concerning the exercise of any office in any corporation created by authority of law," &c. and "in case any association or number of persons shall exercise any of the franchises or privileges of a corporation within the respective county without lawful authority."

On the 29th of May, 1838, on relation of the complainants, it was suggested to the supreme court that the defendants were since the 24th of May, 1838, exercising and did still exercise the franchises and privileges of corporators without lawful authority, viz: the franchises and privileges of trustees of a certain corporation called and known by the name of "trustees of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States of America;" that on said 24th of May, 1838, the relators were duly elected trustees of said corporation agreeably to the provisions of the act of assembly of the 28th of March, 1799, incorporating said body; but notwithstanding said election the defendants still usurped said office, and praying for process of law, &c. On the 31st of July, 1838, the defendants put in separate answers: that of Ashbel Green asserted that he was one of the original trustees and had ever since acted as such; and denying the election of the relators, and claiming that his right as trustee had never been vacated, determined or abridged; and that of Thomas Bradford, alleging that on the 27th of May, 1829, he was duly elected by the general assembly a trustee, and had ever since acted as such; also denying the election of the relators and asserting his present right.

On the 10th of October, 1838, the relator replied to the plea of Ashbel Green, that true it was he was originally a trustee of the general assembly, but that by the act of incorporation, the corporate body had power to change one-third of the whole body of 15 trustees, as often as they should hold their sessions, and that in exercise of such authority, said body did on the 17th of May, 1838, at an assembly held in this city, duly elect James Tod in place of the said Ashbel Green, and the said James Tod accepted said office, and thereby the said general assembly avowed, disfranchised and discharged the said Ashbel Green, &c. and thus replied to the plea of Thomas Bradford, in like form alleged that George W. McClelland was duly elected in his place, &c. In like form, the relator asserted that Thomas Fleming was elected in lieu of Cornelius C. Cuyler, and William Darling in lieu of Solomon Allen. William Latta was not summoned, and his right, opposed to that of F. A. Raybold, is only incidentally in question. In the pleadings the several parties appealed to the country, viz: a jury trial, and the issue of fact became ripe for a trial on the 7th of November, 1838.

Accordingly, a jury was empanelled on the 2d Monday of March, 1839, and proceeded to enquire of the matters of fact contained in the pleadings. The relators were represented on the trial by Josiah Randall, W. M. Meredith and George Wood, esqrs.—the defendants by F. W. Hubbell, J. R. Ingersoll, John Sergeant, and W. C. Preston, esqrs.

The fact of the cause covered much ground, and were extracted from the course and proceedings of the general assembly during a long period of years, but the most striking, interesting and important points of consideration were the excision of May, 1837, and the secession of May, 1838.

It seems that the organization of the Presbyterian church, as to government, is this:—First, the session composed of pastor and elders, who enjoy a life tenure; next, in rank the presbytery, consisting of all pastors and one elder from each session, within a particular district; next, still higher, the synod composed of a number of presbyteries, not less than three within a prescribed district, in which, as in the Presbytery, the pastors and one elder from each session hold seats; and last, the higher tribunal, is the general assembly, composed of pastors, and delegated elders from all the presbyteries.

In 1803 the presbyteries of Oneida, Albany and Columbia, N. Y. composed the synod of Albany. In 1812, this synod having increased in numbers, was divided into two synods, called Albany and Geneva. In 1821 the synod of Geneva was parted, and its presbyteries of Niagara, Genesee, Rochester and Ontario were formed into the synod of Genesee. In 1827, the synod of Pittsburg was divided, and its Ohio presbyteries of Grand river, Portage and Heron was constituted the synod of the Western Reserve. In 1829, the Albany synod again yielded to a division, and its western presbyteries of Ogdensburg, Waterloo, Oswego, Oneida and Otego became the synod of Utica. The four important synods so much in question, thus created, were the synods of the Western Reserve, Geneva, Genesee and Utica.

The Presbyterian church, as in almost all other religious communities, encountered internal disputes on doctrine, and ranged themselves into parties, called the new and old school; this has been until recently a division of opinion, not feeling, and kindly conducted on both sides. The general assembly, at various times, had a majority of either party. From 1831 to 1835, inclusive, the old school prevailed. In 1836 the new school was in the majority. In 1837 the old school party had a superiority of numbers, and in the session of the general assembly of that year a resolution calling the excinding measure was passed. This vote cut off from the church the four synods of the Western Reserve, Geneva, Genesee and Utica. These synods contain 599 churches, and not quite so many pastors; their representatives were of the new school party. The ground of this excision was connected with the opinions or faith of those synods, and the question of unconstitutionality of the plan of union of 1801 between the general assembly and the church of Connecticut.

In May, 1838, the annual session of the general assembly commenced, and, as might be expected, the process of excision caused great difficulties. Delegates from the excinded synods presented their credentials to the usual officers, the clerks, who declined to enrol their names. The moderator of the past session, Dr. Elliott, took his seat in the assembly, he held in the new school Presbyterian church, according to the usual form. Dr. Patton, of New York, offered resolutions; the moderator declared them out of order; he appealed, and the moderator made the same decision as to his appeal. Dr. Elliott, after the report clerks, inquired if any delegates were present whose names had been omitted. Dr. Mason, of N. Y. then presented the commissions from the excinded districts, and was decided by the chair to be out of order. He appealed, and that was also declared to be irregular. The rev. Mr. Cleveland, of Michigan, then moved that Dr. Eaman, of N. Y. be appointed moderator pro tem. and put the question to the assembly. The ayes were general, there being but few negatives; but whether the voting was universal was disputed. At this time great confusion occurred—much noise—and the evidence was contradictory upon the opportunity and the generality of voting, and the conduct of the respective parties. The moderator then closed. Dr. Beman, proceeded to organize in the usual manner, and the body of new school delegates, including the excinded portions, adjourned to the First Presbyterian church, and, among other business, elected the six gentlemen named as relators to the office of trustees. The remaining bodies also organized and transacted business.

It is not our purpose to offer opinions, or adopt the evidence on either side, but merely to furnish an intelligible view of the points of controversy, and the history of the events which have involved them.

The charge of the judge ruled the law in favor of the relators in emphatic language. He held the excinding resolution to be unconstitutional and void, and on the question of organization he charged the jury that if the delegates were prevented from hearing the question or voting by the clamors, art, or measures of the new school party or the audience, then the Dr. Beman assembly was irregularly formed, and the relators must fail in this issue; but if they believed that the confusion was the act of the defendants, or those who supported the Dr. Elliott house, then they could take no advantage of their own wrong act, and the verdict must be for the plaintiffs.

The jury retired for a few minutes and returned to the court a verdict of guilty against the defendants. The discussion to the jury was ably conducted by Messrs. Meredith and Wood for the plaintiffs, and by Messrs. Ingersoll and Preston for the defendants.

The leading counsel for the relators, Josiah Randall, esq. was their original counsel and legal adviser during 1837, and yielded the prominent position in the argument to which he was entitled, in order to open the cause of the plaintiffs to the jury; it is spoken of as a masterly effort. The evidence of the defendants was fully opened by F. W. Hubbell, esq.

The consequences of the judgment upon this verdict will be according to the 11th section of the act of 1835: "If any person, &c. be found or adjudged guilty of usurping or intruding into, or unlawfully holding or exercising the office, franchise, privilege or power mentioned in such writ, the court shall give judgment that such defendant be ousted and altogether excluded from such office, franchise, privilege or power, and that the commonwealth, or party suing such writ, as the case may be, recover costs from the defendant."

It is understood that the law laid down by judge Rogers will be considered by the court in bank on a motion for a new trial.

AMENDMENT

Proposed by Mr. Rives to the bill (S. 258) "more effectually to secure public money in the hands of officers and agents of the government, and to punish public defaulters," viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following: "That hereafter all payments of public dues, of whatsoever character or description the same may be, (postages and custom-house fees only excepted), shall, wherever practicable, be made by a deposit of the same, by the person from whom the same shall or may be due, to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, in some solid and substantial bank situated in the district in which they are payable; and that no payment of the public dues (except as herein before mentioned) made in any other manner, shall be deemed a valid discharge of the debtor's obligation or liability to the government. And it shall be the duty of the secretary of the treasury, with the approbation of the president of the United States, to adopt such measures and to establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect this law, and to report all such measures, rules, and regulations, to congress at its ensuing session.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the duties upon imports or tonnage are required by law to be paid in cash, whenever an entry of such goods shall have been completed, and the amount of duties on such entry shall have been ascertained according to law, or whenever it is found to be impracticable to ascertain at the time of such entry the exact amount of duties due thereon, and the same shall have been arranged by estimation, it shall be the duty of the collector to issue duplicate certificates of the amount of duties so ascertained or estimated to be due on such entry, and this certificate shall contain a statement of the name of the ship in which such importation was made, the name of the person making such entry, the date thereof, and the amount of duty due, or estimated to be due, thereon, which certificates, in duplicate, shall be countersigned by the naval officer, who shall record the same in his office: and the said certificate so being completed, shall be delivered to the person making such entry, who shall forthwith take the same to the bank designated in said certificate; and the said person shall then and there, leaving one of the said certificates with the said bank, deposit in the said bank the amount so stated to be due in said certificate to the credit of the treasurer of the United States; and the bank officer receiving such deposit shall endorse on the back of said certificate a receipt for the amount of such deposit, which certificate so endorsed shall be returned to the collector issuing the same, who shall thereupon deliver to the person making such entry a permit for the goods described in such entry, or such other receipt or acquittance therefor as is by law required; and in the case of the payment of an estimated demand of duty, whenever the exact amount due shall have been ascertained and fixed according to law, it shall be the duty of the collector to issue to the person who made such entry, and who paid on such entry, to receive the excess if any, or who paid on such entry, certificates in duplicate of the amount of such excess, which certificate shall correspond in number with the certificate of deposit, shall be countersigned by the naval officer, recorded in his office, and then delivered to the person entitled to the same, who shall present the same to the bank aforesaid, which bank shall forthwith pay the amount thereof, and, retaining one of the said certificates, shall return the other stamped as paid to the collector aforesaid, by the hands of the person who shall have presented the same.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said banks, of the said collector, and of the said naval officer, respectively, to make weekly returns of the said certificates of deposit and of payments, together with an abstract thereof, to the first auditor of the treasury, whose duty it shall be, on receiving, to examine and compare the same, and thereupon to state an account with the said bank, and also with the said collector, in relation to said deposits and payments.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, in all cases in which by law the duties are secured to be paid by bond, it shall be the duty of the collector to deposit for collection the duty bonds, heretofore and hereafter to be taken, in a bank designated for the purpose as aforesaid, and that whenever any such bond shall be paid, it shall be the duty of the bank holding such bonds to carry the amount paid thereon to the credit of the treasurer of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the collector, on depositing said bonds, to prepare abstracts of said bonds, so to be deposited, in triplicate, one of which shall be delivered to the naval officer, and, after being compared with said bonds, shall be recorded by him; another shall be delivered with the said bonds to the said collector, and the other shall be retained by the collector, and recorded in his office; and it shall be the duty of the said bank, of the said collector, and also of the said naval officer, respectively, to make monthly returns of such abstracts to the first auditor of the treasury, who shall examine and compare the same, and therefrom state an account with the said bank and the said collector; and it shall be the duty of the said bank to make weekly returns of the bonds so deposited, which may be paid at maturity, and also of the said bonds as are put in suit, in the manner hereinafter directed.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all fees on making entry, and all other fees due and payable according to law, at the several custom houses, shall be received by the cashier thereof, whose duty it shall be to keep an exact account thereof, and, with a copy of said account, to deposit, from day to day, the amount of fees so received by him, to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, in a bank designated for that purpose, and to make weekly returns to the collector and naval officer, of the amount of fees so received and deposited by him; and it shall be the duty of the collector to endorse on each entry the amount of fees due and payable thereon, which endorsement shall be transferred by the naval officer to a book to be kept by him for that purpose; and it shall be the duty of the bank aforesaid to distinguish, in its returns to the treasury of its account, the sums so received, from time to time, for fees; and it shall be the duty of the collector to make weekly returns to the first auditor of the treasury of the amount of fees so endorsed on the said entry.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the bank, in which said bonds shall be deposited for collection, whenever a bond shall not be paid at maturity, forthwith, and without delay, to deliver the same to the first attorney of the United States for the district in which the said bank is situated, to be put in suit; and, upon so delivering said bond, to take from the said attorney triplicate receipts of the same, one of which shall be sent by the said bank to the collector from whom he received the said bonds, one shall be sent to the first auditor of the treasury, and the other shall be retained by the said bank; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney, on receiving said bond, to send to the first auditor, and to the solicitor of the treasury, respectively, an abstract of such bond so delivered to him; and it shall be the duty of said auditor, on receiving said receipt and abstract, to compare the same, and to give to the collector credit for such bonds so put in suit, and to open an account with said district attorney, charging him with the amount of said bond so delivered to him as aforesaid.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the district attorney, in all cases where payment shall be offered to be made in any suit brought, or directed to be brought, by him on any bond, or for any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, or other

Remand on behalf of the United States, to deliver to the person who proposes to pay the same a certificate, in triplicate, containing the title of the suit, a brief statement of the demand, the date thereof, and the amount due thereon; and the person to whom the said certificates are delivered shall, on the day of the late thereof, take the same to the bank designated in said certificate, and then and there deposit in the said bank, to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, the amount stated to be due in said certificate; and the officer of said bank shall endorse on said certificate a receipt for the amount so deposited, and, retaining one of said certificates, shall deliver the others to the person producing the same, who shall forthwith, retaining one of the said certificates, redeliver the other to the district attorney who issued the same; and the said district attorney shall, on receiving the said certificate endorsed as aforesaid, dismiss the said suit; and no suit instituted shall be suspended or dismissed until such certificate, so endorsed, shall be returned to the district attorney as aforesaid; and it shall be the duty of the said bank to make weekly returns to the first auditor of the treasury of all such certificates, with the receipts endorsed thereon; and it shall be the duty of said district attorney, whenever such certificates shall be returned to him as aforesaid, to send to the first auditor of the treasury a true copy thereof, to the end that his account may be credited with the amount of the bond, or other debt so paid, as aforesaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That, after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful to pay any money for salaries of officers, for the incidental expenses of custom-houses, or receivers' offices, or for any other purpose whatsoever, (certificates of debenture and bounty only excepted, as hereinafter directed), unless the same shall be regularly drawn from the treasury on warrants issued under appropriations made by law; and all moneys so drawn, and not paid directly to some person having a claim of the government, shall be placed by the head of the department or other person under whose superintendence or by whom it is to be disbursed, (when practicable), in some bank designated for that purpose, to the credit of the officer or other person who is to disburse the same, whose disbursements whenever it can be done, shall be only made by checks drawn on the said deposits to the order of the person receiving the same, specifying the particular object or purpose for which each is drawn; and it shall be the duty of the bank, on which the said checks shall be drawn, to make weekly returns of the checks so drawn and paid, together with a copy of the account of such officer or other person with the said bank, to the proper accounting officer of the treasury department, to the end that the same may be examined and compared, and that the account of such officer or person may be promptly and truly stated and adjusted.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever any certificate of debenture or bounty shall become due and payable, according to law, it shall be the duty of the collector to endorse on said certificate an order on the bank in which the public moneys are deposited for his district, directing the payment of the same; and upon the presentation of the said order, countersigned by the naval officer, it shall be the duty of the said bank to pay the amount thereof, and to charge the same to the treasurer of the United States, in account with the said bank; and that the said certificate, with the endorsement thereon, before it shall be delivered, or be a valid order for payment, shall be countersigned by the naval officer, and recorded in his office; and it shall be the duty of the said bank, of the said collector, and of the said naval officer, respectively, to return weekly abstracts of each certificate of debenture and bounty, so paid as aforesaid; and it shall be the duty of the said bank, from time to time, upon the settlement with the treasurer of the United States of his account with the said bank, to return the said original certificates, with the orders of payment endorsed thereon, to the first auditor of the treasury, that the same may be examined and compared by him with the returns of the said naval officer and collector; and further, that it shall be the duty of the said collector and naval officer to make weekly returns of all certificates of debenture and bounty issued by them, which said returns shall contain a statement of the amount to be paid on said certificate, the number thereof, and the name of the person to whom the same is made payable.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That if any officer mentioned or referred to in this act, shall neglect or refuse to make such returns as are herein required to be made, and truly and diligently to perform the duties required of him by this act, it shall be the duty of the head of department to which the duties of the said officer appertain, forthwith to report such neglect or refusal to the president of the United States; and if such neglect or refusal shall not be satisfactorily accounted for, the said officer shall forthwith be removed from office, and such other legal remedies shall be applied as the case may warrant; and if any bank in which the public money may be deposited, as aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse to make the returns required by this act to be made, it shall be the duty of the head of the department to which such returns are required to be made, forthwith to report the same to the president, who, if such neglect or refusal shall not be satisfactorily accounted for, shall cause the public money deposited in such bank to be removed therefrom.

SWARTWOUT DEFALCATIONS.

Report of the committee of investigation, chosen by ballot, by the house of representatives, January 17 and 19, 1839, on the subject of the defalcations of Samuel Swartwout and others, and the correctness of the returns of collectors and receivers of the public money; also, the report of the minority of the committee.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d ultimo has been received, in relation to my not having deposited the public moneys in my hand at the time specified by the law on that subject, as well as by your instructions. When the bank of Louisville rescinded her contract with the department, I waited a considerable time for advice from the department how I should act; receiving no instructions, I went on to make a deposit, in the branch bank of the United States at St. Louis, of eight thousand dollars, of which I advised you. I then received your instructions to continue to deposit in the bank of Louisville; shortly after which I received your circular of August the 6th, to pay over to any collectors of the United States that I might have confidence in; and shortly after, your instructions to deposit in the Saving institution of Louisville. Your circular instruction, under date of the 6th of August, was, and is, considered a matter of great importance to the people of this section, particularly as there are no banks nearer than St. Louis and Louisville. And under that circular, I have paid over, to the orders of captain Ogden, several thousand dollars; and sent you, with my last monthly return, his receipt for three thousand dollars; and have continued to pay to his order from time to time for which he has promised to request drafts in his favor on me hereafter.

You have ordered that my accounts with the department be closed on the first of the next month. I shall be compelled to beg your indulgence until the last of the month, at which time the quarter will end; which will give me time to see captain Ogden; and to settle my accounts with him. The payments made by me, and to the order of Captain Ogden, have been of great importance to all who had moneys due them from the road; as they received their money instead of checks on distant banks; and if I have acted contrary to your circular, it shall be my business to repair any injury that the government may have sustained, by my future conduct, which shall be governed by your instructions. I am, with sentiments of respect, your obedient servant.

WM. LINN, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury department, December 4, 1834.

SIR: Allow me to inquire why it is that your letter of the 16th ultimo is entirely silent as to your neglect to comply with the positive directions contained in a letter from the department dated 23d June last, and that you still neglect to pay the public money in your hands, or to furnish the statement as required by my act, of the 29d ultimo, and a statement of your advances to colonel Ogden. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

Wm. Linn, esq. receiver of public money, Vandalia, Ill.

Treasury department, February 12, 1835.

SIR: Although it has pleased the president under the explanations given, notwithstanding your past neglect in some cases to deposit the public moneys as required by law and the instructions of the department, to renominate you for the office of receiver of public money at Vandalia, and your nomination has been confirmed, yet it is not to be inferred from this evidence of his regard, that any future omission in this respect can be overlooked. Once for all then, I would inform you that a strict observance of the relations of the department, for the periodical deposit of the public money, and the transmission of your accounts and returns, are paramount duties, the neglect of which will be reported for the action of the executive. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Receiver's office, Vandalia, March 18, 1835.

SIR: Your letter of instructions, and advising me of my reappointment, has been received. I flatter myself that you are now satisfied that, although I may have erred in the payment of the government money to the superintendent of the Cumberland road, it was to be attributed to the purest motives, and not with a wish or intention to infringe upon the required duties of my office. From the vouchers furnished you, it will be shown that, since the month of September last, I have had paid $15,000. This, as well as the balance in my hands, has already been paid over to the order of the superintendent, before I received any voucher from him, which, consequently, placed my accounts behind. Those payments were made by me under the presumption that I would be sustained by your circular of the 6th of August last; and before doing so, I had consulted my friends here, (including a number of my securities), who coincided with me in the construction of that circular; and further concluded, that by making those payments I was doing the public a service, and would not incur your dissatisfaction. The phraseology of the superintendent's receipts never corresponded with my own on the subject, as they represented or purported that the moneys paid by me were to be expended for the use of the Cumberland road, instead of stating, as they should have done, that they had been expended for that purpose. For, permit me to remark to you, sir, that the moneys were always paid long months before I received the vouchers; consequently, my arrears appeared large, when, in fact, I had but an inconsiderable fund on hand belonging to the government. The citizens and laborers on the road looked upon this arrangement as one of the best that could be adopted. The bands were generally paid in specie, which they invariably preferred; they might otherwise have been paid in checks on the bank of Louisville—a result to them, perhaps, not the most agreeable, as the intercourse between this and that place is inconsiderable, and consequently, a loss would have been the consequence to the laborer.

The last payment from captain Ogden to me was in a check of $5,000, drawn at Louisville, on his way to Washington city. He has not as yet returned; when he does I will close my accounts with him and pay over no more moneys without a special order from you to that effect. My duty I will endeavor to fulfil. I would beg leave to refer you to my letter addressed to the honorable Mr. Tauey, in reference to the $8,000 deposited by me in the branch bank of the United States at St. Louis. I never received any communication from him while in office, except a circular under date of the 20th of November, 1833, directing all future deposits to be made in the bank of Louisville. That bank declined receiving government moneys on deposit. I waited to hear from the secretary, to know how I should act on the occasion; and the sums were accumulating on my hands, increasing the responsibility of their safe-keeping. I was prompted to assume a further responsibility, by making the deposit in the branch bank of the United States at St. Louis, and addressed him an explanatory letter to that effect, to which I never received any reply; and it was not until the day the senate of the United States acted on his nomination, that I received a communication from him calling my attention to my duty, without suggesting any place of deposit for the sum above specified, and without noticing the contents of my letter to him in reference to the $8,000 which I had already deposited.

I have determined to accept the office you have tendered me, although I had been nominated by the governor, and confirmed by the senate to the most responsible office of the state of Illinois—that of canal commissioner and treasurer of the board. At the solicitation of my fellow citizens of this district I have declined the appointment conferred upon me by the state, and shall enter on the duties of receiver as soon as I file my bond, which will be in the course of a few days. My securities living in different parts of the state, and the district judge and attorney being residents of Kaskaskia, a distance of 100 miles, will occasion some little delay in the approval and transmission of my bond.

Flattering myself that this letter may prove satisfactory, I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant.

WILLIAM LINN.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Receiver's office, Vandalia, May 31, 1835.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit, herewith, my account current for the month ending this day. I would beg leave to refer you to the communication you will receive from William J. Brown, esq. examiner of the land office here, for an explanation of the cause which has prevented me from making a deposit of the public moneys at the expiration of the present month. The roads throughout the state have been rendered impassable by frequent and heavy rains.

On the termination of the present quarter, I shall make a deposit of all the public moneys I may have received. I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM LINN, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, November 30, 1835.

Sir: Your monthly duplicate returns for the months of August, September and October, have not been received. The frequent occasions on which it becomes necessary to notice the neglect of receivers in this respect, suggest a resort to some more effectual remedy than mere complaint. Hence, as a means of enforcing a strict attention to this duty, I shall report any future omission in this respect for the action of the executive, unless satisfactory reasons are assigned for the neglect. The returns in arrears are expected to be transmitted forthwith. I am &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

Receivers of public money at Galena, Illinois and Tallahassee, Florida.

Receiver's office, Vandalia, Dec. 31, 1835.

Sir: In my last letter, I promised to close my accounts with the department on this day. Circumstances beyond my control have prevented it, for which I hope satisfactory reasons have been given by my friends. Captain Ogden being absent from his office has prevented me from obtaining from him a receipt for $6,383 paid over to his order. You will observe from captain Ogden's receipts that the moneys had been paid over previous to my obtaining from him the receipts. I have now on hand, and am paying it over daily, the sum of $1,611 of public moneys. My friends at Washington have received letters upon this subject from gentlemen here, which I hope will prove satisfactory. I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM LINN, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury department, February 4, 1836.

Sir: Your returns for the months of October, November and December, have not been received. I regret that there should be any occasion to notice neglect or accident (as the case may be) in this important duty; and avail myself of the occasion to inform you that, unless your future returns are received at the department within the month next succeeding that for which the return is rendered, it will place me under the disagreeable necessity of reporting the fact to the executive, in order to comply with the general rule in this class of cases. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

Sir: Your letter of the 4th instant has been received, in which you complain of my returns for December not having been received. I will refer you to the commissioner's office for my reasons for the returns not having been forwarded at the usual time, and I hope they may prove satisfactory. I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury department, July 25, 1836.

Sir: I am in the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, covering your account current for the month of June, with two certificates of deposit; one of which bears date on the 30th of said month. I wish, therefore, to be informed why the entire amount of money on hand at the time the last deposit was made was not included in it; the balance appearing by your account, not deposited, amounts to $15,129 04, which I have to request may be forthwith placed in bank to the credit of the treasurer of the United States. I am, very respectfully, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

William Linn, esq., Receiver of public money, Vandalia, Illinois.

Treasury department, November 3, 1837.

Sir: Observing that large sums of money received by you in payment for public lands still remain in your hands, I have to request that you will let me know why the same are not placed to the credit of the treasurer in the state bank of Missouri, at St. Louis. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

Receiver of public money Vandalia, Illinois.

Treasury department, December 8, 1837.

Sir: Your letter of the 28th ultimo, announcing the death of Mr. Prentiss, register is received. Again it becomes my duty to call your attention to the subject of my former letters in reference to the deposits of the public money; and to inform you that if, by return of mail, evidence is not received of your having complied with the requirements of my letters of 16th August and 3d November, it will be my unpleasant duty to report your neglect to the president and to recommend your removal from office. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

William Linn, esq. receiver, Vandalia, Illinois.

Treasury department, January 26, 1838.

Sir: Your letter of the 7th instant is received, and your resignation is accepted by the president. I regret that so large a balance stands undeposited in your hands, and trust that certificates of deposit for the amount with the bank of Missouri will, without delay, be forwarded here. I am, &c.

CIRCULAR TO RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Treasury department, January 15, 1834.

Sir: Many of the receivers of public money having failed to observe that part of the general instruction of the department, dated 1st of May, 1831, which relates to the endorsement therein required to be made on the receipts given by them in payment for public lands, and omitted to furnish statements of the aggregate amount received in each description of funds in each month, it becomes my duty to call your particular attention to the regulation referred to, and to insist upon its strict observance, as well during the public sales as at the time of private entries. In performance of this duty, it is essentially necessary that the endorsements should exhibit the amount received in the funds of each bank, and that the monthly statement should afford like information in regard to the aggregate receipts of each month. As the existing instructions given for the regulation of your conduct in the receipt of bank notes in payment for public lands authorise you, under circumstances of well founded distrust, to discontinue the receipt of the notes of the state banks at any time, it is not proposed to make any change in the instructions which have heretofore governed you in the receipt or refusal of such notes.

I would, however, enjoin upon you a vigilant attention to the interests involved in the authority thus given you, and the exercise of a sound discretion in the use of it.

I take the occasion to advert to the necessity of a prompt compliance with the regulations of the department in regard to the deposit of the public moneys, and a punctual observance of the instructions which relate to your monthly returns. I am, &c.

R. B. TANEY, sec. of the treasury.

Columbus, (Miss.) February 13, 1834.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find a certificate of deposit from Wm. B. Winston, cashier of the office of the Planters' bank at this place, for the sum of thirty-five thousand two hundred and eighty-one dollars and eight cents, which has been placed to the credit of the treasurer of the United States. I have heretofore enclosed you the following certificates of deposits, and have not received an acknowledgment of the same. I would be glad you would acknowledge the same in your next. To wit:

Certificate of deposit from S. Sprague, cashier Planters' bank, dated October 30, 1833, for	$10,500 73
One ditto November 23, 1833, for	2,971 16
One ditto November 30, 1833, for	8,300 00
One ditto December 29, 1833, for	197,768 51
One ditto from W. B. Winston, cashier of Planters' bank, dated January 11, 1834, for	75,996 30
Certificate enclosed	35,251 08
	$331,118 22

Your circular dated the 15th ultimo is received. I shall strictly attend to the same. It was not practicable for me to make the endorsements during the land sales, and since that time I have been so very busy making out my returns that I have not been able to attend to it. Respectfully, yours,

W. P. HARRIS, receiver, To the secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, February 7, 1834.

Sir: It has been represented to this department that some of the receivers of public money in Mississippi have been engaged in trading on the bank notes they receive in payment of public lands, by exchanging them for bank notes of inferior value. I hope that there may be some mistake in this business, as it is my duty to state to you that such conduct would be regarded by this department as a gross violation of official duty, and be treated accordingly. But, as such a statement has been made from the most respectable authority, I must ask whether you have engaged in any such use of the public money received by you; and request a prompt answer to this inquiry. I am, &c.

R. B. TANEY, sec. of the treasury.

To receivers of public money of Augusta, Salus, Washington, Choctawhatchee and Columbus.

Receiver's office, Columbus, (Mississippi), February 26, 1834.

Sir: Yours of the 7th instant is at hand. I presume that the charge of changing the public moneys for other of less value was not made in relation to myself. If it was, I must plead guilty in this much: that I have, for the accommodation of travellers, exchanged money to suit that section of country to which they were going; but in no instance have I ever taken any money but what was receivable in payment of lands. To this, I think, the register will do me the justice to certify. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Columbus, February 26, 1834.

I have perused the above communication, and, as reference is made to me, I have no hesitation in saying that the facts therein set forth are perfectly in accordance with truth, so far as my knowledge extends. Respectfully,

WILLIAM DOWNING, register.

Hon. R. B. Taney, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, March 6, 1834.

Sir: The several certificates of deposits referred to in your letter of the 13th ultimo were received in due course. As the acknowledgment of such papers and returns addressed to the department would greatly add to the business of the office, it has not, on that account, been usual to do so. When not advised to the contrary, it may be presumed they have been received; and, in regard to the returns which are required to be rendered, it becomes my duty to advise you that those for the months of November, December and January, are in arrears; and to say to you that a strict and punctual observance of this duty is indispensable. I am, &c.

R. B. TANEY, sec. of the treasury.

W. P. Harris, esq. receiver public money, Columbus, Miss.

Treasury department, March 17, 1834.

Sir: I have received your letter of the 26th ultimo, and have had to say that the department cannot approve any exchange whatever in the money received by you; that which is received must be deposited. I am, &c.

R. B. TANEY, Secretary of the treasury.

W. P. Harris, esq. receiver public money, Columbus, Miss.

Treasury department, March 25, 1834.

Sir: The department having received no monthly returns showing the transactions of your office from the month of October last, I have thought proper to inform you that, as a means of enforcing a strict compliance with the regulations of the department, in respect to this duty I shall not hesitate to report the case for the action of the executive, should the neglect be continued. I am, &c.

R. B. TANEY, sec. of the treasury.

W. P. Harris, esq. Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

Treasury department, May 19, 1834.

SIR: Lest the letter of which the enclosed is a duplicate may have been miscarried, I have thought it proper to transmit a copy, and again to call your attention to its requirements. I am, &c.

R. B. TANEY, sec. of the treasury.

Receivers of public money,
Augusta, Mount Sales, Columbus, Choctawhatchee.

Receiver's office, Columbus, (Miss.) June 6, 1834.

SIR: Yours of the 19th ultimo is received; and, in reply, I only have to say that my monthly accounts current for the months of November and December, 1833, and for the months of January, February, March and April, 1834, were forwarded you in due time; and why you have not received them I am unable to account for, unless it is owing to a failure in the mails; they were regularly forwarded you and to the commissioner of the general land office, and mailed in the post office at this place. My monthly account current for this month is now ready, and only wants a comparison with the register's register of receipts, which, when compared, will be forwarded. Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
W. P. HARRIS,
Receiver of public money at Columbus, Miss.

Hon. Secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, February 6, 1835.

SIR: I regret that there should be occasion for again calling your attention to the omission to render your monthly duplicate returns to this office for the months of November and December, (those being in arrear), and to remind you that punctuality in this respect is indispensable. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

CIRCULAR.

Treasury department, February 28, 1835.

SIR: It has been intimated to the department that a practice prevails at some of the land offices of permitting entries and issuing certificates of purchase without the payment of the purchase money at the time of the entry. Such a practice being unauthorised and highly reprehensible, I have deemed it proper to make known to you, that if it has been tolerated by you, it must immediately cease; and any repetition of it hereafter, coming to the knowledge of the department, will receive prompt and exemplary notice.

I cannot omit the occasion to impress upon you the necessity of a strict attention to, and punctual compliance with, the duties required of you in regard to the prompt deposit of the public moneys, and the transmission of your accounts and returns; and to say to you that the performance of those duties must be regarded as paramount to all other in your official station. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

To receivers of public money at Cahaba, Huntsville, Montgomery, St. Stephen's, Augusta, Choctawhatchee, New Orleans, Ouachita, Demopolis, Mardianville, Sparta, Tusculouss, Columbus, Washington, Opelousas, and St. Helena.

Treasury department, March 17, 1835.

SIR: Having received no monthly duplicate return of the transactions of your office since that for the month of October last, it becomes my unpleasant duty to call your immediate attention to the omission. Allow me to express a hope that there may be no further occasion to remind you of the importance of punctuality in the transmission of these returns. I am, &c. LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

To receivers of public money, W. P. Harris, Columbus, Mississippi; R. H. Sterling, Choctawhatchee, Mississippi; B. R. Rodgers, Opelousas, Louisiana; T. Simpson, Demopolis, Alabama. [To be received for October for the two last named.]

P. S. To the receiver at Opelousas: Having received no evidence of your compliance with the requirements of my letter of the 1st November last, I take occasion to apprise you that, unless you exhibit satisfactory evidence of your having deposited the whole of the public money in your hands at the time of such deposit, on or before the 1st of April next, I shall be under the disagreeable necessity, in the discharge of my duty, to report your neglect for the action of the executive.

Columbus, April 1, 1835.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 27th March was received on this day. The reason why the returns mentioned in your communication were not made, is this: that we have not had the necessary blanks for that purpose; and also the interference of the public land sales at this office, and the immense business done at this office since the sales have closed, are all reasons I shall urge for the delay of such returns. I shall make them so soon as I can do so. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Receiver's office, Columbus, April 18, 1835.

SIR: Enclosed you will receive my monthly account current for the month of November, 1834, showing a balance of $108,318 85. You will discover that I have neglected to give an account of the different kinds of funds received that month; there was such a press of business during the months of November and December that I found it impossible for me to render a correct statement; but for the future I will give you a correct statement of the different kinds of funds received in each month.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, June 25, 1835.

SIR: Having, in a communication addressed to you on the 17th of March last, and on several prior occasions, urged upon you the indispensable necessity of a strict attention to making your monthly returns, and finding that no returns have been received from you since that for the month of November last, it becomes my unpleasant duty to say to you, that if those in arrear are not transmitted by return of mail, I shall be constrained to report your neglect for the action of the executive. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Receiver of public money, Columbus.

Receiver's office, Columbus, (Miss.) July 13, 1835.

SIR: Enclosed you will receive my monthly account current for the month of December, 1834, showing a balance of $355,067 83.

The returns would have been forwarded you sooner; but not having been furnished with the necessary blanks, which we could not procure here, it was out of my power.

We did not obtain the blanks until we had written the third time. And, in addition, the press of business has been very great which you will discover by our returns. Your obedient servant,
W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, August 28, 1835.

SIR: Agreeably to the intimation given you in my letter of the 20th June, it has become my disagreeable duty to report your continued neglect to the president; who has instructed me to say to you, that if the monthly returns required from you by the regulations of the treasury, which are in arrear, are not received at the department on or before the 10th of October next, you will then be dismissed from office. I am, &c. LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

Wiley P. Harris, esq.
Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

Columbus, September 14, 1835.

SIR: Yours of the 25th of August is before me, in which you state "that you are instructed by the president to say that if my monthly returns are not made by the 10th October, I will be dismissed from office."

All I can say in excuse or extenuation of my seeming neglect in the office, is the great press of business, which will the more fully appear by reference to the certificate of deposit. I have kept constantly employed in the office three clerks, and I do assure you that it is utterly impossible to keep the business up, as more than that number cannot be employed. Every exertion shall be made to make out and forward the returns as soon as possible. I ask of the president a suspension of removal for a time, until correct information be had with regard to the manner in which the business of the office has been conducted. You may be assured, sir, that the money is regularly deposited in the bank, and that the books are correctly kept, (only behind from an excess of business always on hand), but which will soon, I think, diminish, when there shall be no cause of future complaint. With respect, I am your obedient servant.

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, September 22, 1835.

SIR: Allow me to inquire why it is that your deposits are not made in the branch of the Planters' bank at Columbus, instead of the parent bank at Natchez? Does the branch refuse to receive them, and credit the amount at the mother bank? I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. treasury.

Wiley P. Harris, esq.
Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

P. S. Your return for the month of February last has been received to-day, and shows a large amount on hand not deposited; and you are hereby required

(if not already done) to deposit any balance still on hand in the above branch, to the credit of the treasurer, and forward receipts therefor, in order to save time and expense in travelling to Natchez.

Treasury department, September 28, 1835.

SIR: I regret to say that the reasons assigned in your letter of the 14th instant for withholding your monthly returns cannot hereafter be deemed satisfactory. I can perceive no sufficient cause for their being delayed longer than the first week in each succeeding month, as there can be no difficulty in ascertaining at once the amount of money received within the month, or in stating the amount of your disbursements and deposits during the month; this is all that is required in them. The object of these returns is to afford the department the earliest information in regard to the money operations of the land office, and the punctual transmission of all the moneys received to the bank of deposit. They are, therefore, of paramount importance, and cannot be permitted to await the completion of detailed book entries, or the perfection of other business, be its character what it may. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

W. P. Harris, esq.
Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

Receiver's office, Columbus, (Miss.) Oct. 9, 1835.

SIR: Enclosed herewith you have my monthly account current for the month of September last, showing a balance of $181,604 63. In answer to your letter of 22d ultimo, containing the inquiry, "Why my [your] deposits are not made in the branch of the Planters bank of Columbus, instead of in the parent bank at Natchez?" I permit me to state that an arrangement was made by me some time in December, 1833, or January, 1834, with the parent bank at Natchez, by which the cashier of the branch at this place was directed to receive my deposits, and grant a receipt for the same as credited to the United States. This arrangement existed for some time, and was only terminated by the positive directions of the parent bank to the branch here not to receive my deposits. They were then placed in the parent bank, at the sacrifice of much time and convenience, until such time as I prevailed on the parent bank to accept certificates of deposit to my individual credit, instead of the branch, in lieu of the money; and on said certificates have been, and are, predicated the certificates of deposit in the parent bank to the credit of the United States. This has been productive of much delay, leading me to regret to say that no notification on my part; for, independently of the distance from this place to Natchez, (255 miles), the officers of the parent bank have frequently delayed forwarding me certificates of deposits, until at certain periods; weeks have elapsed before I have received a certificate of deposit, and then one, only, for the aggregate amount of several deposits. It must be evident, sir, that such a mode of transacting the business (the only one I can properly at present pursue) will frequently show a much larger balance on hand than acknowledged to exist. The certificates are stated in my monthly accounts current as they are actually dated and drawn at the parent bank, while at no time has there not been a large sum in the bank in advance of the receipts of certificates. The certificates of deposits which are now due from the banks at Natchez, and which are expected in course of time, will show but a small balance on hand. I will take the liberty to say that it will afford me more than ordinary gratification to submit my accounts and the general business of the office to the examination of the usual visiting agent. Your obedient servant,
W. P. HARRIS.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Columbus, September 15, 1835.

DEAR SIR: Many of the early and constant friends of the administration in this state have heard, with much regret and sorrow, that the present receiver of public moneys at this place is to "consider himself dismissed unless his returns are made before the first of October."

I have long had the honor of an intimate acquaintance with general Harris, and I can freely assure your excellency that a more honorable man does not live, unblemished in all the relations of life, and standing high in the estimation of the public. He has served here for many years in the most responsible and dignified stations, and no man enjoys in this state a more diffused and deserved popularity. I am very well informed as to the management of the office. I reside in the district, and know that he is the most indefatigable business man in the state. Since he received the appointment, he has been absent but once, and then only for a few days. Day and night he is there. The people speak of this everywhere. He has constantly had three, and now four, clerks at work; who, in my own knowledge, have been engaged from sunrise until ten at night, and he cannot obtain them for less than fifty dollars per month. His receipts must have been between twelve and fourteen hundred thousand dollars, and the labor for the ensuing six months will be arduous in the extreme. I know that the receiver suffered under great inconvenience for two or three months, being without abstracts, which were not obtained from Washington until he had written three or four times, and even then were much delayed by the extraordinary failure of the mails. From my knowledge of the business of the office, I do not think it possible that the receiver can accomplish his returns by the first of October, though every exertion will be made, and has been made, to keep up with the business. I have known the receiver and his clerks to be at work, time after time, until after one o'clock at night; and the strongest testimonials from the best and most influential friends of your excellency can be had as to his integrity and industry. General Harris has never engaged in speculation, either directly or indirectly.

Pointexter employed a vile, unprincipled agent (Gibson Woodridge) to take testimony at this office, under a resolution of the senate; and he endeavored to implicate general Harris and George W. Martin in some transaction of very minor importance. If I had been exacting, I could have explained the whole matter to the entire exoneration of general Harris; and I could have explained the whole transaction, as it regards colonel Martin, to the satisfaction of the world. The fact is, it was a miserable attempt, on the part of Pointexter, to strengthen his party here. He hates colonel Martin with the malignity of a demon; and nothing would rejoice him more than the expulsion of general Harris, whom he knows to be one of the main pillars of the democratic cause, and one of the earliest and most distinguished friends of the administration in Mississippi. His family and connexions are extremely influential, and all of them are co-operating with us in the arduous struggle which we are now making. They are true democrats; and the bank, nullifying and White parties would shoot to victory at any blow aimed at them.

We are now in the midst of an electioneering campaign. Governor Runnels, R. Walker, major B. W. Edwards, and myself, constitute this democratic Van Buren ticket. It will be a close contest. The Nashville papers circulate extensively through our state. Much of our population is from Tennessee; nine-tenths of our newspapers are for White; and every bank in the state, including the United States branch, has taken commission in his service. Some three or four thousand of our voters are recent emigrants from other states, and reside in the new counties, knowing nothing of our political arrangements; and, as we have no mails circulating among them, the result, as to them, is doubtful.

With high respect, I remain your excellency's most obedient servant,

JOHN F. H. CLAIBORNE.

To his excellency the president of the U. States.

Columbus, (Miss.) Sept. 14, 1835.

Sir: General Wiley P. Harris, the receiver of public moneys at this place, has shown me the letter of the honorable Levi Woodbury to him of the 23th of August. In that letter, he is required, as such receiver, to have the arrears of his monthly returns made to the treasury department by the 10th of October next; and he is informed that, in case the same should not be done by that time, he will be dismissed from office.

In troubling you with this letter, I have felt considerable diffidence, arising from your not having more than an introductory acquaintance with me; if, indeed, you should now recollect that acquaintance.

Were congress now in session, that diffidence would be greatly abated, as I could refer you to several of the Tennessee delegation, with those from this state, who are well acquainted with me, and who would, I doubt not, unite in bearing testimony that I would be incapable of making misrepresentations to you.

Having had considerable knowledge of the business done in the land office here, and of the attention and industry with which its duties have been discharged, I have been requested by general Harris to say to you what I may know on the subject.

The amount of money reported by the receiver to the treasury department, arising from the sales of public lands at this office, will satisfactorily indicate to you the unprecedented amount of public lands sold here within a limited time past.

The greatly increased labors called for by the operation of the late pre-emption laws will, I am persuaded, suggest themselves to your consideration.

The department must needs be satisfied with the prompt and faithful accounting for the public money, as duplicate certificates of deposit in the Planters' bank are generally obtained semi-weekly, and forwarded.

I know that general Harris has generally had three clerks employed in the office; and such, indeed, has been the press and quantity of business on hand, that he and they have been frequently engaged until 10 or 11 o'clock at night.

The utmost active and indefatigable labors will be immediately put in requisition, with the employment of additional clerks, until the desired returns shall be completed and forwarded; and it is confidently believed that the great amount of business these returns will show, will furnish, of itself, a satisfactory excuse for the otherwise seeming delays.

It is in unison with the prevailing sentiment now, to say that the receiver's office at this place is faithfully, attentively, industriously and ably conducted; and it is hoped that general Harris's dismissal from office may be suspended until he can make out the returns; and it is confidently believed that they will contain within themselves a highly satisfactory excuse for the complained-of delay of the monthly returns. I have the honor to be, with great regard, your obedient servant,

STEPHEN COCKE,

His excellency Andrew Jackson, president of the U. S.

Columbus, (Miss.) Oct. 10, 1835.

Sir: I have the honor to report that Wiley P. Harris, esq., receiver of public moneys at Columbus, has not complied with the requirements of your letter of the 23th August; and that his returns for May, June, July, August and September, are in arrears. According to his return for April, there was on hand the sum of $211,059 03 on the 30th of that month; yet his succeeding deposits, made on the 9th and 11th May, were no more than $140,000; when, according to the regulations, the whole sum should have been deposited. His previous deposits, made in January, February, March and April, are all very far short of the money on hand at the end of the previous month.

The department is advised of deposits made during the period for which his returns are in arrears, amounting to the sum of $450,000; but, in the absence of any knowledge of the receipt of the land office at the period of the several deposits, it cannot be ascertained whether the amount deposited at the respective dates embraced all the moneys on hand or not. Respectfully submitted:

J. McG., clerk.

Hon. secretary of the treasury.

P. S. Mr. Harris's letter, with letters from Messrs. Cocke and Claiborne, are enclosed.

Treasury department, Oct. 12, 1835.

Sir: Trusting to the assurances given in your letter of the 11th ultimo, and to those of your friends, made in your behalf, the president has consented, upon the facts now before him, to continue you in office until the 12th November proximo; then, unless your monthly returns are all rendered, and satisfactory evidence that the whole of the public moneys with which you are chargeable are deposited, you must be removed from office, however painful to both him and this department.

I am, &c.
LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
W. P. Harris, esq. receiver of public money, Columbus, Mississippi.

Treasury department, Oct. 26, 1835.

Sir: I have to observe, in reply to your letter of the 9th instant, that the allowance authorised by the regulations of the department, as a compensation for travelling expenses, and risk in the transmission of the public moneys to the bank of deposit, can only be made when such expenses and risk have actually been incurred, and not in any cases where both are avoided by means of the fac-tiver, instead of the mail or deposit banks. Moreover, inasmuch as the branch bank of Columbus receives and credits the moneys received by you in the first instance, I can perceive no reason why each deposit in past months should not have embraced the whole amount in your possession at the time of such deposit, as the instructions require.

I am, &c.
LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the treasury.
W. P. Harris, esq. receiver of public money, Columbus.

Treasury department, Nov. 28, 1835.

Sir: Your letter of the 11th instant, and return for the month of October, are received. As your deposits of public moneys are made at Columbus, no reasons whatever can be seen why the whole money in your hands at the end of the month is not deposited; it is expected that it will be hereafter.

I am, &c.
LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, Feb. 4, 1836.

Sir: Your returns for the months of October, November and December, have not been received. I regret that there should be any occasion to notice the neglect or accident, (as the case may be), in this important duty; and avail myself of the occasion to inform you that, unless your future returns are received at the department within the time next succeeding that for which the return is rendered, it will place me under the disagreeable necessity of reporting the fact to the executive, in order to comply with the general rule in this class of cases. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Sec. of the treasury.

To receivers at Palmyra, Missouri, October, November and December; Edwardsville, Illinois, November and December; Quincy, Illinois, November and December; Shawneetown, Illinois, October, November and December; Cahala, Alabama, November and December; St. Stephen's, Alabama, November and December; Columbus, Mississippi, November and December; Mount Salus, Mississippi, November and December; Helena, Arkansas, December; Washington, Arkansas, December; Zanesville, Ohio, December; Vincennes, Indiana, December; Chicago, Illinois, December; Galena, Illinois, December; Vandalia, Illinois, December; Tuscaloosa, Alabama, December; Augusta, Mississippi, December; Clarksburg, Mississippi, December; New Orleans, Oachahta and St. Helena, Louisiana, December; Green Bay, Michigan, December; Batesville, Arkansas, December.

Columbus, Feb. 27, 1836.

Sir: Yours of the 4th instant came to hand this morning. I can say, sir, in answer, that my return for the month of November was ready to forward on the 15th of December last; but, several small errors, of which I have notified the department in the returns, which I forwarded without comparing with the register's books, induced me to wait until the register's books were brought up, in order that my books should be correct. The register's register of certificates is ready this morning; and I will compare my return for November, and immediately forward it. The return for the month of December will be ready and forwarded in a few days. The public money has been deposited, and certificates forwarded regularly. I can assure you, sir, that my returns are not delayed through my negligence. I will forward them for the future, without waiting to compare with the register, unless otherwise directed. I am, sir, yours, very respectfully,
W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Columbus, (Miss.) March 13, 1836.

Sir: Enclosed you will receive my monthly account current for the month of November, 1835, showing a balance of four hundred and sixty-six thousand four hundred and ten dollars and fifty-nine cents. ($466,410 59). The returns for the months of December, January and February, will be forwarded in ten or twelve days. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, March 28, 1836.

Sir: Your letter of the 13th instant, enclosing your return for the month of November, is received. Again it becomes my unpleasant duty to complain of your neglect in this respect, and to inform you that the omission to transmit the required monthly statements for a whole quarter after the time due, cannot be permitted in any public officer; and especially after having been heretofore so often reminded of the consequences of such neglect. On the return of the mail, therefore, if the usual statements for the other months in arrears are not received, I shall be under the disagreeable necessity of again submitting the subject to the president, for his immediate action. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Receiver's office, Columbus, (Miss.)

April 25, 1836.

Sir: Yours of the 23th ultimo, complaining of my monthly returns not having been forwarded, came to hand. And I now have the pleasure of informing you that my monthly return for December was mailed 23th of March; that for January was mailed 4th of April; that for February on the 11th of April; and the last, for March, was mailed the 18th of April; all of which you have received, no doubt, ere this. Respectfully, yours,

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

May 23, 1836.

Sir: Herewith enclosed you will please find my monthly account current for the month of April last, showing a balance of one hundred and twenty-eight thousand five hundred and eighty-four dollars and seventy cents, ($128,584 70). I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. treasury.

Treasury department, June 6, 1836.

Sir: Your letter of the 23d ultimo, accompanied by your returns for the month of April, is received. Seeing the balance of public moneys in your hands amounted to $128,584 70 at the end of that month, I have to request that you will explain why it was that the whole of the public moneys in your hands at the last of the previous month was not deposited, instead of a part, in conformity to explicit and frequent instructions on that point. It is painful to be obliged to ask you so often for explanations. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

June 27, 1836.

Sir: Your favor of June 6 is received, in which you complain of the amount of funds in my hands. I will inform you that I make my deposits in the branch bank at this place, weekly, which you will observe from the letter I send you to the cashier. It is altogether owing to the irregularity of the mails that I am unable to receive the certificates of deposit from Natchez. And I shall now be under the necessity of sending an agent there for the especial purpose of obtaining the certificates. This is produced by the high water between here and Natchez, which at this time renders the roads almost impassable. Yours, respectfully,

W. P. HARRIS, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. treasury.

Office Planters' bank, Columbus, June 22, 1836.

Sir: By the request of W. P. Harris, esq. receiver of public moneys at this place, I would state that he has regularly made his deposits in this office, and obtained from us from three to four certificates monthly. I would further observe, that so far as my knowledge of the management of his office extends, it has been conducted with perfect propriety, and a strict regard to the interests of the government. Very respectfully,

W. B. WINSTON, cashier.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Columbus, (Miss.) August 27, 1836.

DEAR SIR: In obedience to a circular from the commissioner of the general land office, under date of the 25th May last, requiring me, as receiver of the land office at Columbus, to execute a new bond in the penalty of $200,000, I did sign the bond enclosed to me by the department, and have procured the signatures of nine different gentlemen, who, I presume, would be deemed amply sufficient sureties for a greater sum than that required in the bond; but, after procuring this security, some facts have come to my knowledge which have induced me to adopt a different course. You are aware that complaints have from time to time been made by the department, on account of the tardiness of some of my official returns, and of the deficit of the returns of moneys which they exhibited. The immense amount and press of business which have constantly existed in this office since its establishment were the apologies which I had to offer for my apparent delay and dereliction, and which I then believed would be fully ratified so soon as the business of the office would admit of more leisure and minute examination. This examination has been recently made by me; and although I have taken upon myself to send an agent to Natchez to examine my bank account particularly, and have made a pretty thorough examination of my own accounts and official papers, I regret to say that I still find that there is a deficit against me, which as yet I am unable to account for.

Under these circumstances, I feel that the only alternative left, and the one which my duty towards you and the public for whom I act requires, is to tender to you my resignation as receiver of the land office at Columbus, Mississippi. I feel assured, from former demonstrations of your kindness towards me, that I have heretofore enjoyed your confidence; and I regret that any circumstances should have occurred, calculated in the least to impair that confidence. I, however trust and believe that I will yet be able to explain the whole matter satisfactorily, and that neither the public nor my friends will sustain any loss thereby. I wish my resignation to take effect from and after the last day of the present month, (August), at which time I shall, in anticipation, close up the business of the office.

In conclusion, I will take the liberty of recommending to you for appointment as my successor colonel Gordon D. Boyd, of Attala county. You are probably acquainted with his public character, as he has been for many years a prominent member of our state legislature, and has been throughout an ardent supporter of your administration, and an unyielding advocate of the principles of democracy. This request is made in my behalf, in part, on my own account. As he is my warm personal friend, he will willingly afford me every facility in his power to trace out and explain any errors which may have occurred while the office was under my charge. His capability to manage the office I think unquestionable; and it is only at my suggestion that he consented to my placing his name before you, and will most probably make no application through any other medium. In conclusion, permit me to express to you assurances of my high consideration and esteem. Respectfully, yours, &c.

W. P. HARRIS.

Andrew Jackson, president of the United States.

Endorsement in the handwriting of the president. Referred to the secretary of the treasury. The within resignation cannot be accepted until he settles up his accounts. If necessary, he can be suspended or removed. A. J.

Treasury department, September 21, 1836.

Sir: Your letter of the 27th ultimo, addressed to the president, has been referred to this office. Your duties as receiver will, of course, have ceased, or been suspended, after the 31st ultimo, the time when you propose your resignation should take effect. Immediate steps, it is hoped, will be taken to adjust your accounts and pay over the balance. Soon as the president returns, a further communication will be made to you. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

W. P. Harris, esq. Columbus, Mississippi.

[The letter to the president by Harris, and referred to this office, with the endorsement thereon, reached it on the 21st of September, 1836; and, on the same day, measures were ordered to be taken to secure and collect what was due from him; and he notified that he was suspended from office; and the register was also notified of the fact, as appears by the annexed letters. On the president's return to the city, (October 3), a successor was appointed. L. W.]

Treasury department, September 21, 1836.

Sir: I would remind you of the necessity of ascertaining the balance due by Mr. Harris, receiver at Columbus, as soon as practicable, and of taking measures to secure and collect the same; and he has been notified that his duties as receiver ceased after the 31st ultimo. I am, respectfully, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

To the commissioner of the general land office.

Treasury department, September 21, 1836.

Sir: I transmit, for your information, a copy of a letter addressed to W. P. Harris, esq. Upon the return of the president a successor will be appointed. I am, respectfully, sir, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

William Downing, esq.

Register land office, Columbus, Miss.

Columbus, (Miss.) November 1, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I write for the purpose of advising you as to my situation in regard to my late connexion with the land office in this place. The state of my health has been such of late that I have been unable to examine into my office accounts; and as I feel that the prospect of its improvement is extremely doubtful, I am preparing to remove immediately to Brandon, near the seat of government is this state. I have, however, engaged the service of Mr. Robert E. Harris, my nephew, who was engaged for some time with me as clerk, who, together with my successor in office, has kindly proffered his assistance, will make a thorough examination, and, if possible, trace out the error, or ascertain why it is that I appear to be so much in arrear. In the mean time, however, I am preparing for the worst, by selling off, on credit for bankable paper, all my property, which I can make more than sufficient to meet the deficit, should an indulgence be extended to me which will enable me to carry my views into effect. I beg to request of you that you will not commence suit or any action upon my official bond until, if necessary, I can make an application to congress to extend to me the necessary indulgence, as it is impossible for me to sell my property for cash. A coercive and rigid course towards me would not only have the effect of taking from me the means of doing justice, but occasion a loss to the government which it would not otherwise sustain. I can assure this much, that if I am in arrear to any thing near the amount which the account shows against me, I have not used it, or derived any benefit therefrom; but it is so much actual loss, which is as yet to me unaccountable. Throughout my life I have endeavored to act justly and correctly towards others; and I feel just as little disposed to act differently towards the government, whose officers have reposed confidence in me; and I now assure you that all my effects are ready to be given up to satisfy its just demands, in whatever manner may be required of me. As no possible good can result from a rigid course towards me, but, on the contrary, the consequence might be the impoverishment of my family as well as loss to the public, I do hope that, if consistent with your official duty you can, you will take no steps until it may be seen whether congress will grant to me any indulgence. I respectfully request an answer to this communication. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. HARRIS.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, November 19, 1836.

Sir: I have received your letter of the 1st instant by the mail of this morning, and regret to inform you that, as long ago as August last, steps were taken by the solicitor of the treasury to attempt to secure the balance due from you. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

W. P. Harris, esq. Columbus, Mississippi.

[Balance due from Mr. Harris one hundred and nine thousand one hundred and seventy-eight dollars and eight cents. ($109,178 08.) See statement.]

6.—Correspondence with G. D. Boyd, receiver at Columbus.

December 9, 1836.

Sir: I have lately received, in payment for lands entered at this office, a number of the receipts of the treasurer of the United States for money deposited by the holders of them. I have been in the habit of receiving them as money, and giving out my own receipts, as in other cases for money actually paid to me. Upon the examination of the law, however, I have doubts whether I ought to receive them in this way, as the law seems to require that the holders of them shall produce such receipts to the register of the land office, and has no other directory provisions. I therefore request to be advised upon this subject. Respectfully, your obedient servant,
G. D. BOYD, receiver.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, Dec. 26, 1836.

Sir: In reply to the inquiry made in your letter of the 7th inst., I would respectfully refer you to the enclosed circular. I embrace the occasion to call your attention to the necessity of making your monthly returns to this office as soon after the expiration of each month as practicable.

I am, &c. LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

G. D. Boyd, esq. receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

Northeastern land district,

Columbus, (Miss.) January 21, 1837.

DEAR SIR: I herewith enclose to you a certificate of the cashier of the Planters' bank in Natchez for the sum of eighty-six thousand five hundred and ninety-three dollars and forty-six cents, deposited by me to the credit of the treasurer of the United States. In explanation of the delay of our monthly returns for the month of December, I will mention that some time since I had them in readiness, but, in consequence of what the register informed me would be considered as objectionable in them, I have retained them for correction. The errors arose from the fact that, at the opening of this office, on the 1st December, owing to the great press of business, I permitted (with the consent of those who resided in this vicinity) those who lived at a greater distance to pay out their receipts first, and dated each on the day on which it was actually paid out; in consequence of which, some of the higher numbers were dated earlier than those which preceded them. I shall, however, have both my monthly and quarterly accounts ending with the month of December in readiness in a very few days. Very respectfully, yours, &c. G. D. BOYD, Receiver of public money, Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, February 15, 1837.

SIR: Your letter of the 29th ultimo, respecting the manner scrip is to be assigned, has been received. The fourth section of the act of 30th May, 1830, provides that assignments shall be by endorsement thereon, attested by two witnesses. Where genuine scrip is presented, endorsed as required, and you have no reason to suspect the same to have been forged, there can be no objection to your receiving the scrip, but you have, in such cases, to act on your judgment, as your accounts can be credited with that only which is regularly transferred to the individual asking it. It is not necessary the assignment should be made in your presence.

I am, &c. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury, Receiver of public money, Columbus, Mississippi.

Treasury department, May 25, 1837.

SIR: I regret to be under the necessity of complaining of your neglect to transmit your return for the month of March last, and of reminding you that greater strictness must be observed in the performance of this duty. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury, To receivers of public money Kaskaskia, Illinois, (March and April), Columbus, Mississippi; Mount Sales, Miss. (February and March).

Treasury department, June 10, 1837.

SIR: In consequence of your neglect to render your monthly return, and pay over the public moneys, as required by law and the instructions of the department, and the further omission to execute your official bonds in perfect form, the president has directed that the sales of public lands within your district be temporarily suspended, until your compliance with the duties imposed on you, or such other steps as the facts may justify. The register has been instructed accordingly. Under these circumstances, I have to require that a bond be renewed, in the form required by the commissioner of the land office, and that your returns be promptly rendered; and that the whole amount of public moneys in your hands be specially deposited to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, in the Planters' bank at Natchez, and evidence thereof transmitted here without delay. I am, &c.

Receiver's office, N. E. land office, Columbus, (Miss.) July 24, 1837.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of the 10th June ultimo, in consequence of my absence, has just been received. From the circumstance of Mr. V. M. Garesche, who presented to me to register and myself his testimonials showing he was authorized by your department to make particular examination into the affairs of this office, having been here, and my having made to him a full disclosure of its situation, and of mine in connexion with it, I did not deem it necessary for me to communicate with the department at present. I had already anticipated the order to suspend the sale of land at this office, by ceasing to receive any money. So soon as I was advised of the defect of my official bond, I authorized Mr. Garesche to inform the department that it was my intention, as soon as I could conveniently, to see my former sureties, (some of whom were distant from here), and obtain their signatures to all the new bond. I have now obtained the names of all, except one, who was on the bond before forwarded; and his I have not yet obtained, in consequence of his absence, travelling through the state. So soon, however, as I can learn where he is, I will immediately attend to it. I was anxious to obtain the names of those who were on my first bond, (to whom I had made an explanation of my affairs), in preference to any others, in order to show to the department that my friends here, and those who knew my business best, still have confidence. The truth is, I am in default; a circumstance which has originated from my reposing too great confidence in others. I am, however, prepared and determined to secure the government against loss, not only by a sufficient bond, but also secure it and my friends by an unconditional surrender of the whole of my property, whenever it may be required. The returns, in arrears, I will make out immediately; and hope, also, very soon to have it in my power to send the evidences of the deposits of it in my power to send the public moneys in my hands. It is also my intention, so soon as I can properly arrange these things, to forward my resignation. In the mean time, however, I shall endeavor to properly execute my official duties, or make any further communication which may be required of me. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. D. BOYD, receiver, Hon. Levi Woodbury secretary of the treasury.

Columbus, July 24, 1837.

I have read the foregoing letter, and have seen the bond to which it refers, and find that it has all the names which were to the original bond, with the exception of general S. Coker; and there are some additional names.

WM. DOWSING, register.

Treasury department, August 8, 1837.

SIR: I am happy to hear of the frank and honorable course proposed in your letter of the 24th ultimo. It would be convenient to have the bond and resignation arrive here by the early part of September. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury, G. D. Boyd, receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

Treasury department, October 7, 1837.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d ultimo, tendering your resignation of the office of receiver of public money at Columbus, Mississippi, and requesting indulgence on the debts due the United States; and I have to inform you, in reply, that your resignation is accepted, to take effect on the 1st day of the present month, and a successor will be appointed.

The district attorney will be intrusted to exercise as much indulgence as the public interest will permit, in relation to the adjustment of your concerns. I am, &c. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

Gordon D. Boyd, esq., Receiver of public money, Columbus, Miss.

Extract from the report of V. M. Garesche, appointed to examine land offices.

LAND OFFICE AT COLUMBUS.

Columbus, (Miss.) June 14, 1837.

SIR: My labors are at last closed; my examination terminated on the — instant. I might have, probably, procured the assistance of a clerk, but I do not know that the service would have been benefitted, either as to economy or despatch. In the first instance, nothing less than five dollars per day would have been accepted, and the assistant would have been, in all probability, deficient in the knowledge required. In that case, my teaching, and the numerous interruptions occasioned by his inexperience, would have made me lose a time which his co-operation on the other time would not have made up. My anxiety, too, as to his correctness, would have obliged me to examine his work before assuming the responsibility. I therefore declined; and, to make up for the services of this neglected aid, I was assiduous at the office from half past seven in the morning till seven in the evening, not even excepting Sundays; allowing myself less than one hour for my dinner. I enter into all these details, that, should the result not meet your anticipation, the fault should not be attributed to any negligence on my part; but I trust my labors will be found satisfactory.

The account of the receiver, which I have made out, and transmit herewith, presents against him a balance of $55,965 54. His own account makes it $53,272 73; it is also annexed. His assets, of which I also send you the list, amount to $61,549 98, rating the land at $125 only, but might probably realize double the amount. The man seems really penitent; and I am inclined to think, in common with his friends, that he is honest, and has been led away from his duty, by the example of his predecessor, and a certain looseness in the code of morality, which here does not move in so limited a circle as it does with us at home. Another receiver would probably follow in the footsteps of the two. You will not, therefore, be surprised, if I recommend his being retained, in preference to another appointment; for he has his hands full now, and will not be disposed to speculate any more. He will have his bond signed by the same sureties, and forwarded in a few days to Washington; this speaks favorably. He has, moreover, pledged his word that, if retained, he will strictly obey the law, and receive nothing but specie in payment for lands. He tells me that he is about selling a great portion of his lands; that and some other negotiation will enable him to discharge a large portion of his debt to the United States before the expiration of the present quarter. Lenity towards him, therefore, might stimulate him to exertions, which severity might, perhaps, paralyze. I have, in the mean time, enjoined the closing of the land office until the bond is completed and returned. No land has been sold since the 29th ultimo.

Various are the reports of the late receiver's solvability; some say that he will pay the whole, whilst others, and the greater number, do not believe that he will pay 75 per cent. but they all concede that his intemperance has been his greatest crime, and that the loss of his money has been caused by that of his reason; and that, as in algebra, the minus on one side has been plus on the other. It is my belief that his forced confidence has been sadly abused. He, too, passes for an honest man. I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant, V. M. GARESCHÉ.

SIR: The department having received no duplicate of the monthly returns, required by its regulations, showing the transactions of your office, since your appointment, it becomes proper to call your immediate attention to this duty, and to inform you that promptitude and punctuality in this respect, and in the deposit of the public money, is to be regarded as paramount duties, and will be insisted on accordingly. I am, &c.

Receiver of the public money, Helena, Ark.

Helena, March 13, 1835.
DEAR SIR: Yours of the 30th January is before me; in reply to which I have to say, that, notwithstanding a want of promptness is somewhat manifest on my part, yet permit me to assure you that diligence on my part was, and shall on all similar occasions be used, in order to discharge promptly the functions of my office. But my apology is, at, owing to the river being closed, and no steamboats running, it was rendered entirely impracticable at an earlier day than I attended to it. Since my last deposit, I flatter myself that all promptness is been made use of. I have the honor to be your obedient servant, L. HAWKINS, receiver.

Treasury department, July 20, 1835.
SIR: I have received your letter of the 5th inst. enclosing register of sales and receipts for the months of April, May and June last. The transmission of these papers to this office is irregular, as will be seen by reference to your instructions. That error may be no further misapprehension in regard to the returns required, I have to state, for your information, that your quarterly accounts and vouchers, accompanied by the register of sales and necessary statements, are to be rendered to the general land office for settlement, immediately after the expiration of each quarter. Duplicate monthly returns, showing the balance on hand in the previous month, the aggregated receipts, and the several heads of disbursement in the current month, and the balance due, are to be rendered at the close of each month—one of which is to be sent to the secretary of the treasury, and the other to the commissioner of the general land office; and as a return of the latter description has been received on you since that for the month of January last, I just require your immediate attention to the omission.

The regular deposit of the whole of the public moneys, as prescribed by the regulations of the treasury, and the punctual transmission of your accounts and monthly returns, are paramount official duties. I trust you will so regard them, and by their strict observance, thus save the department the painful necessity of calling the attention of the executive to any future neglect in these respects. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the treasury.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant, L. HAWKINS, receiver.

Treasury department, February 28, 1835.

SIR: It has been intimated to the department that a practice prevails at some of the land offices of permitting entries and issuing certificates of purchase, without the payment of the purchase money at the time of the entry. Such a practice being unauthorised and highly reprehensible, I have deemed it proper to make known to you, that if it has been tolerated by you, it must immediately cease; and any repetition of it hereafter, coming to the knowledge of the department, will receive prompt and exemplary notice.

I cannot omit the occasion to impress upon you the necessity of a strict attention to, and punctual compliance with, the duties required of you in regard to the prompt deposit of the public moneys and transmission of your accounts and returns; and to say to you that the performance of those duties must be regarded as paramount to all other in your official station. SIR: Your returns for the months of October, November and December, have not been received. I regret that there should be any occasion to notice the neglect or accident, (as the case may be), in this important duty; and avail myself of this occasion to inform you that, unless your future returns are received at this department within the month next succeeding that for which the return is rendered, it will place me under the disagreeable necessity of reporting the fact to the executive, in order to comply with the general rule in this class of cases. Receiver's office, Cahaba, Feb. 19, 1836.

SIR: I received your of the 4th instant. The press of business at this office has prevented the returns to be forwarded as soon as they are required.

I wish to know if it would be advisable to suspend the entry of land a few days at a time, in order to forward the returns sooner. The returns you mention have been forwarded. I shall spare no pains to comply with the instructions from your department. Respectfully, your obedient servant, U. G. MITCHELL, R. P. M.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury department, March 3, 1836.

SIR: The suspension of the business of the land office, for the purpose of enabling you to make out your monthly returns, cannot be permitted. As the returns are intended to be mere exhibits of your cash transactions for each month, and are not necessarily subject to the delay of detailed book entries, I can perceive no sufficient reason for their being withheld longer than the first week in each succeeding month. SIR: Besides the neglect complained of in my letter of the 18th instant, I regret to be obliged to take notice of another, equally culpable: it is the omission to deposit the public money at the intervals prescribed in the instructions of the department by you since the 23th July last, although the balance on hand on the 31st August amounted to $62,910 1-3, as shown by your returns of that date. I must therefore claim your immediate attention to the subject. I am, &c.

SIR: I received yours of the 17th ultimo. I am truly sorry that any gentleman should find fault with the gentleman that I entrusted my office to in my illness. I can say to your department that Mr. Joseph Babcock is a gentleman of high standing and respectability; a man that is honest and correct in all his dealings; he stands as high as any gentleman in this section of country; and he would scorn to do any act derogatory to a gentleman. I now enclose you Mr. Babcock's statement, which I hope will be satisfactory to your department. Respectfully, your obedient servant, U. G. MITCHELL, sec. of public moneys.

Cahaba, February 3, 1837.

DEAR SIR: At your request, I have to state, in answer to Mr. Boykin, charged with having received of him paper money in payment for land, that such was not the fact. Mr. Boykin requested me to take paper; I told him I could not, but that he could probably get his money changed in town. He replied that it was a hard case if he had to pay a per cent, and then asked me if I would exchange with him; I answered that I had specie of my own, unconnected with the public money, he could have at the current rates specie was at that time selling at in town, which was five per cent. He agreed to this arrangement, paid me for the exchange, and the specie was deposited by me for his land. Now, this is the true history of the transaction with Mr. Boykin. I used no funds but my own, which, as a free citizen, I intend I have an undoubted right to do. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, JOSEPH BABCOCK.

SIR: Your letter of the 3d instant is received; in reply to which, I have to observe, that neither you nor any other person in your employment should deal in exchanges, inasmuch as it tends to produce complaints, and subjects you to suspicion, however upright your views may be. I hope it will not be allowed hereafter. I am, &c.

Your letter of the 4th of February has been received, and I should regret that any of my acts, for the future, should place you under the disagreeable necessity of informing the executive of my neglect of duty. I, like others, am liable to make mistakes and neglect my duty, but I believe seldom in comparison with others. Sir: Complaints have been made to the department that you do not reside at the land office; and that, in consequence, it frequently occurs that persons having business at the office are disappointed in seeing you, and obliged to return without being able to accomplish their business.

Sir: The punctual deposit of the public moneys at stated intervals being enjoined by the requisitions of the department, it becomes proper to invite your special attention to this duty, and to require that the amount in your hands be placed to the credit of the treasurer in one of the deposit banks. To enable you to do so with more convenience, and to save the expense of travel, you are authorised to procure a draft on any convenient deposit bank for the funds on hand, and to allow a reasonable premium for the same. The draft so procured can be sent to the bank on which it is drawn, and credited to the treasurer. I am, &c.

I am, &c. LEVI WOODBURY, Sec. of the treasury.

Receiver of public money, Tallahassee, Fla.

Tallahassee, March 21, 1837.

Sir: Herewith are transmitted my accounts current for the months of January and February, 1837. I some time since received a communication from you, drawing my attention to the transmission of my returns for November and December of the last year; but, as they had been some time forwarded, I did not think it necessary to answer that communication; but, upon reflection, I feel uncertain whether I transmitted to you the monthly returns due your office—indeed, it had escaped my recollection that they were due you. You will much oblige me by informing me for what months accounts current are due you; and I will transmit copies of them immediately after its receipt. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MATTHEW J. ALLEN, receiver.

Treasury department, January 13, 1838.

Sir: The acting quartermaster general has this day communicated to me a letter of lieutenant J. W. McGrath, dated the 2d instant, which states that you have refused to pay five drafts of $5,000 each, drawn by the treasurer in your favor of major J. B. Brant, United States army. If a satisfactory explanation of this refusal shall not be received by return of mail, it will be my imperative duty to lay the case before the president, for his final action upon your breach of official trust, to the great injury of the public service. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

M. J. Allen, esp.

Receiver of public money, Tallahassee.

Tallahassee, January 13, 1838.

Sir: I write this for the purpose of accounting to you for the fact of my having protested drafts on this office when there were funds in it to the credit of the treasury.

Before the suspension of specie payment, I received the notes of the two banks at this place, with an express understanding with their officers that it was to be considered as a special specie deposit. At the period of suspension at this place, the directors of those banks refused to recognise any difference between myself and their other creditors, on the ground that the officers of the banks were not authorised to make the contract which they did with me as receiver.

There remains, therefore, in those banks funds belonging to the treasury to the amount of about $30,000 (unavailable at the time) in specie. This sum is perfectly secure, and will be immediately paid on the resumption of specie payments. The banks offered drafts on the north to the holders of those drafts which have been protested, but they refused to receive any thing except the specie. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MATTHEW J. ALLEN, receiver.

P. S. January 19, 1838. I have just discovered that by neglect this letter was not transmitted when written, and that my communication of yesterday, in which I refer to it, has preceded it.

M. J. ALLEN.

Tallahassee, January 15, 1838.

Sir: Herewith are transmitted my weekly returns for the first and second weeks of this month. You will perceive that though (for the reasons assigned in my last communication to you) I had been compelled to protest drafts previously presented for want of specie funds, yet I have paid one, viz: No. 2,915 on war warrant No. 8,211, since, for $8,000, on the condition that the deficiency in bank (in specie) should be made up by my future deposits. Said deficiency is $5,640 12.

The balance on hand, $26,895 37½, is (as stated in my last) at present unavailable to the treasury, but perfectly safe; a part of the above balance is on hand in cancelled treasury notes, which will be transmitted as directed. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MATTHEW J. ALLEN, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, Feb. 2, 1838.

Sir: Your letters of the 13th and 15th instant are received. The department cannot recognise any such excuse as that assigned in your letter for the failure to meet its drafts in specie. The receipt of bank notes has been expressly prohibited. It is required that you will put yourself in a situation to pay all the money on hand in specie, if desired, by procuring it out in discharge of the drafts drawn on you if the holders demand it. I shall expect a full and satisfactory reply to this letter, by return of mail, in order that the whole subject may be submitted to the president. I am, &c.

Tallahassee, Jan. 24, 1838.

Sir: I this day received your communication of the 13th instant, requiring an explanation of the fact of my having refused to pay four drafts of $5,000 each, drawn on me in favor of J. B. Brant United States army.

I beg leave to refer you to my letter of the 13th instant, in which I have explained the reasons of my having been compelled to protest the draft above mentioned.

You will please inform me whether my explanation is satisfactory, and what course shall be pursued in regard to the public moneys on deposit, if the banks of this place. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MATTHEW J. ALLEN, receiver.

P. S. When in Washington last summer, I informed you personally of the situation of those funds. M. J. A.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. treasury.

Treasury department, Feb. 5, 1838.

Sir: Your letter of the 24th ultimo is received. When you told me last summer that you had depoaited your funds in one of the banks at Tallahassee, I stated that this department had given no instructions to that effect, and could not recognise the act. I further stated that you must, through the bank or otherwise, meet the drafts of the department in funds satisfactory to the holders of our drafts. I can see no other alternative consistent with the law.

It will be a misfortune if the bank neglect its duty to you, which may justify a little delay; but the most obvious course is, at once to take steps to enforce that duty, or to procure funds elsewhere to discharge your obligation to the government as speedily as possible. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
Matthew J. Allen, esp.
Receiver of public money, Tallahassee, Florida.

Tallahassee, Feb. 21, 1838.

Sir: In the belief that you will apply the corrective, I feel it my duty to apprise you of some things which the agents of the government are doing in this quarter.

Mr. M. J. Allen, receiver of public moneys, is in the practice of exacting an exorbitant discount upon the bank note currency of the country, when offered in payment of public lands. I have before me a memorandum of two cases which occurred on the 16th instant. In one of them the discount was fourteen, in the other fifteen per cent.; and the gentleman who gave the memorandum stated to me that he had paid the receiver as much as twenty per cent. You will perceive that the effect of the specie circular is to enrich your office, at the expense of the people.

On the 8th ultimo, the cashier of the Union bank of Florida received from lieutenant John Williamson a draft of the treasury of the United States, on the receiver, for eight thousand dollars. The directions of Williamson were, to demand specie, with which to pay the workmen employed in the construction of the arsenal at Mount Vernon. The receiver had not the specie, and the draft would have gone back protested, but that, on a promise by Allen to refund the specie, the draft was paid by the cashier of the bank. I presume that the drafts of the treasurer are predicated upon funds reported to be in the hands of the receiver. It is matter of complaint, that citizens have applied to enter lands, their money was refused, and, after having converted their bank notes into land office money, upon another application for their land they have found it entered by the receiver or by his clerk, H. R. W. Andrews. It is less than two years since either the receiver or his clerk has been in office. Of the previous pecuniary resources of the first, I have no information; but I have been informed that the clerk was not worth five hundred dollars. On the 12th instant, M. J. Allen subscribed to the new stock of the Union bank of Florida forty thousand dollars; and in name of Allen and Andrews, twenty thousand dollars; the subscription to be secured by mortgage of land.

Should you deem this communication worthy of notice, and will commission the surveyor general, or any person possessing your confidence, to investigate the matter, I will adduce the testimony in proof of what I have written. Very respectfully,
JOHN G. GAMBLE.

The president of the U. S.

Tallahassee, March 17, 1838.

Sir: Enclosed are answers to the charges preferred against me by John G. Gamble, as communicated in yours of the 8th instant.

I expect to be in Washington city about the middle of next month, when I will call upon you [and explain] some of the circumstances connected with those charges.

The cashier of the Union bank of Florida has told me that he expected a draft in their favor, on me, for the amount of public funds in their hands. You will please inform me whether this arrangement will be made, that, if otherwise, I may take steps to convert those funds into such as will suit the government, as I wish to pay the whole balance on hand as early as possible. Very respectfully,
M. J. ALLEN.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Tallahassee, March 17, 1838.

I divide the charges made by Mr. Gamble against me, as receiver, into three, and will answer them in the order made.

1. As regards my receiving bank notes at 15 per cent. discount.—I have, since about the 1st of January last, in a number of instances, (at the earnest request of persons wishing to secure lands which were unable to obtain the specie), received the notes of the Union and Central banks of Florida, and none other, at a discount of 15 per cent. and at no other rate. Before I agreed to do this, the people were giving 20 per cent. for specie, and it was often not to be had at that. I have received nothing but specie or treasury notes lately; nor shall I again, under any circumstances. What I have received has been merely for the accommodation of persons desirous of securing land, for I could make nothing by the operation, as it would cost within a fraction of the 15 per cent. to convert Union bank funds into specie; and I knew I was doing it at my own risk, being bound to the government for specie. John G. Gamble is president of the Union bank, (as, probably, you know), and is now charging 8 per cent. for exchange on the north, and the same for treasury notes, in his own obligations.

2. As regards the draft for $5,000 in favor of J. Williamson.—The statement of Mr. Gamble is substantially correct, and I have refunded the specie, as promised; but Mr. Gamble forgot to tell you that the Union bank had more than that amount of my funds in its hands, at that time, which he chose to call notes, contrary to justice and honor.

3. The charge that persons have applied to enter lands, their money being refused, and the land subsequently entered by myself or Mr. Andrews, is not fact, and I defy the evidence. Mr. Andrews is not my clerk, as Mr. Gamble very well knows; he is the clerk of Mr. Hackley, the register. I am attending to the duties of my own office. When away last summer, Mr. Robert B. Copeland was my agent.

The Union bank has lately bought out the Central bank of Florida; so that the amount in that bank, to my credit as receiver, is now due from the Union bank.
M. J. ALLEN, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

P. S. I invite the ablest and promptest investigation into my conduct as receiver, conscious that if I have erred, it has been through no improper motive.
M. J. ALLEN.

Tallahassee, April 13, 1838.

Sir: I have just received yours of the 2d current, saying it is proper I should submit such proof as may be in my power in support of the charges made against M. J. Allen, in my letter of the 21st of February last, addressed to the president of the United States.

Believing that you would direct an inquiry to be made here by some gentleman possessing the confidence of the department, and that Mr. Allen and the witnesses would be brought face to face, I have not deemed it necessary to obtain certificates to prove the charges. Indeed, I did not suppose they would be desired. Nor does your letter suggest a denial of any other than the charge in relation to the entry of lands which have been applied for by others.

The gentlemen whose names are associated with that charge reside more than sixty miles from this city. I will write to them this day to furnish the proof you ask; but the great irregularity of the mails may prevent a receipt of their answer for some weeks.

But, although you mention a denial of one charge only, your letter asks proof of "that and the other charges." I have accordingly written to the parties, (who I know did pay the discount on bank paper mentioned in my letter to the president), for their written statements. They, however, reside some seventy miles from Tallahassee, in an opposite direction.

I presume, however, that when Mr. Allen reaches Washington, he will not deny the practice of which he is charged, and that the delay of proof will be immaterial.

In support of the other two facts mentioned in my letter to the president, I have a certificate of the cashier of the Union bank of Florida.

I must here apprise you that, in practice, the two offices of register and receiver are virtually blended in one. The register, a most excellent and deserving man, had employed, as his clerk in the office, H. R. W. Andrews, to attend to the duties of the office. The receiver, Mr. Allen, subsequently employed the same Andrews as his clerk. Almost all of the business of both offices is done by this clerk. Both offices are kept in the same room; and, in practice, the check intended by law in the establishment of the two offices is useless. I am sure that the register is unaware of the impropriety of the course, and that he will apply a corrective upon your giving him a hint to that effect.

In conclusion, I will say that my action in this matter has been dictated by a sense of duty—a duty to be performed by some one, although unpleasant. With Mr. Allen I have never had an unkind word, nor have I had towards him an unkind feeling.
Very respectfully,
JOHN G. GAMBLE.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Union bank of Florida,
Tallahassee, April 14, 1838.

I hereby certify that the statement made by John G. Gamble, in his letter of the 21st of February last, addressed to the president of the United States, in relation to the draft of the treasury department in favor of lieutenant John Williamson on M. J. Allen, receiver of public moneys, for eight thousand dollars, is a true statement.

I also certify, that, as stated in said letter, M. J. Allen did, on the 12th of February last, subscribe, in his own name, for one hundred shares (or $40,000) of the stock of this bank, and in the name of Allen & Andrews, two hundred shares; making, together, a subscription of $60,000.

I also certify that since that time H. R. W. Andrews, the clerk and partner of said Allen, has subscribed for $3,000 more of said stock.

JOHN PARKHILL, cashier.

Tallahassee, April 18, 1838.

Sir: Since the date of mine of the 13th current, I have seen one of the gentlemen to whom I had been referred for proof "that, after refusing the money of applicants for land, the receiver had entered the same land himself;" and I find that my informant had misapprehended the facts of the case. The information was given in so positive a manner that I did not doubt its truth. But as there has certainly been mistake in one case, there may be mistake in the others; and I feel it my duty at once to apprise you of it, that Mr. Allen may not suffer from any untrue charge. The other charges, I understand, are not denied by him. Very respectfully,
JOHN G. GAMBLE.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, April 2, 1838.

Sir: Your letter of 17th ultimo is received, and Mr. Gamble has this day been written to, requesting him to forward any evidence in his power in support of his charges, and especially the third, which you deny, and which is very material.—When the evidence is received, the president will decide on the whole subject.

I understand that the bank has made an engagement to pay here $10,000 on your account. If they pay more, it will be credited. I trust that the drafts heretofore drawn on you will be promptly paid. In the mean time, it is desirable to get all your accounts arranged, as the department cannot consent to your leaving Tallahassee till the subject is adjusted. I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.
Receiver of public money, Tallahassee, Florida.

Washington, April 19, 1838.

Sir: Enclosed are two statements: one made by H. R. W. Andrews, and attested by R. J. Hackley, (the register at Tallahassee), going to disprove the third charge of Mr. Gamble; and one from H. R. W. Andrews, showing that my receiving bank notes at 15 per cent. discount was a relief to the people of 5 per cent. instead of being oppressive, as charged by Mr. Gamble.

You will perceive, by reference to the statement made below, (which you will find correct), that I did not leave Tallahassee on account of the charges preferred against me; but to transact important business in New York, which required my personal presence. I shall return to Tallahassee next month.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. J. ALLEN, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

CHRONICLE.

A man of a thousand. A citizen of Dorchester, in Massachusetts, and not the wealthiest in the town, has paid to a baker in that place the sum of $1,852 15, within the last five years, for bread, which has regularly been distributed to the poor and infirm in the neighborhood. This is but one item, and the recipients of this bounty believe that he has bestowed double that sum in wood, provisions, and other necessities, to them and others, who are sick and unfortunate.

Cost of rail roads. The cost of sandy rail roads is thus stated in a late report of the directors of the Housatonic rail road:

	Per mile.
Cost of the Boston and Worcester road	$37,000
" Boston and Providence road	42,000
" North and Worcester road,	22,000
" Western rail road	34,000
" New Jersey do.	45,000
" Camden and Amboy	40,000
" Columbia and Philadelphia	40,000
" Alleghany and Portage	45,000
" Albany and Schenectady,	61,000
" Utica and Schenectady,	19,000
" Sennington	52,000
" Hartford and New Haven, about	20,000
" Housatonic, about	15,000

Bank robbers arrested. About a year since, a package of bank bills amounting to $6,300, belonging to the Ocean bank at Newburyport, and the Powow bank at Salisbury, Mass., was stolen from a small trunk in which it was sent to one of the Boston banks. The robbery was ascertained to have been committed by an Englishman, named Freeman, and others. Pursuit was made, but Freeman escaped, and sailed for England in the packet ship Westminster, where he arrived in safety with the vessel, and landed in England till March, when he returned with several accomplices, well furnished with all kinds of instruments for burglarious purposes.

The London police officers having full information of the designs of these villains, communicated the fact to lord John Russell, from whose office despatches were sent over hither to the British consul, and by him laid before the police by the high constable Hays, who also had letters from the Great Western, advising him of the fact of Freeman, under the name of Arnold or Colard, with his wife and nephew, named Arnel, alias Ager or Aggett or Eregt, having sailed in the ship Gladiator for this port. The arrival of the Great Western before the Gladiator, brought the intelligence in season to be successfully acted on, and high constable Hays having made arrangements with the keeper of the telegraph, to announce the Gladiator as soon as she appeared below, had his corps of officers, consisting of Homans, Sparks, B. J. Hays, and G. F. Hays, ready to pounce upon, and secure the villains as soon as they should come within their grasp.

The vessel arrived on Wednesday night of last week, and the next morning Freeman, whose real name is Colard, his wife and nephew Arnel alias Aggett was arrested. Colard is to be sent to Boston, on a requisition from Mr. Everett. The nephew is detained here, and the woman is discharged.

[N. Y. Ez.]

On the 19th inst. sixteen steamboats and seven schooners arrived at or departed from the harbour of Cleveland, on Lake Erie.

Dr. Wylie, president of Indiana college, had charges preferred against him in the legislature of Indiana, for mismanagement of the funds of that institution, and for other offences. The legislature ordered the subject to the board of directors, who, at the instance of the prosecutor, Dr. Foster, agreed to conduct the case with the customary regulations of a court of justice. The prosecutor, and the two gentlemen who endorsed the charges, were members of the board. Dr. Wylie was unanimously acquitted, one of the endorsers resigned his seat in the trial, and the other, with the prosecutor, joined in the verdict.

James river and Kanawha company. The canal has been doing a good business since it was opened. We have been favored by the toll-gatherer with a statement of the amount of produce brought down, and merchandise carried up the James river canal, and the amount of tolls received, from the opening of the canal, (January 12th), to the 13th of April, 1839, both inclusive:

Descending.

2,272 hhds. tobacco.
115 hhds. steam.
107,704 bushels wheat.
61,932 barrels flour.
196,900 lbs. miscellaneous articles.
625,800 lbs. manufactured tobacco.
300 tons bar and pig iron.
316 cords wood.
85,000 feet plank.
81,514 bushels coal.

Ascending.

2,325,500 lbs. merchandise.
2,066 sacks salt.
1,113 hhds. liquors.
351 tons iron.
1,533 plaster.
51,033 bushels corn, oats, &c.
Amount of tolls $16,716 15.

The company are making the necessary arrangements to confer their improvements. They hope, that it will be in their power to complete their work up to Lynchburg, by the 1st of January next. They are about to exert an effort for the same purpose. Thus the tolls will be greatly increased, and the confidence of the public and the legislature positively confirmed.

Pere le Chaise. I have wandered thro' that far-famed cemetery, that overlooks from its mournful brow, the gay and crowded metropolis of France; but among the many inscriptions upon those tombs, I read scarcely one—I read—to state so striking a fact with numerical exactness—I read not more than four or five inscriptions in the whole of Pere le Chaise, which made me feelingly refer to a future lie of I read of those cold marble tombs, the lamentations of bereavement, in every affecting variety of phrase. On the tomb of youth, it was written, that "its broken hearted parents, who spent their days in tears, and their nights in anguish, had laid down here their treasure and their hope." On the proud miser's tomb, where friendship, companionship, love, had deposited their holy relics, it was constantly written, "her husband inconsolable," "his disconsolate wife;" "a brother left alone and unhappy has raised this monument;" but seldom, so seldom, that scarcely ever did the mournful record close with a word of hope; scarcely at all it would be read amidst the marble silence of a future lie of the dead, that there is the beyond, and that surviving friends hope for a blessed meeting again, where death comes no more.

[Rev. Orville Dewey.]

The great bell of Moscow. Much has been said and written in relation to this wonderful mechanical production; and as there are many opinions afloat about the actual size of it, we subjoin a correct estimate of its weight and cost. Its actual Russian weight is 13,337 poods, 434,773 pounds English gross weight. It is 10 feet in the diam. of the upper Ann, and cost a sum equal to $275,500 dollars. The sound of it rather amazed and deafened, than delighted the inhabitants of Moscow. Its real value is probably double its original cost, for every one ambitious to contribute towards it, threw gold or silver into the furnaces containing the metal, which were four in number. The geographical dimensions are as follows: The piece by which the bell was hung to the beam, from the top of the bell to the beam, 3 feet 1 inch; length of the bell, from the beam to the bottom, 21 feet 4 1/2 inches; diameter of the bell at the top, 7 feet 4 3/4 inches; diameter at the bottom, 22 feet 4 3/4 inches.

The Army and Navy Chronicle states that, the opinion of the court of inquiry, at St. Louis, in the case of lieut. colonel J. B. Brant, deputy quartermaster general, has not been promulgated, but its tenor may be inferred from the fact that a general court martial has been ordered to assemble at St. Louis, on the 15th June, for his trial.

The court will be composed of Bvt. brig. gen. John E. Wool, inspector gen.
 Bvt. brig. gen. W. K. Armstrong, col. 3d arty.
 Bvt. col. John E. Walbach, lieut. col. 1st arty.
 Col. George Croghan, inspector general.
 Col. Joseph W. Taylor, commissary of subs.
 Bvt. col. Wm. S. Foster, lieut. col. 4th infantry.
 Col. Truman Cross, ass't. quartermaster general.
 Major Henry K. Craig, ordnance.
 Major Matthew M. Payne, 2d arty.
 Major Hartman Bache, corps top. engs.
 Bvt. major Levi Whiting, 4th arty.
 Major Joseph F. Taylor, commissary of subs.
 Captain David L. Vinton, ass't. quartermaster.
 Captain Wm. C. De Hart, 2d arty. judge advocate.

Michigan. The legislature of Michigan adjourned sine die on the 21st ult. after a session of 15 weeks. The following appropriations in aid of internal improvements, were made during the session: To the Southern rail road, $100,000; Central rail road, $100,000; Northern rail road, $100,000; Clinton and Kalamazoo canal, $300,000; improvement of St. Joseph's river $50,000; Grand river, $25,000. The state bank of Michigan have been located by law at Detroit, Pontiac, Mount Clemens, Monroe, Adrian, Ann Arbor, Jackson, Marshall and Niles.

The appropriations for works of internal improvement, though greatly reduced from the sums originally proposed, and amounting in all to no more than $350,000, are yet thought, by the Detroit Advertiser, to exceed the present means of the state. The whole of the balance in the treasury, $7,000,000, amounting to upwards of $500,000, is said to be unavailing and unconvertible, in the Michigan state bank; and the three succeeding instalments of the five million loan, will be required to meet existing liabilities, in the progress of the public works, and in reference to the ordinary expenses of the state government. In this state of things the Detroit Advertiser says: "We only perceive one mode, which we can perceive, for the pecuniary embarrassments under which the state, and the people thereof, are laboring, is time and retrenchment. It will go hard with our spoil-loving rulers—but they must come to it. Necessity is a stern master. They have exhausted the treasury—exhausted the people—exhausted their credit—now they are about to become economists from sheer necessity. It is time they should."

A few days before the adjournment of the legislature, gov. Mason sent a message to the house of representatives, vetoing the bill "for the relief of certain scultors on the state lands."

Steam vessels of war. We learn from the New York American, that the board which have been siting in Washington, to devise and recommend plans and models for steam vessels of war, have determined to build two steam frigates over 1,600 tons burden, to carry ten guns each, six two bomb cannon, and eight forty-two pounders. One is to be constructed at the Brooklyn navy yard, under the superintendance of Mr. Hart. The other it is supposed, at Philadelphia.

Gen. Wool, accompanied by lieut. Macomb, as assistant, passed up the Mississippi on the 7th inst. on his way to Fort Gibson, having already inspected the posts on Red river. [Army and Navy Chronicle.]

Mr. Verplanck has made a report to the senate of New York, on internal improvements. It proposes expenditures as follows:—

For the Erie canal, including what has already been expended	$24,000,000
For the lateral canals, including what has already been expended and appropriated	8,000,000
For rail roads,	12,000,000

Present debt,

	52,000,000

Deducting amount already expended or appropriated, and included in the present debt,

	5,000,000
Balance,	$17,000,000

Which will be the total amount of the public debt at the completion of all the public works.

The "Wetumpka trading company," a free banking association at Wetumpka, in Alabama, has gone off bodily. The president, directors and company, have absconded to Texas, with all the property of the concern, upon which they could lay their hands. The Wetumpka paper says, that "the systematic adroitness with which they have swindled the community out of $25,000 to $40,000, puts Dr. Dyott and the Wild Cat banks at defiance."

Charles P. Clinch has been appointed deputy collector of the port of New York.

The Alexandria Gazette of yesterday states, that CHARLES BERRY, esq. late of that town, having professed his belief in the immortality of the soul, after leaving by his will several legacies to his friends, has devised the residue, being the bulk of his estate, to his executors, in trust, for such purposes as they may consider as promising to be most beneficial to the town and trade of Alexandria.

St. Louis. The population of St. Louis, Mo. is supposed, at this time, to fall little, if at all, short of 20,000. This number we must remember only includes the inhabitants of the city proper. Including the suburbs, it is supposed that the population would exceed 30,000. Several new churches are in progress in the city, as we learn from the Republican of the 12th inst. The Second Presbyterian church have commenced a building of handsome style and finish, on the corner of Fifth and Walnut streets. The Methodist Episcopal church have purchased for $3,000, a lot on the corner of Fifth and Second streets, of which they propose to erect a more spacious building than that which they now possess, and which, though among the largest in the city, is found insufficient for their accommodation. The Catholics are also erecting a new and spacious church in Soular's Addition of St. Louis; and several other buildings, as schools of worship, besides the mentioned ones, are in contemplation; and no doubt, by the high prices of materials and labor, as the Republican remarks, will prevent the immediate commencement and early completion of all or most of these buildings.

The state bank of Michigan. The legislature have elected the following gentlemen directors of the state bank of Michigan, viz. Edward Mundy, John Biddle, John S. Barry, Robert Stewart, B. F. H. Withersell, Zina Fischer, Charles Noble, and G. W. Jermaine.

The Detroit Advertiser, in a recent issue, says: "From the political character of these gentlemen, it will be seen that the legislature have carried out, in the choice of directors, the spirit of compromise in which the bank bill was conceived and enacted. This fact, together with the high character of the directors, both at home and abroad, gives assurance that no ordinary circumstances will prevent the bank from being put in successful operation, and answering the warmest expectations of its friends."

The Michigan house of representatives, have postponed indefinitely, the senate's bill, to remove the capitol of that state from Detroit to Marshall.

A relic of antiquity. Mr. R. S. Prescott, of this city, in searching the bell, in what is called the Yorkshire quarry, a few rods from the Derby turnpike, a few days since, turned up from a deep burrow, an ancient silver coin, of about the size of a half dollar, which, on being cleansed, was found to be in good preservation. It is covered with Hebrew characters, (as we are informed, not having seen it), and bears the date of 1000, in Arabic script. The Hebrew coins of the reign of 610 years ago. It is a mystery how it came there, as the land is in a suburb of the town, was never built upon, and for many years was not cultivated. We hope some learned antiquarian will give us a correct description of it. [New Haven Herald.]

RHODE ISLAND. The votes at the recent election in this state having been counted, it appears that seven senators, all whigs, have been chosen. Samuel W. King is chosen by a majority of 528 over all others; Hezekiah Bosworth by 100; Jonathan Reynolds by 114; Ezekiel Fowler by 100; William S. Browning by 116; Olney Whipple by 129; Henry Aldrich by 165.

There are still three vacancies in the senate—but as a quorum has been chosen, no new election will take place, and the first senator, Samuel W. King, will officiate as governor. The whig majority in grand committee is 17. John Sterne, the administration candidate, has been chosen general treasurer by a majority of 38; Henry Brown, secretary by a majority of 902; Albert C. Greene, attorney general without opposition; both whigs.

CONNECTICUT. The spring session of the legislature of this state commenced last week, being the first meeting since the late general election. The strength of parties in the house of representatives was tried upon the election of a speaker. The votes were for Wm. W. Boardman (whig) 109; for Chas. Woodward (V. B.) 74; scattering 3; showing a whig preponderance of thirty or forty votes. John A. Rockwell (whig) was elected president pro tem. of the senate.

Governor Ellsworth's message is very temperate and guarded in its allusions to national politics, but presents his views against the sub-treasury scheme, very fully and frankly. It develops an admirable financial condition of the "land of steady habits." Connecticut owes nobody a farthing, and has $21,000,000 in her treasury, beside a school fund of $2,000,000, yielding an annual revenue of $104,000. The state paupers cost $1,700 a year for their maintenance; but the state prison earns a net sum of $3,000 or over.

LEGISLATURE OF NEW YORK. The legislature of this state adjourned on Tuesday at 12 o'clock, sine die. A slip from the Albany Argus says:

The number of laws passed during the session is large, 390; but the acts of public importance may be said to lie in a nutshell. Indeed we recollect at this moment only the acts allowing the issue of small bills; concerning foreign bank notes; concerning the compensation of the clerks of the supreme court and registers of clerks in chancery; and to preserve the purity of elections, as of general importance; the two latter of which passed at the last moment.

The bills in aid of the several rail road companies, having been held by the assembly by a preconceived political arrangement, until within a few days of the adjournment, and then pushed through indiscriminately, and thrown upon the senate in the midst literally of all the public business of the session, that body did not find time to take them up, nor inclination to allow them to rush through, in an accumulated mass, without the opportunity to discriminate among the applications, or to give such as were meritorious the consideration the subject demanded. The house held possession of them nearly four months, and then threw them upon the senate under the circumstances we have stated. They were not called up in the latter body.

The bill to authorise the construction of the New York, and Erie rail road by the state, was rejected in the senate, and after full discussion in both houses—the bill not being in a shape to receive the votes of all who were in favor of the measure in some form.

The senate rose and reported on the bill to reduce the size and cost of the Erie canal enlargement to six feet by sixty, on Monday; but were not able, under the pressure of other matters, to go again into committee on the subject. But if the question had been brought to a vote, we do not doubt that a decided majority were in favor of this saving to the state of some $500,000.

The bills to extend (for five years) the charters of the Long Island bank, and the bank of Rochester, became laws.

The assertion of the Argus, that "the bills in aid of the several rail road companies having been held in the assembly, by a preconceived political arrangement, and then pushed through indiscriminately," is without a shade of foundation in truth—it is well known that these bills were denounced, and determined to be rejected in a caucus of the ex-regency held last week. The federal loco focus in the senate have "taken the responsibility" of defeating these internal improvement bills, as they did the election of United States senator, and the Jesuitism of the Argus will not blind the eyes of the people to this violation of their rights.

MR. WEBSTER IN BOSTON. Mr. Webster's personal friends in Boston gave him a private dinner on Monday evening, at the Tremont house. About 150 of them sat down to a rich feast, well arranged and prepared with great good taste. The dinner was rather private than public—a few only of the many among Mr. Webster's friends being present. Among the speakers were Mr. Webster, governor Everett, Mr. Lathrop and the rev. Mr. Winslow. Mr. Webster took occasion to remark that he had no thought of changing his place of residence after his return from England as had been intimated in some of the papers; Boston had been his home for 23 years. He went there a young man and was now too old a man to change his social relations, and leave old friends for new ones. Boston was his home, and in this world he desired no other. The Tremont dinner was intended as a sort of adieu meeting to Mr. Webster prior to his leaving for Europe. The feast was both intellectual and social, and the meeting and parting was conducted in the best spirit.

FROM FLORIDA. We learn from Tampa Bay, says the Tallahassee Floridian of the 4th inst, that a short time since the hostile Indians under Nhe-Stoco Mata, principal chief of the Tallahassee, with one hundred warriors, went into Tampa and carried off all the Indian prisoners at that post. They likewise returned the night following, crossed the river and reconnoitred the post and barracks. —

They refuse to come in to treat with the whites, and left word with a white man whom they held prisoner during one night, that if gen. Macomb wished to treat with them he must come to their camp. It is said they are unwilling to leave the territory until better satisfied of the situation of their friends who have emigrated; that they will retire down the peninsula and defend themselves until overpowered. No depredations have been committed recently, and they declare their intention to remain peaceable unless disturbed by the whites. We have no intimation of gen. Macomb's further movements.

COTTON SPECULATIONS. The New Orleans papers have lately contained many paragraphs on the subject of very extensive dealings in cotton by a single individual, the initials of whose name only are given, (V. N.), but who seems to have alarmed the merchants, who have in turn arrested his operations, and, in doing so, arrested him, and prevented his loaded vessels from leaving port. The following is the latest paragraph on the subject from New Orleans that we have seen:

From the Louisianaian, April 30.

The great speculator. The operations of this individual have occasioned great embarrassment in the market. An immense quantity of cotton is temporarily thrown out of the way of purchasers, in consequence of being seized by the sheriff. Some of the cotton factors have been severely distressed to meet their engagements, having depended for that purpose on the punctual payment in cash of the sums due them by the speculator. Many ships of the first class, laden or partly laden with cotton on his account, have been detained. In fact, the commercial part of the community is thrown into excitement and confusion by all these circumstances, and it will require the lapse of some time, and we fear, a long course of judicial proceedings, to restore affairs to their former calm.

On this subject the New York American of Monday last has the following paragraph, which throws more light upon the matter:

"Mr. Vincent Nolte, well known in this community and in New Orleans, has recently been purchasing cotton on speculation very largely—from 80 to 40,000—in the latter city. When the accounts by the Great Western reached New Orleans and sent cotton up, those who had not before ventured as purchasers began to investigate the more daring purchases of Mr. Nolte, and by hints and innuendoes, as is said, occasioned distrust about his ability to comply with his contracts.

"This led to withholding deliveries, seizing ships loaded, and finally to holding Mr. Nolte himself to bail, in which state things were at the last accounts. We have confidence that Mr. Nolte will carry through his undertaking successfully, and, we hope, profitably to himself."

LATEST FROM TEXAS. The packet Columbia, 43 tons from Galveston, arrived at New Orleans on the 30th ult.

They had a splendid ball on the 22d ult, in honor of the victory of San Jacinto.

An attempt was made on the 25th, by a couple of young bloods to fight a duel, near Galveston, but they were interrupted by the sheriff.

A large cargo of ice had arrived at Galveston, and the erection of the house to keep it in during the season, is announced.

The Civilian and Houston Intelligencer continue at loggerheads. They cast insinuations at each other and call pretty hard names.

UPPER CANADA. Recall of sir George Arthur. The Hamilton Express, of the 27th ult, has the following postscript:

"We have good authority for stating that sir George Arthur has been recalled:

Outrage on the Stephen Girard. The following communication from gov. Arthur, was sent by lieutenant Jones, of the British army, as special messenger, to the collector at Cleveland, in explanation of the recent insult offered to an American vessel in the waters of the Welland canal:

Government house, Toronto, 25th April, 1839.

Sir:—An account has just reached the lieutenant-governor, that a gross insult was offered by some militia on Monday last, to the master of the American schooner Stephen Girard, of Oswego, while that vessel was lying at Port Colborne, on her way to Cleveland. No official report of this reprehensible proceeding has yet been received; but by a letter from the collector at Port Colborne, to a director of the Welland canal, it would appear that some militia men, in a state of intoxication, boarded the vessel, cut the pennant halyards, and by threatening language compelled the master to throw them on shore. They also endeavored to impede the progress of the Stephen Girard, through the canal, and in this attempt her jolly-boat was materially injured.

His excellency trusts that it can hardly be necessary for him to express the great concern he feels on this occasion; nor is it his wish to palliate an offence, the commission of which has excited his highest displeasure.

He hopes, however, that you will do every thing in your power to allay the angry feelings to which such an outrage is calculated to give rise; and by the publication of a true statement of the facts of the case, to divest it of that false coloring with which it will probably at first be represented. It will, likewise, perhaps be regarded by you as a part of your duty to direct the attention of your countrymen to those lawless and cruel aggressions on this province, which have provoked an act of a retaliatory character from a few drunken soldiers; and his excellency doubts not but that every proper means will be employed by the public functionaries of Cleveland to compose and tranquilize the public mind. In the same spirit he authorizes me to assure you, that the perpetrators of this outrage shall be visited by the severest punishment our laws will permit; and that such effectual means shall be immediately adopted to prevent its recurrence as will enable your vessels to pass through the canals without the slightest danger of interruption or annoyance of any kind. For your further satisfaction on this point, his excellency has directed an intelligent officer to proceed instantly to Cleveland, to afford every explanation that can reasonably be required on the subject of my present communication.

I have only to add, that it is the particular desire of the lieutenant-governor that the master of the Stephen Girard should come here to substantiate the charges against the militiamen, who are now under confinement, and that he may rely on experiencing protection and kind treatment from us. I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient, humble servant.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM CHINA. Suspension of trade—Mob law in the Celestial Empire.—By the ship York, from Canton, we have advices to Jan 12th. The smuggling of opium had continued to increase until Dec. 3d, when 203 cattie being about to be landed in front of the foreign factories at Canton they were seized, and the foreign trade entirely suspended.

The Coolies who were arrested accused Mr. Innes, a British merchant, of having sent money to Wampoa for the purchase of the opium, and Mr. Talbot of the American house of Talbot, Olyphant & Co. of having imported the same in the ship Thos. Perkins. The hatches were ordered to be sealed, and Innes and Talbot to be expelled. The hong merchant Poonhoyqua, who was security for the Perkins, was exposed in the pillory.

Several communications may be passed between the chamber of commerce of the foreign residents and the governor. Mr. Talbot declared his innocence, and that the Perkins brought nothing but rice. The chamber remonstrated at the treatment towards him and the hong merchants.

Mr. Innes was directed to leave immediately or his house should be pulled down. On the 12th Dec. matters grew worse in consequence of the attempt of the authorities to insult the foreign merchants by stranding in front of the factories a Chinese accused of smuggling opium. An immense crowd gathered on the square, and the foreign residents and the crews of the vessels resisting the execution, the Coolies consented to remove the instruments and criminal to another place. The crowd up to this time were friendly, but the foreigners indiscreetly struck back some of the Chinese with canes, the mob turned on them, and pelted them with showers of stones.

The old hong merchant Howqua now appeared on the scene, and beckoned to the foreigners to retreat, which they did, into the imperial hong. The mob, amounting to some 8,000, tore up the palisades, and did much injury to the verandahs and doors of the factories by brick bats, stones, &c. The military were finally called in and the mob dispersed.—The troops, with their camp fires and gorgeous lanterns, bivouacked on the square during the night. Capt. Elliott, superintendent of the British trade, arrived in the course of the night from Wampoa, with 120 of the crews of the shipping. The chamber of commerce on the 14th remonstrated against the execution of criminals on the factory ground. The governor replied that the ground was the emperor's, the executions should go on if the smuggling did not cease. A few days after his excellency published an order declaring Mr. Talbot innocent. Mr. Innes went to Macao.

Captain Elliott, at a meeting of the foreign merchants, chiefly Americans, admitted the foreigners were engaged in the smuggling, and declared that in regard to the British he should put a stop to it, as it was disgraceful, and would lose them the entire trade with China. He issued a notice prohibiting all British boats engaged in the smuggling to return to the Boeca Tigris, and enjoining respect to Chinese authorities, &c.

The trade was re-opened Jan. 1.

Numerous brilliant meteors were seen at Canton by the missionary, the rev. Dr. Parker, on the 9th and 13th November. The doctor had been honored with a request to prescribe for the Namby.

Business is not yet re-established since the blow it received by the troubles.

The hong merchants have determined to give no security for ships until the captains and consignees give security that they are not engaged in smuggling opium. As the captains and consignees cannot give this security, the residents have petitioned to have the hong merchants compelled to give security as before, which request would probably be granted. The prices for the new teas were not yet fixed.

STEAMBOAT GLASGOW. We find in the St. Louis Bulletin of the 26th April the following particulars of the destruction by fire of the steamboat William Glasgow:

The William Glasgow, captain Littleton, on her passage from Pittsburg to this port, while in the Mississippi about 15 miles from the mouth of the Ohio, on Tuesday last took fire in the hold, and was consumed to the water's edge. Such was the rapid progress of the flames, that nothing was saved but a trifling amount of baggage by a few of the passengers, and the books of the clerk's office.

There was on board at the time upwards of a hundred passengers, consisting chiefly of emigrants, destined for Illinois and Missouri. Many of these emigrants had with them considerable sums of money in specie, most of which was lost. One person lost in specie $3,500; and the whole amount is conjectured to be not less than $15,000, besides furniture and other property. In truth, many families are literally beggared. The steamer North Star, which arrived here this morning, bringing the above intelligence—succeeded, at great risk to herself, in rescuing a number from the burning wreck, and brought to this place about one half of the passengers, some of whom are in a very destitute and pitiable condition. The Glasgow had on board two hogheads and some kegs of powder, which fortunately did not explode until the persons on board had made their escape.

The confusion and trepidation of the passengers no doubt in this case, as in all similar ones, occasioned a needless abandonment of property, and, we are pained to add, the loss of one if not two lives. A German, named Henry Brink, in the desperation of the moment, leaped into the water and perished, leaving a widow and two children. The captain and a portion of the passengers remained behind, without, however, the faintest prospect of recovering any thing, as the fire and explosion have completely annihilated both boat and cargo.

WAR. War has been well called a destroyer—it reverts upon blood and treasure. The mighty inroads which it makes upon the finances of a nation, may be seen by the following table of the expenditures of the British government for six successive years, ending with the battle of Waterloo, which gave peace to Europe:

1811	92,190,699
1812	103,421,583
1813	120,952,667
1814	116,843,859
1815	116,491,061
	£639,009,955

A very large proportion of this 639 millions of money, wrung from the people of Great Britain, and irretrievably lost, was squandered in prosecuting the peninsular war!

SPECIAL MISSION TO ENGLAND.

From the Globe of yesterday.

The president has determined not to send a special minister to England at present, and we are permitted to publish the following extracts from the correspondence between Lord Palmerston and Mr. Stevenson as explanatory of the views of the two governments upon the subject.

[EXTRACT.]

Mr. Stevenson to Lord Palmerston.

Lord Palmerston has probably already been apprised that, among the proceedings of the congress of the United States at the close of its late session provision was made for a special mission to Great Britain, in relation to the subject of this controversy, should it, in the opinion of the president be deemed advisable to appoint one. In virtue of this provision, the undersigned has now the honor of acquainting his lordship that the president of the United States (desirous of conforming to the indicated wishes of congress) has directed him to announce to her majesty's government his willingness to institute such a mission, and change the place of negotiation, which had heretofore been agreed on, from Washington to London; provided it should be agreeable to her majesty's government to do so, and would, in their opinion, be the means of hastening or facilitating the final adjustment of the controversy.

In submitting this proposition of the president, which he has now the honor of doing, the undersigned flatters himself that Lord Palmerston will not fail to appreciate the motives which have influenced the president in making it, and see in it, not only an additional proof of his desire to terminate amicably this protracted and painful controversy, but the earnest solicitude which he feels to place the relations of the two countries beyond the reach of those casualties by which, in the present state of things, they are so liable to be injured.

To this proposition, the undersigned has been directed respectfully to urge the early consideration of her majesty's government.

The importance and urgency of bringing to a speedy close the pending negotiation, and the existing embarrassments in which the two countries are now placed, will, the undersigned persuades himself, sufficiently explain the earnestness with which he has presented the subject upon the consideration of Lord Palmerston; and, in closing this note, he can but indulge the confident hope that the final determination of her majesty's government will not only correspond with the just expectations which are entertained by his own government, but that it will be the means of leading to such an adjustment of the whole controversy as may be compatible with the just rights and honor of the two countries, and the peaceful and friendly relations, upon the preservation of which so essentially depend the prosperity and happiness of both.

(Signed) A. STEVENSON.

Portland Place, March 30, 1839.

[EXTRACT.]

Lord Palmerston to Mr. Stevenson.

Her majesty's government consider the communication which Mr. Stevenson had been instructed to make to the undersigned upon the subject of the proposed mission of a special envoy to England as a fresh proof of the friendly disposition of the president, and of the frankness which it is hoped will always characterise the intercourse between the two governments; and her majesty's government hastens to reply to that communication in the same spirit and with the same frankness. The president is desirous of knowing whether such a mission would be agreeable to her majesty's government, and whether it would, in their opinion, be the means of hastening or facilitating the final adjustment of the controversy. That it would always be agreeable to her majesty's government to receive any person enjoying the confidence of the president, and sent hither to treat of matters affecting the interests of both countries, the undersigned is persuaded that the government of the United States cannot possibly doubt; but her majesty's government do not see that in the present state of the negotiation such a mission could be likely to hasten or to facilitate the adjustment of the controversy. It was the wish of the British government in 1831, when the award of the king of the Netherlands was given, that any further negotiation which might be necessary upon this subject, should be carried on in London. But the government of the United States expressed a strong desire that the seat of negotiation should be in Washington, and the British government acquiesced in that arrangement.

Now the question at present to be considered is whether any advantages would arise from transferring the negotiation to London.

Undoubtedly if the state of the negotiation were such that the two governments were at liberty to arrive at a final and immediate settlement of the controversy, by a conventional division of the territory in dispute, her majesty's government would be of opinion that advantage might arise from the mission proposed to be sent to this country by the government of the United States. But Maine having refused to agree to a conventional line, and another reference to arbitration being in the present state of the matter out of the question; the only course left open for the two governments, with a view to arrive at a solution of the controversy, is to cause a fresh survey of the territory to be made, for the purpose of endeavoring to trace upon the ground itself, the line of the treaty of 1783; and the undersigned is sending to Mr. Fox, for the consideration of the resident, a draft of a convention for the purpose of regulating the proceedings of the commissioners to be appointed by the two governments for this end; and her majesty's government hope that the report these commissioners will either settle the question at issue, or furnish to the two governments information as may lead directly to a settlement. But as being the present state of the matter, it appears to her majesty's government that a special envoy now sent from America, would not, on his arrival in this country, find any thing to discuss or to settle in connection with this question, a discussion or settlement of which could be of importance commensurate with the expectations which such a mission would naturally excite on both sides of the Atlantic; and that if, in consequence thereof, the envoy so sent were to return to the United States, before the two governments had fully settled the whole question, a disappointment might thereby be created which, however unfounded it would be, might, nevertheless produce bad effects in both countries.

Her majesty's government having thus stated, without reserve, their impression upon this matter, we have the decision of it to the president; and the undersigned has only further to assure Mr. Stevenson that her majesty's government are very sensible to spirit of friendly confidence, which has dictated Mr. Stevenson's communication.

(Signed,) PALMERSTON.

FROM MEXICO.

The New Orleans True American, of May 1, announces the arrival of the U. S. cutter Wood- y, with $50,000 in specie, from Tampico, from which port she sailed on the 20th ult. From the paper we learn that the government forces were leagues from that place. Both parties are re- sented as wanting strength.

Mexia was at a small place on the coast, 40 miles N. of Tampico. He had 1,700 troops, and was sent to march on Puebla. At Tampico the town is quiet and in possession of the federalists.— There were about 1,000 men under arms and the town was being fortified.

The only American vessel in the harbor was the U. S. sloop U. S. Stead, which was at anchor on the side, and would remain there for the protection of the American residents. Mexia will not make attempt on Vera Cruz. It is rather too well garrisoned to resist any force he can bring against him to hope to take it.

The commerce of Vera Cruz has been resumed. There were about 1,200 government troops on duty in the city. The French squadron consisting of three men-of-war, were lying at Sacrificios, and the Island. The English had one sloop of war, and under the castle. The U. S. ship Ontario at Sacrificios, com. Shubrick, with the Macean, was on his way to Vera Cruz. The Yan- na was at Laguna, and the Levant at Matanzas.

When the federal army left Tampico, they chartered four American vessels, then lying in that port, for seven hundred dollars was advanced to each vessel for its services for twelve days. They all sailed to Tampico with troops and munitions of war. On the arrival (on the 11th day after their departure), the schooner Andrew Jackson, of Modoc discharged her soldiers and one field piece, then put to sea, as it is reported in Tampico, three brass field pieces, 500 stand of arms, and a large quantity of fixed ammunition. This loss will doubt greatly effect the operations of general Mexia, as he depended on these arms to equip such recruits as might arrive from the interior. The Louisiana of May 24, has the following relation of the treaty of peace and indemnity between Mexico and France:

The name of the most Holy Trinity— the president of the republic of Mexico, and his majesty the king of the French, desirous of termiinating the war which unfortunately prevails between the two countries, have chosen for their plenipotentiaries respectively, to wit: his excellency the president of Mexico, Manuel Eduardo Gorostiza, minister of foreign affairs, and Guadalupe Victoria general of division; and his majesty the king of the French, Charles Baudin, officer of the royal order of the legion of honor—

Who, after interchanging their full powers, and having found them good and in good form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Art. 1. There shall be constant peace and perpetual friendship between the republic of Mexico on the one part, and his majesty the king of the French, his heirs and successors, on the other part, without exception of persons or places.

Art. 2. To the end to facilitate the prompt re-establishment of mutual kindness between the two nations, the contracting parties agree to submit to the decision of a third power the two questions following to wit:

1. If Mexico has a right to claim from France, either the restitution of Mexican vessels captured by the French forces, after the surrender of the fortress of San Juan de Ulloa, or an indemnity for the same, in case the French government should have disposed of them?

2d. If it be right to accord indemnities which, on one side, the French might claim for losses sustained by them from the law of expulsion, and which the Mexicans, on the other, might claim for loss sustained by them from hostilities after the 26th November last?

Art. 3. Until the two parties shall be able to conclude a treaty of commerce and navigation, which shall regulate in a definite manner, and with reciprocal advantages for Mexico and France their future relations, the diplomatic and consular agents, the citizens of all classes, the ships and merchandise of both countries, shall continue to enjoy in each other all the franchises, privileges and immunities whatever, which are or may be hereafter by treaties or usage to the most favored nations, and that gratuitously, if such concession is gratuitous or conditional, as the case may be.

Art. 4. As soon as one of the originals of the present treaty and of the convention of the same date, duly ratified, one and the other by the Mexican government, according to the terms of the following article, shall be transmitted to the French plenipotentiary, the fortress of San Juan de Ulloa shall be restored to Mexico with its artillery, in the state in which it shall be found.

Art. 5. The present treaty shall be ratified by the Mexican government in the constitutional form, within twelve days from the date hereof, or before, if it be possible, and by his majesty, the king of the French, within four months from said date.

In testimony whereof, the above named plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed the same with their respective seals.

Done in the city of Vera Cruz, in triplicate, one of the originals to remain in the hands of his majesty, the president of Mexico, and the two others delivered to his majesty the king of the French, the 9th day of the month of March, in the year of our Lord, 1839. CHARLES BAUDIN,
M. E. GOROSTIZA,
GAUDALUPE VICTORIA.

CONVENTION.

[In the name of the Most Holy Trinity]

Art. 1. In order to satisfy the claims of France, relative for damage received by her subjects before the 26th November, 1838, the Mexican government will pay to the French government the sum of six hundred thousand dollars in specie, payment of which shall be made in three instalments of two hundred thousand dollars each, by the principal administrator of the custom house at Vera Cruz, at two, four and six months, dating from the day of the ratification of the present convention by the Mexican government. When the said payments are made, the government of the republic shall be acquitted and freed by France, in regard to all claims anterior to the 26th November, 1838.

Art. 2. The question whether the Mexican vessels and their cargoes, sequestered during the blockade, and afterwards captured by the French, in consequence of the declaration of war, shall be considered good prize to the captors—shall be submitted to the arbitration of a third power, as stipulated in the second article of the treaty of this date.

Art. 3. The Mexican government binds itself not to raise or permit to be raised, any future obstacle to the punctual and regular payment of the French creditors, which have been acknowledged, and are in a train of liquidation.

Art. 4. The present convention shall be ratified with the same formalities, and in the same delay with the treaty of peace of this date, to which it shall remain annexed.

In testimony whereof, the plenipotentiaries have, &c. (Signed and sealed as above.)

FOREIGN NEWS.

The packet ships North American and United States from Liverpool, Wellington, from London and Charles Carroll from Havre, have arrived at New York. The latest dates which we have received from London are London to the 7th ult, and Liverpool to the 8th. The last Paris dates are of the 4th ult.

The news is not very cheering. Cotton has receded and the money market is not in a promising condition.

By quarterly returns of the Bank of England, the decrease in its bullion since the last return is £1,133,000. The Bank of England was, therefore, selling stock, and curtailing its circulation, which probably had its effect upon the cotton market.

On France, however the decline in the exchange has ceased, and it was no longer profitable to send gold to Paris. The demand for the precious metals still existed in the north of Europe, whither exportation continued.

The London Times of April 6th, in its money article states that the sales of stocks continue to be made for the account of the Bank of England, and no doubt whatever exists that the operation is intended to draw in the circulation of notes. The bank directors, whether just or not, evidently apprehend some crisis near at hand, and it was expected, that after the payment of the dividends, they would increase their efforts for the contraction of the currency. The Times also adds that notwithstanding the large importations of corn, they are so far from having relieved the market, that the price is again rising, and the expectation is that there must be in this season, on the whole one of the largest importations of grain that country has ever known. This disquiet respecting the circulation was very injurious to the spring trade of the country, which was far from having its usual spirit and enterprise, for the cautious merchants abstained from large transactions until they can see the issue of this, and the manufacturers as a necessary consequence, also suffer.

American securities in such a state of affairs, had of course been temporarily neglected—small sales of United States Bank only being reported at £24 7s. 6d. and a sale of $12,000 Indiana bonds on the 5th ult. at the previous quotations, of 95.

The average prices of wheat in England having fallen to 72s. 6d. the import duty has risen to 2s. 6d. per quarter at which it would probably remain for a few weeks.

Mr. Stevenson had a long interview with Lord Palmerston at the foreign office on the 24 April.

The London Morning Chronicle states that a proposition has actually been made to the United States authorities, and forwarded to Washington, which it is believed will lead to an ultimate settlement of disputed boundary question. The English papers, in the meantime, are inundating the country with long articles on the subject, in general betraying a most lamentable ignorance in the premises. One thing, however, appears evident, that all idea of a war with England may be given up, and that the affair will ere long be satisfactorily settled in some way or other.

A letter from Gottgen states that transportation to America, has recently been adopted in the Haooerian dominions, by which means a number of ill-disposed persons have been got rid of.

It is stated, very little to the credit of the city of Mobile, which had borrowed a sum of money on bond, dated February 1, 1836, to bear interest at the rate of 8 per centum per annum for ten years, and the interest to be paid half annually, that the last August's dividend had only been discharged in part, and the February dividend remains unpaid—this had caused great inconvenience to the holders of the bonds.

The last advices from New York, received in England, were on the 11th March, by the ship Sampson, and appears to have had little effect in any way.

The English revenue tables for the quarter and the year were published on Saturday. The increase on the year, as compared to the year ending April, 1838, is £2,138,566. The present quarter, with the corresponding quarter last year is £565,245. The increase of customs for the year, £1,053,179, for the quarter £349,889. The increase in the post office revenue for the present quarter, is £23,000; for the year £25,257.

Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Brougham, Sir Edward Ellice, Mr. Hume, Mr. Leader, and Dr. Bowring, are now in Paris.

The committee of the Wesleyan missionary society have purchased a ship to be employed exclusively under their direction, in conveying missionaries and stores, between the colonies of New South Wales, Van Dieman's Land, Friendly Isles, Fejeis, and other groups and islands of the great south Pacific Ocean. The committee have also requested the rev. Robert Alber to undertake a special mission to British North America, via New York. He sailed in the packet United States.

The new (Irish) lord lieutenant arrived at Dublin, on the 4th of April, amidst great parade and rejoicings. The windows of every house were thronged, as the cortege passed, and at half past two he was sworn in before the privy council.

A meeting of the citizens of Edinburgh was held for the purpose of expressing confidence in ministers, the chartists attended and outvoted the whigs, who, with the lord provost retired from the room.

On Monday a meeting of chartists was held at Devizes. The Tories, however, were armed with sticks and whilgions, made an attack on, and routed them. Vincent, the chartist leader was maltreated, and saved from serious harm by a gentleman who rescued him from, and drove him in a gig out of reach of the mob.

Louis Philippe has at length patched up a temporary ministry, which is called, with how much wit we cannot decide, the April fool ministry. It consists as follows:

Interior, De Gasparin peer; justice and religion, Girod (de l'Ain) peer; foreign affairs, Duc de Montebello, peer; War, general Despans-Cuvier; Marine, Baron Turpinier, deputy; public instruction, Parant, deputy; finance, Gautier, peer; commerce and public works, Gasparin, (ad interim).

The French chambers were opened on Thursday, the 4th, by commission, amidst appearances of external excitement as strong as were manifested since the revolution of July. Although there was neither king nor prince, and no formal speech to hear, the dense and perturbed aspect of the crowds assembled were calculated to excite serious fears for the safety of the capital. Happily, however, no disturbance took place. The following report of the opening of the chambers renders further description unnecessary.

Opening of the chamber of deputies. Although it was generally known that the king would not open the session in person, the quays and the other avenues leading to the palace Bourbon were occupied at an early hour by a considerable multitude. At noon the space in front of the chamber on the river side became altogether impassable from the density of the crowd, and shortly afterwards a detachment of the 53d regiment of the line debouched from under the peristyle, and drawing up in a line with fixed bayonets at the bottom of the flight of steps, marched forward and drove back the people.

A double row of soldiers was afterwards stationed between the palace and the bridge, to clear the way for the deputies, and a large body of town sergeants, followed by police agents, constantly moved backwards and forwards, keeping the passage free. At one o'clock, the crowd continuing to increase, half a squadron of lancers rode up the quay, and took its station under the terrace to the left of the palace.

The air and attitude of the popular assemblage were, at that time truly alarming. A number of individuals, of sinister appearance, were seen here and there moving through the crowd, which was formed chiefly of boys and workmen, attired in blouses, and evidently intent on mischief.

Very few deputies were present in the hall at the hour fixed for the opening of the sitting. M. Gasparin, the minister of the interior, repaired thither at an early hour, for the purpose of being at hand to adopt measures in case of disturbances. At half past one o'clock the drums of the national guard were heard to beat, and the deputies then actually poured into the hall, which was in an instant completely full. On no former occasion did the assembly ever muster so strong. If it were possible to form an exact idea of the relative force of parties from the appearance of the assembly, there would be little doubt that the majority lies on the left, or liberal side. The cote gauche in particular, presented an imposing mass, while the benches on the opposite side and those situate behind the ministers presented here and there pretty large vacancies. It is evident that the elections have produced a result decidedly favorable to the left.

The opening of the chamber of peers was not attended by any great number of their lordships. The entrance of count Mole was the signal for all parties to divest themselves of their political prejudices, and come forward to shake by the hand, him whom "all delighted to honor."

On Wednesday evening the king held the first public levee since the death of the duchess Maria of Wurtemberg, at the Tuileries. Nearly all the peers and upwards of 250 deputies attended, besides a number of officers of the national guards and the line, and other persons of distinction.

SPAIN.

The ministers have come to the conclusion of attempting to coerce the press, with the view of repressing it licentiousness, and have issued mandates to arrest the editors of the Guiriguay journal; but the latter, being apprised of the intended visit of the police, made their escape. General Alaix, the war minister, a brutal and ignorant soldier, is considered to be the originator of these measures, and he appears to be deservedly incurring great odium, which may react on his patron Espartero, whose inactivity is looked upon with displeasure and suspicion.

General Cordova has escaped from Badajoz into Portugal.

The news from the armies is beginning to possess some interest. Balmaseda has been defeated by the Christiano colonel Scheltz, but the former fled to rally again, according to their custom when attacked by superior numbers. Reports are prevalent that Cabrera also had been defeated by Ayerbe at Segura; but the news requires confirmation.

An action cannot long be delayed between the rival generals, Maroto and Espartero, as they are concentrating their troops and approaching each other. The former has only 35,000 men, while the latter can bring 80,000 men into the field.

The opinion that the cortes will be speedily dissolved, gains strength.

PRUSSIA.

A disturbance has taken place at Cleves, in consequence of the publication of a pamphlet in favor of Protestantism, which roused the ire of the Catholic population. Much rioting took place, and the authorities are blamed for not having interposed to suppress the tumult more promptly and efficiently. It is seriously to be apprehended that the religious effervescence now unhappily existing in the Rhenish provinces of Prussia will long affect their tranquility, and will be the cause of much mischief to that power in the event of a war.

SWITZERLAND.

The canton of Zurich has been sadly agitated for some weeks past, in consequence of the election of Dr. Strauss, the author of Des Leben Jesu (the life of Jesus), to a theological professorship at the university of Zurich. After protracted struggles between the different parties the election has been cancelled, and a pension of one thousand francs has been voted to the disappointed candidate, in whose place Dr. Hoffman, of Winenden, a zealous antagonist to the religious doctrines of Strauss, has been invited to accept the vacant chair at Zurich.

RUSSIA.

Regiments after regiments are arriving in Georgia, to be employed against the Circassians; and the emperor is determined, it is said, to employ a vast force to subdue or annihilate these gallant mountaineers. With this view, it is reported, that the emperor will sojourn during the summer near the scene of the intended operations.

TURKEY.

Letters from Constantinople of the 19th ult. announce that the porte is carrying on warlike operations, evidently destined to be employed against the viceroy of Egypt. The Turkish rear admiral Asman bey, having failed to obtain an interview with Mehemet ali, who refused to meet him at Cairo before September, when he would have concluded his journey, and from the Abyssinian frontier the sultan in high displeasure ordered his fleet from Egypt, and commanded preparations to be set on foot for carrying fire and sword into the territory of his powerful vassal. In consequence of these commands the batteries on the Dardanels have been strengthened, the arsenals are filled with workmen, and nothing is talked of but the prospect of speedily unfurling the standard of the prophet.

With the exception of captain Walker, who is a great favorite with the captain pasha, none of the British naval officers whose services have been offered to the porte have been accepted. They are waiting at Constantinople the arrival of instructions from the British government.

We are sorry to observe that the Turkish commercial treaty is not comprehensible by the Turkish custom house officers. Their blunders and perverseness are the occasion of much annoyance to British merchants.

Bourse. Paris, Thursday, April 4, half past three. The opening of the chambers to-day has of course given rise to rumors, but those at the bourse respecting the proceedings of the chamber of deputies, are in general false. For the account the three per cent opened at 80*l.* 45*l.* declined to 80*l.* 20*l.* and closed at 80*l.* 25*l.* a fall of 15 1-2*l.* from the improvement of yesterday. The five per cent from 109*l.* 75*l.* fell to 109*l.* 50*l.* and closed at 109*l.* 55*l.* being 20*l.* lower than yesterday. For money the three per cent have declined 5*l.* and the five per cent 20*l.* The Bank of France shares have not varied, neither have the Laitee bank shares.

Liverpool, April 8th. Cotton declined 3-8 per lb. during the week, and a limited demand. Tobacco maintains its price. A sale of 230 hbls. flaxseed, for sowing, from New York, was made at auction for 75*l.* a 77*l.* stg. Turpentine in fair demand—sales of 800 American had been made at 16*l.* Wheat is a trifle higher, owing to but few arrivals of either Irish, foreign or coastwise.

Liverpool cotton market, April 6. The demand for cotton has been unusually limited throughout this week, being entirely confined to the supply of the immediate wants of the trade, and the market closes heavily at a decline of 1-4*l.* to 3-8*l.* per lb. in the middling to fair, and 1-2*l.* per lb. in the other qualities of American cotton. Sea island maintains full prices. Egyptian continues in demand, and an advance of 1-2*l.* per lb. has, in many instances, been obtained. In Brazil, Bahia commands full rates, while in Pernambuco and Maranhao a decline of 1-4 per lb. has, in some cases, been submitted to. Surat is neglected, and has declined 1-8*l.* per lb. during the week. The sales of the week amount to 7,660 bales, all to the trade. One hundred and sixty Sea Island 20 to 40; 80 Stained do. 14 to 16; 1,450 Upland 8 a 9 7-8; 750 Mole &c, 8 3-8 a 9 7-8; 2,650 New Orleans 7 3-4 a 11; 520 Egyptian 14 3-4 a 19.

Late in the day an increased demand has occurred for cotton. The sales are 2,500 bales, of which 200 American are on speculation, generally at the prices of yesterday.

The price of wheat at Liverpool on the 6th was in an advance of 4*l.* per bushel of the previous sales; French red 9*l.* 8*l.* do. 8*l.* 10*l.* Odessa 8*l.* to 8*l.* 3*l.* do. 7*l.* 10*l.* In flour an advance of 1 to 2*l.* per sack.

LATER NEWS.

Arrival of the steam ship Liverpool, in seventeen days from Europe.

The steam ship Liverpool arrived at New York on Tuesday evening, in seventeen days from Liverpool, bringing 94 cabin passengers. The Liverpool advices are to the 20th of April, and the London to the 19th, evening, both inclusive. We are indebted to the London advices of captain Duff for a file of London and Liverpool papers of the latest dates.—principally from the Commercial Advertiser,—we take up the following summary of news.

The intelligence by this arrival is of high interest, and quite remarkable. One of those sudden turns in the progress of events has taken place, which sometimes occur to baffle all calculation, and show the folly of political prophecy. For months past our tidings from Europe have been full of gathering clouds on the political horizon, daily increasing in blackness and in volume, and wearing an aspect so threatening that it seemed almost impossible that they must be unattended with tempest and convulsion. In a moment, as it were, we find them dispersed, and all around is sunshine and gladness.

The hostile appearances between England and our own country have entirely disappeared—the occasion of jealousy and bickering between France and England, and Russia and England, have been removed by courteous diplomacy—in the east, the alarming condition of affairs is succeeded by such a change as almost totally removes the possibility of serious trouble—in France the wisdom and firmness of the king have piloted him safely through the difficulties of his position, and the factious projects of his enemies are scattered to the winds—the long pending quarrel between Belgium and Holland is peacefully adjusted—and, in a word, the whole aspect of European affairs has not been, for many years, more strongly indicative of quiet and prosperity than at the present moment.

The Liverpool correspondent of the New York Times writes, under date of April 20—

The last accounts from Maine excite some interest in the minds of the British public. The temperateness and forbearance of the American general government, as well as the more softened tone of the authorities in Maine itself, hold out every hope that a satisfactory adjustment will be accomplished, and that peace, so desirable, will be preserved. The whole current of British feeling tends in that direction, and the strong impulse of mutual interests, it is to be trusted, will keep it so.

The cotton market.—The Liverpool cotton market, it will be remembered, had declined from the 23d March to the 6th ult. the date of our latest previous advices, about 2d per lb. on American descriptions, and the market remained in a dull state. We now learn that the demand for cotton from the 6th April to the close of the week ending on the 12th, had been more animated, resulting in an improvement of 3/4d. on the reduced quotations of the 6th. The week ending the 19th ultimo, however again been characterized by great dullness, and although previous quotations were continued, sales had in some, and quotations were continued on lower terms. The arrivals had been numerous at Liverpool from the United States, and vessels generally reported having experienced very severe weather. The latest dates from this country were to the 26th of March, per Roscius, hence.

A prominent item of intelligence relates to the money market, as some uneasiness was apprehended that it would be so tight as to affect our exchanges, but there is no serious ground of apprehension; on the contrary, there is a gradual revival in the sale of American securities, and foreign exchanges were improving.

John Galt, the author, died at Greenock, April 13th.

The liberals of Liverpool had given Daniel O'Connell a public dinner.

Twenty-two shocks of earthquake were felt in Savoy at the end of last year, or in the first quarter of the present. Only seven of them took place in the day time, and not one when the weather was rainy.

A present of fifty superb cashmere shawls, from the looms of Shiras and Ispahan, has arrived in England, for Queen Victoria, from the Persian court. The margins represent triumphal processions of camels and Arab steeds, sumptuously caparisoned, elephants, and palanquins, and musicians woven with exquisite taste, and exhibiting also a high pictorial perfection, far surpassing any thing European.

The Bible.—In the house of commons, April 11th, the lord-advocate stated, in answer to a question from sir G. Clerk, that it was not the intention of the government to renew the patent (which will expire on the 17th July next) granted to the queen's printer in Edinburgh, conferring the exclusive right of printing the Bible; but that the exclusive right of printing the Bible; but that the measure would be brought in to secure the purity of the text in the printing of the Bible; and at the same time to allow unlimited freedom in its publication.

Paganini.—The physicians despair of being able to prolong the days of this eminent artist, who appears to have lived for some time past by positive enchantment. It is said that Paganini will leave a fortune of ten millions of francs (400,000*l.*) which, according to his last intention, will be divided among his musical colleagues, both in France and Italy, whose number is rated at between 700 and 800.

[France Musicate.

London April 17.—There is decidedly an improved feeling in the market for American securities. Considerable sales of U. States bank shares have been effected both yesterday and this morning at 24*l.* 7s. 6d. and some in the afternoon were made at 24*l.* 10s. per share, ex div. A quantity of Mississippi five per cents, sterling, were sold at 93, and some sales of Illinois six per cents, were done at 93.

We are sorry to state that the rates of exchange do not show any alteration for the better this afternoon; but, on the contrary, they have been generally flat.

As a counterpoise to the unsatisfactory state of the exchanges, the exportation of the precious metals during the past week has been very small.

Parliamentary summary.—The house of commons recommended business on Monday, the 8th April. Lord John Russell gave the form of his motion on the government of Ireland, as follows:

"That it is the opinion of this house that it is expedient to preserve in those principles which have guided the executive government of Ireland, of late years, and which have tended to the effectual administration of the laws and the general improvement of that part of the United Kingdom."

On the 9th, Mr. Labouchere moved for and obtained leave to bring in a bill, providing for the temporary government of the island of Jamaica. As was done in Lower Canada, it abolishes the house of assembly, for the term of five years, and establishes a council, by which the government shall be administered, with the aid of three special commissioners. Mr. Labouchere went at length into the causes which have made this measure necessary, detailing the various proceedings of the assembly, &c. &c. The bill was to have its second reading on the 19th.

In answer to a question, lord Palmerston said that he had sent to Mr. Fox, at Washington, the draft of a convention for the adjustment of the boundary question, by the appointment of a joint commission to define the boundary; and that when the answer of the U. S. government should be received, the papers would be laid on the table.

On the 10th there was no quorum.

On the 11th nothing of interest was done.

On the 12th, in the house of lords, papers, relating to the affairs of Jamaica, were moved for and ordered.

In the house of commons sir Robert Peel brought forward an amendment to lord John Russel's motion on the government of Ireland. It was to the effect that the appointment of a committee of inquiry by the house of lords did not justify ministers in calling upon the house of commons for a declaration of opinion, and that it was not fitting for the house of commons to call in question the right of the other house to inquire into the state of Ireland.

Mr. Duncombe gave notice of an amendment which he should offer; lord John Russel's motion prevailed—to the effect that it was expedient to make further reforms in parliament.

Lord John Russel announced his intention of moving to expunge from the police bill the clauses extending the metropolitan police to the city of London.

[These were the clauses against which the common council remonstrated in their address to the queen when they got such an ungracious answer.]

Munday, April 15. The house and all its galleries were crowded at an early hour, and at 6 o'clock lord John Russel commenced speaking in support of his motion on the government of Ireland. His speech is said to have been one of the ablest that his lordship ever made; and the ministerial and whig papers speak of it as triumphant.

Sir Robert Peel replied, in supporting his amendment. He mainly relied on the points assumed in the amendment, and the impolicy of adopting any measure that might bring on a collision between the two houses, touching only incidentally on the real question of lord Normanby's government in Ireland.

The debate was continued through the week, and was not completed on the 10th, which is the date of our latest London paper. No doubt was entertained as to the result, the Irish members and most of the liberals going en masse in support of the ministry.

The other proceedings in either house were of little interest, as well as we can judge from the summary in the Liverpool papers.

Sir Frederick Lamb, lord Melbourne's brother and heir prescriptive, has been raised to the peerage by the title of baron Beauvale. He has been for many years ambassador at Vienna. Lord Ponsoby, the ambassador at Constantinople, has also been made an Irish viscount. The opposition papers intend to consider these elevations as a sort of "quitting his house in order" by lord Melbourne, in anticipation of leaving office.

The marquis of Lansdowne had declined serving on lord Roden's Irish committee of inquiry—assigning the same reason that was given by lord Normanby for his refusal.

The marriage of the marquis of Douro and lady Elizabeth Hay was solemnized on the 18th. The wedding cake weighed more than 80 pounds, and was superbly decorated with military trophies, the arms of Wellington and Tweddale &c.

The affair of lady Flora Hastings continued a subject of remark and discussion. Her brother, the marquis, had written and published a long and very severe letter to lord Melbourne, demanding the immediate dismissal of his sister's slanderers—said to be ladies Portman and Tavistock and sir James Clark, and his mother the dowager marchioness had also written to the queen, urging and finally insisting on discovery and public disgrace of her daughter's maligners. To the first letter lord Melbourne replied, by order of the queen, declaring her majesty's anxious wish to do every thing in her power to soothe the feelings of lady Flora and her family; but on the dismissal of sir James Clark being again peremptorily demanded, his lordship replied that the demand was so unprecedented and objectionable, that even his high respect for the marchioness and her family would permit him to do nothing more than acknowledge the receipt of her letter.

The opposition papers, as may be supposed, make a terrible to-do about this outward affair; and the very thin attendance at the queen's first drawing room for the season, was ascribed to the disgust it had excited among the nobility.

The queen, poor girl, was doing all she could to make amends to lady Flora; inviting her frequently to the royal dinner parties, and expressly desiring that she should receive the sacrament with herself on Easter Sunday. Lady Portman is a daughter of the earl of Harewood—lady Tavistock is sister-in-law to lord John Russell.

Arming of the chartists at Barnsley. The chartists are arming with pikes, pistols and guns, not only in the town of Barnsley itself, but also throughout its populous vicinity. Such has been the demand during the last fortnight that the shops have been nearly cleared of fire arms, particularly the pawnbrokers, who are dealers in second hand ware.

London, April 19—12 o'clock. In the English stock market sales of 3 1/2 per cent. reduced continued to be made by the same parties who sold yesterday, they have not, however, influenced the value of those securities more than to 1/4 per cent. the present quotation for them is 99 3/4 l. 1/4; consols have been 93 buyers; they are now 93 alternately buyers and sellers for the account, and 92 1/2 l. for money.

In American stocks there has been hardly any business since our last report. United States bank shares are 24 1/2 5s. to 24 1/2 10s.

From the Liverpool Courier of April 20.

State of the trade.

Cotton trade. Manchester, Friday evening. The market has been singularly dull this week; few sales have been effected, and goods are from 1*l.* to 3*l.* a piece lower. Twist is not at all in demand; and nothing is sold except in cases in which the necessities of the spinner compel him to accept a very low price. Warps are 4*l.* per beer lower, and welf has fallen about a farthing per pound. At this reduction there is a fair demand for both; the supply being not greater than the demand.

Shipwreck of the brig Retrench, of the Greenock, for New York. On Thursday afternoon, the brig Retrench, bound for New York, with 48 passengers sailed from Greenock, the wind blowing fresh from the east, which was a fair wind for the vessel. On Friday morning the deep sea steamers brought the news to Greenock that the Retrench was run ashore on the rocks adjoining the Cunbragh light house, and it blowing a gale at the time, fears were entertained that the vessel would be dashed to pieces, and all on board perish.

The Gulliver tug steamer was immediately ordered off to the assistance of the unfortunate vessel, with a party of men, headed by captain Kennedy, harbourmaster, Greenock. On the arrival of the steamer at the wreck it was blowing a perfect gale from the southwest, and it was with considerable difficulty that the Gulliver could reach the Retrench. But at last this was effected, and it was found that a buoy, with a rope fastened to it, had been thrown from the Retrench and made of the islanders made it fast, by which means communication was opened with the stranded ashore on an empty chest. The passengers were all safely landed by the Gulliver at Greenock on Friday night; but they will lose all their luggage, provisions, &c. as the vessel in all probability will be a total wreck. [Glasgow Chronicle.]

FROM THE EAST

The accounts from Central Asia are highly favorable. We give such extracts as will serve to show the result of the movements in progress.

London, April 16. An Indian mail has arrived by Egypt, with accounts of the 23d of February, from Bombay. As regards India they are of a favorable nature, our troops having obtained the command of the Indus by the surrender of Hyderabad and Bukkur, which took place without any resistance.

It is also stated that the Ameers of Sind have declared their adhesion to the British government. The valuable steamer Semiramis was wrecked on the 13th of February, near the mouth of the Indus.

The Delhi Gazette of the 13th, states that the army of Scchah Soazle had passed the Indus, and was encamped at Shikarpore, but the news of the pacific state of Scinde had not reached the army of Indus on the 25th January. The reports of battles between the Scindians and the Bombay troops are declared to be unfounded. Some apprehension existed of a formidable attack on the troops under Sir John Keane at Hyderabad, and a detachment under Sir Willoughby Cotton had consequently been ordered up to his support.

Sir A. Burnes was with the advanced force, and Sir H. Fane at Roree. It was expected that the army at Shikarpore would be detained there for some time, and no active movements appear to be contemplated in any quarter. Lord Auckland was at Delhi on the 12th of February. General Allard, a distinguished officer in the service of Runjeet Singh, died at Peshawar on the 23d of January.

FRANCE.

The victory of the king over the coalition was evinced in the result of the election for the president of the chamber, which took place on the 16th of April. The candidate of the coalition was Odillon Barrot—the ministerial candidate was M. Passy.

The latter was elected by a majority of 30, greatly to the surprise and mortification of the Carlists and republicans, and the other odds and ends who had united in the hope of forcing the king to a virtual surrender of his authority. The upshot of the matter is, that a sufficient number of the doctrinaires, late opponents of the king and count Mole have gone over—satisfied, probably, that the rule of their late allies would be more mischievous than any thing the king would be likely to attempt.

It was presumed that after this triumph Marshal Soult would renew his endeavors to form a ministry—that he would be successful—and that the new cabinet would be almost identical in policy with that of count Mole. If their should join it, it would have an overwhelming majority at its command—if he should keep aloof its majority would be smaller but still probably sufficient.

The French government is said to have offered its mediation between the sultan and the pacha of Egypt.

The French and English ambassadors at Constantinople are said to have agreed to an arrangement, in consequence of which an Anglo-French squadron will be formed of six ships of the line, four frigates and ten smaller vessels, to watch the Turkish fleet on its issuing from the Dardanelles. Sir E. Stopford is also to send five ships of the line to Alexandria, and admiral Lalande is to station three at Tunis. By this means, it is hoped, both the Turkish and Egyptian fleet will be prevented from wantonly provoking a collision.

The court of cassation has decided against the appeal of Marsaud from the sentence of the tribunal at Brest, by which he was condemned to death, with Raimond, for the murder on board the Alexandre. Raimond did not appeal.

Lord Brougham and Messrs. Hume and Leader were at Paris during the recess. The former had been ill. A public dinner was offered him, and declined—a private letter says because it was expected that monsieur Pappineau would also be present.

PORTUGAL.

There was a ministerial interregnum in this kingdom also. The ministers retired in a body, in consequence of being defeated in the chamber of deputies on a bill they had introduced for increasing the army; and up to the 8th of April all attempts to form a new cabinet had been unsuccessful.

CHURCH CASE.

From the Philadelphia Presbyterian.

OPINION OF THE COURT.—Gibson, C. J. delivered the opinion of the court, on Wednesday morning, May 8th, as follows:

To estimate the question from the multifarious mass of irrelevant matter in which it is enclosed, we trust in the first place, ascertain the specific character of the general assembly, and the relation it bears to the corporation which is the immediate subject of our cognizance. This assembly has been called a quasi corporation; of which it has not a feature. A quasi corporation has capacity to sue and be sued as an artificial person; which the assembly has not. It is also established by law; which the assembly is not.

Neither is the assembly a particular order or rank in the corporation, though the latter was created for its convenience; such for instance, as the share holders of a bank or joint stock company, who are an integral part of the body. It is a segregated association, which, though it is the reproductive organ of corporate succession, is not itself a member of the body; and in that respect it is anomalous. Having no corporate quality in itself, it is not a subject of our corrective jurisdiction, or of our scrutiny, farther than to ascertain how far its organic structure may bear on the question of its personal identity or individuality. By the charter of the corporation, of which it is the handmaid and nurse, it has a limited capacity to create vacancies in it, and an unlimited power over the form and manner of choice in filling them. It would be just to refer to the civil tribunals, therefore, that the assembly's commissioners had constituted an actual body, and that it had made its appointment in its own way, without regard to its fairness in respect to its members; with this limitation, however, that it had the assent of the constitutional majority, of which the officio act of authentication would be at least, prima facie evidence. It would be immaterial to the legality of the choice, that the majority had expelled the minority, provided a majority of the whole body concurred in the choice. This may be safely predicted of an undivided assembly, and it would be an unerring test in the case of a division, could a quorum not be constituted of less than such a majority; but unfortunately, a quorum of the general assembly may be constituted of a very small minority, so that two, or even more, distinct parts may have all the external organs of legitimate existence. Hence, where, as in this instance, the members have formed themselves into separate societies, numerically sufficient for corporate capacity and organic life, it becomes necessary to ascertain how far either of them was formed in obedience to the conventional law of the association, which, for that purpose only, is to be treated as a rule of civil obligation.

The division which, for purposes of designation, it is convenient to call the old school party, was certainly organized in obedience to the established order; and to legitimate the separate organization of its rival, in contravention, as it certainly was, of every thing like precedent, would require the presentation of a very urgent emergency. At the stated time and place for the opening of the session, the parties assembled, without any ostensible division; and, when the organization of the whole had proceeded to a certain point, by the instrumentality of the moderator of the preceding session, who, for that purpose, was the constitutional organ, a provisional moderator was suddenly chosen, by a minority of those who could be entitled to vote, including the excited commissioners. The question on the motion to elect was put, not by the chair, but by the mover himself; after which, the seceding party elected a permanent moderator, and immediately withdrew, leaving the other party to finish its process of organization, by the choice of its moderator for the session.

In justification of this apparent irregularity, it is urged that the constitutional moderator had refused an appeal to the commissioners in attendance, from his decision, which had excluded from the roll the names of certain commissioners who had been unconstitutionally severed, as it was alleged, from the Presbyterian connection by a vote of the preceding session. It is conceded by the argument, that if the synods with the dependent presbyteries by which those commissioners were sent, had been constitutionally dissolved, the motion was one which the moderator was not bound to put, or the commissioners to notice; and that whatever implication of assent to the decision which ensued, might otherwise be deduced from the silence of those who refused to speak out, about which it will be necessary to say something in the sequel, there was no room for any such implication in the particular instance. It will follow also, that there was no pretence for the deposit of the moderator, if indeed such a thing could be legitimated by any circumstance, for refusing an appeal from his exclusion of those who had not color of title, and consequently, that what else might be reform, would be revolution. And this leads to an inquiry into the constitutionality of the act of excision.

The sentence of excision, as it has been called, was nothing else than an ordinance of dissolution.—It bore that the synods in question, having been formed and attached to the body of the Presbyterian church, under, and in execution of the plan of union, "be, and are hereby declared to be, out of the ecclesiastical connexion of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America; and that they are not in form or in fact an integral portion of said church."

Now it will not be said that if the dissolved synods had no other basis than the plan of union, they did not necessarily fall along with it, and it is not pretended that the assembly was incompetent to repeal the union prospectively, but it is contended that the repeal could not impair their rights of membership which had grown up under it.

On the other hand, it is contended that the plan of union was unconstitutional and void from the beginning, because it was not submitted to the presbyteries for their sanction; and that no right of membership could spring from it. But viewed, not as a constitutional regulation which implies permanency of duration, but as a temporary expedient, it acquired the force of a law without the ratification of those bodies. It was evidently not intended to be permanent, and it consequently was constitutionally enacted and constitutionally repealed by the ordinary act of legislation; and those synods which had their root in it, could not be expected to survive it. There never was a design to attempt an amalgamation of ecclesiastical principles which are as immiscible as water and oil; much less to effect a commixture of them only at particular geographical points. Such an attempt would have compromised a principle, which requires that the officers of the church be set apart by special ordination for the work. Now the character of the plan is palpable, not only in its title and provisions, but in the minute of its introduction into the assembly.

We find in the proceedings of 1801, page 256, that a committee were raised "to consider and digest a plan of government for the churches in the new settlements agreeably to the proposal of the general association of Connecticut;" and that the plan adopted in conformity to its report, is called "a plan of the union for the new settlements." The avowed object of it was to prevent alienation.—In other words, the affiliation of Presbyterians in other churches, by suffering those who were yet too few and too poor for the maintenance of a minister, temporarily to call to their assistance the members of a sect who differed from them in principles, not of faith, but of ecclesiastical government. To that end, Presbyterian ministers were suffered to preach to Congregational churches, while Presbyterian churches were suffered to settle Congregational ministers; and mixed congregations were allowed to settle a Presbyterian or a Congregational minister at their election, but under a plan of government and discipline adapted to the circumstances. Surely this was not intended to outlast the inability of the respective sects to provide separately for themselves, or to perpetuate the innovations on Presbyterian government which it was calculated to produce. It was obviously a missionary arrangement from the first; and they who built up presbyteries and synods on the basis of it, had no reason to expect that their structures would survive it, or that Congregationalist might, by force of it, gain a foothold in the Presbyterian church, despite of presbyterial discipline. They embraced it with all its defensible properties plainly put before them; and the power which constituted it, might fairly repeal it, and dissolve the bodies that had grown out of it, whenever the good of the church should seem to require it.

Could the synods, however, be dissolved by a legislative act? I know not how they could have been legitimately dissolved by any other. The assembly is a homogeneous body uniting in itself, without separation of parts—the legislative, executive and judicial functions of the government; and its acts are referable to the one or the other of them, according to the capacity in which it sat when they were performed. Now had the excited synods been cut off by a judicial sentence without hearing or notice, the act would have been contrary to the cardinal principles of natural justice, and consequently void. But though it was at first resolved to proceed judicially, the measure was abandoned, probably because it came to be perceived that the synods had committed no offence.

A glance at the plan of union is enough to convince us that the disorder had come in with the sancion of the assembly itself. The first article directed missionaries (the word is significant), to the new settlements to promote a good understanding betwixt the kindred sects. The second and third permitted a Presbyterian congregation to settle a Congregational minister, or a Presbyterian minister to be settled by a Congregational church; but these provided for no recognition of the people in charge, as a part of the Presbyterian body—at least they gave them no representation in its government. But the fourth allowed a mixed congregation to settle a minister of either denomination; and it committed the right to it to a funding committee, but with a right to appeal to the body of male communicants if the appellant were a Congregationalist, or to the presbytery if he were a Presbyterian. Now it is evident the assembly designed that every such congregation should belong to a presbytery as an integral part of it; for if its minister were a Congregationalist, in no way connected with the Presbyterian church, it would be impossible to refer the appellate jurisdiction to any presbytery in particular. This alone would show that it was designed to place such a congregation in ecclesiastical connection with the presbytery of the district; but it is not all. It was expressly provided in conclusion, that if the "said standing committee of any church, shall depute one of themselves to attend the presbytery, he may have the same right to sit and act in the presbytery as a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church." For what purpose if the congregation were not a presbytery?

It is said that this justus relaxatio was predicated of the appeal precedently mentioned; and that the exercise of it was to be restrained to the trial of it. The words, however, were predicated with restriction; and an implied limitation of their meaning, would impute to the assembly the injustice of allowing a party to sit in his own cause, by introducing into the composition of the appellate court a part of the subordinate one. That such an implication would be inconsistent with the temper displayed by the assembly on other occasions is proved by the order which it took as early as 1791, in the case of an appeal from the sentence of the synod of Philadelphia, whose members it prevented from voting on the question, (Assembly's Digest, p. 332), as well as by its general provision that members of a judiciary may not vote in the superior judiciary on a question of approving or disapproving their records, (Id., page 333).

The principle has since become a rule of the constitution, as appears by the book of discipline, chap. VII. sec. 3, paragraph 12. As the representatives of those anomalous congregations, therefore, could not sit in judgment on their own controversies, it is pretty clear that it was intended they should be represented generally, else they would not be represented at all in the councils of the church, by those who might not be Presbyterians; and that to effect it, the principle of presbyterian ordination was to be relaxed, as regards both the ministry and eldership; and it is equally clear, that had the synods been cited to answer for the consequent relaxation as an offence, they might have triumphantly appeared at the bar of the assembly with the plan of union in their hand. That body, however, resorted to the only constitutional remedy in its power; it fell back, so to speak, on its legislative jurisdiction, in the exercise of which, the synods were competently represented and heard by their commissioners.

Now the apparent injustice of the measure arises from the fact that the sentence pronounced against parties who were neither cited nor heard; which it evidently was not. Even as a legislative act it may have been a hard one, though certainly constitutional and strictly just. It was impossible to eradicate the disorder by any thing less than a dissolution of those bodies with whose existence its roots were so intertwined as to be inseparable from it, leaving their elements to form new and less heterogeneous combinations. Though deprived of presbyterian organization, the Presbyterian parts were not excluded from the church, provision being made for them, by allowing them to attach themselves to the nearest presbytery.

It is said there is not sufficient evidence to establish the fact that the excinded synods had actually been constituted on the plan of union, in order to have given the assembly even legislative jurisdiction. The testimony of the rev. Mr. Squier, however, shows that some of the three, which were within the state of New York, congregations were sometimes constituted without elders; and the synod of the Western Reserve, when charged with delinquency on that head, instead of denying the fact, promptly pointed to the plan of union for its justification. But what matters it whether the fact were actually what the assembly supposed it to be? If that body proceeded in good faith, the validity of its enactment cannot depend on the justness of its conclusion. We have, as already remarked, no authority to rejudge its judgments on their merits; and this principle was asserted with conclusive force by the presiding judge who tried the cause. Upon an objection made to the inquiry into the composition of the presbytery of Medina, it was ruled that "with the reasons for the proceedings of 1837, (the act of excision) we have nothing to do. We are to determine only what was done; and the reasons of those who did it are immaterial. If the acts complained of were within the jurisdiction of the assembly, their decision must be final, though they decided wrong." This was predicated of judicial jurisdiction; but the principle is necessarily applicable to jurisdiction for purposes of legislation. I cite the passage, however, to show that after a successful resistance to the introduction of evidence of the fact, it lies not with the relators to allege the want of it.

If then the synods in question were constitutionally dissolved, the presbyteries of which they had been composed, were, at least for purposes of representation, dissolved among them; for no presbytery can be in connection with the general assembly, unless it be at the same time subordinate to a synod also in connection with it, because an appeal from its judgment can reach the tribunal of the last resort only throughout that channel. It is immaterial that the presbyteries are the electors: a synod is a part of the machinery which is indispensable to the existence of every branch of the church. It appears, therefore, that the commissioners from the excinded synods, were not entitled to seats in the assembly, and that their names were properly excluded from the roll.

The inquiry might be rested here; for if there were no color of right in them, there was no color of right in the adversary proceedings which were founded on their exclusion. But even if their title were clear, the refusal of an appeal from decision of the moderator, would be no ground for the degradation of the officer at the call of a minority; nor could it impose on the majority an obligation to vote on a question put unofficially, and out of the usual course. To all questions put by the established organ, it is the duty of every member to respond, or be counted with the greater number, because he is supposed to have assented beforehand to the result of the process pre-established to ascertain the general will; but the rule of implied assent is certainly inapplicable to a measure which when justifiable even by extreme necessity, is essentially revolutionary, and based on no pre-established process of ascertainment whatever.

To apply it to an extreme case of inorganic action, as was done here might work the degradation of any presiding officer in our legislative halls, by the motion and actual vote of a single member, sustained by the constructive votes of all the rest; and though such an enterprise may never be attempted, it shows the danger of resorting to a conventional rule, when the body is to be resolved into its original elements, and its rules and conventions to be suspended by the very motion. For this reason, the choice of a moderator to supplant the officer of the chair, even if he were removable at the pleasure of the commissioners, would seem to have been unconstitutional.

But he was not removable by them, because he had not derived his office from them; nor was he answerable to them for the use of his power. He was not their moderator. He was the mechanical instrument of their organization; and till that was accomplished they are subject to his rule—not he to theirs. They were chosen by the authority of his mandate, and with the power of self organization, only in the event of his absence at the opening of the session.—Corporally present, but refusing to perform his function, he might be deemed constructive by absent, for constitutional purposes, inasmuch that the commissioners might proceed to the choice of a substitute without him; but not if he had entered on the performance of his task; and the reason is, that the decision of such questions as were prematurely pressed here, is proper for the decision of the body when prepared for organic action, which it cannot be before it is fully constituted and under the presidency of its own moderator, the moderator of the preceding session being functus officio.

There can be no occasion for its action sooner; for though the commissioners are necessarily called upon to vote for their moderator, their action is not organic, but individual; Doctor Mason's motion and appeal, though the clerks had reported the roll, were premature; for though it is declared in the twelfth chapter of the form of government, that no commissioners shall deliberate or vote before his name shall have been enrolled, it follows not that the capacity, consummated by enrolment, was expected to be exercised during any part of the process of organization, but the choice of a moderator; and moreover, the provision may have been intended for the case of a commissioner appearing for the first time, when the house was constituted.

Many instances may doubtless be found among the minutes, of motions entertained previously, for our public bodies, whether legislative or judicial, secular or ecclesiastical, are too prone to forget the golden precept—"Let all things be done decently and in order." But these are merely instances of irregularity which have passed, sub silentio, and which cannot change a rule of positive enactment. It seems then that an appeal from the decision of the moderator did not lie; and that he incurred no penalty by the disallowance of it. The title of the excinded commissioners could be determined only by the action of the house, which could not be had before its organization were complete; and in the mean time he was bound as the executive instrument of the preceding assembly, to put its ordinance into execution; for to the actual assembly, and not to the moderator of the preceding one, it belonged to repeal it.

It would be decisive, however, that the motion, as it was proposed, purported not to be in fact a question of degradation for the disallowance of an appeal, but one of new and independent organization. It was, ostensible as well as actually, of transcendental power, whose purpose was to treat the ordinance of the preceding assembly as a nullity, and its moderator as a nonentity. It had been prepared for the event avowedly before the meeting. The witnesses concur that it was propounded as a measure of original organization, transcending the customary order; and not as a recourse to the ultima ratio for a specific violation of it. The ground of the motion, as it was opened by the mover, was not the disallowance of an appeal, which alone could afford the pretext of forfeiture, but the fact of exclusion. To affect silent members with an implication of assent, however, the ground of the motion and nature of the question must be so explicitly put before them as to prevent misconception or mistake; and the remark that heralded the question in this instance, pointed at, not a removal of the presiding incumbent, but a separate organization to be accomplished with the least practicable interruption of the business in hand; and if they indicated any thing else they were deceptive.

The measure was proposed not as that of the body, but as the measure of a party; and the cause assigned for not having proposed it elsewhere, was that individuals of the party had been instructed by counsel that the purpose of it could not be legally accomplished in any other place. No witness speaks of motion to degrade, and the reality of the process by which the choice of a substitute, not a successor, was effected, left no space for reflection or debate. Now before the passive commissioners could be affected by acquiescence implied from their silence, it ought to have appeared that they were apprised of what was going on; but it appears that even an attentive ear-witness was unable to understand what was done. The whole scene was one of unprecedented haste, inasmuch that it is still a matter of doubt how the questions were put.—Now, though these facts were fairly put to the jury, it is impossible not to see that the verdict is in this respect manifestly against the current of the evidence.

Other corroborative views have been suggested; but it is difficult to compress a decision of the leading points in this case into the old fashioned limits of a judicial opinion. The preceding observations, however, are deemed enough to show the grounds on which we hold that the assembly which met in the First Presbyterian church on May 7, 1839, is the legitimate assembly of the assembly of 1837, and that the defendants are not guilty of the usurpation with which they are charged.

ROGERS, J.—opinion.

After the patient and impartial investigation, by me, of this cause, at nisi prius, and in bank, I have nothing at this time to add, except that my opinion remains unchanged, on all the points ruled at the trial. This explanation is deemed requisite, in justice to myself, and because it has become necessary (in a case, in some respects, without precedents, and presenting some extraordinary features) to prevent misapprehension, and misrepresentation.

SWARTWOUT DEFALCATIONS.

Report of the committee of investigation, chosen by ballot, by the house of representatives, January 17 and 19, 1839, on the subject of the defalcations of Samuel Swartwout and others, and the correctness of the returns of collectors and receivers of the public money; also, the report of the minority of the committee.

Tallahassee, April 5, 1838.

SIR: I am informed, through the receiver of this place, that charges have been preferred by John

G. Gamble, esq. against his official conduct; also implicating myself in the following manner: "It is matter of complaint that citizens have applied to enter lands; their money was refused; and, after having converted their bank notes into land office money, upon another application for land they have found it entered by the receiver, or by his clerk, H. R. W. Andrews." This charge is incorrect; if such complaints have been made, they were without any foundation whatever. I have been engaged as clerk for the register for the last two years, during which time I have made several entries in my own name, and in company with M. J. Allen; but in no instance has either of us entered land that had been applied for, although applications were made almost daily for land without the applicants completing their entries. The course pursued in the register's office in regard to the issuing of applications, is to issue only one application for the same piece of land on the same day; should the applicant fail to complete the entry before nine o'clock the next morning, then the same land is subject to be entered by any other person. During the time I have been in the register's office, no person has been refused an application for land subject to entry in proper time. I conceive Dr. Allen or myself have a right to enter the same land. Although cases of this kind occur almost daily, we, or either of us, have, in no instance, interfered with applicants in this manner.

The Tallahassee bank bills were received in payment for land, and recognised as specie, according to a distinct understanding between the receiver and the officers of both banks, (as I was informed by the receiver prior and subsequent to the suspension of specie payments), until about the 5th or 10th of May last, at which time the Union Bank of Florida suspended specie payment; and Mr. R. B. Copeland, who was then clerk for the receiver during his absence to Mobile for the purpose of making a deposit, received the Union Bank bills at par for a few days after its suspension.

Mr. J. G. Gamble's charge must apply subsequent to the Union Bank's suspension, as the exchange of money was unnecessary before. By reference to the returns at the general land office from this district, which have been forwarded up to the 1st instant, you will not find an acre of land entered by M. J. Allen and myself jointly, or by me individually, or by myself and any other person. And I defy the world to say with truth that I have, in any manner, entered land in my own name, in company with any person or persons, procured or permitted any person or persons whatsoever to enter land for me, or purchased land from any person, since the suspension by the Union Bank. On examination of the entries, during the same period, I find M. J. Allen has entered only one quarter section, which will be found by reference to No. 7361. That land has not been applied for by any other person for the last eighteen months, to my knowledge. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. R. W. ANDREWS.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.
I certify that the statements herein made are correct.
R. J. HACKLEY, register.

Tallahassee, April 5, 1838.

I certify that I am engaged in the land office at this place, as clerk for R. J. Hackley, register, (the receiver's office being kept in the same room); that Dr. M. J. Allen, receiver, commenced taking the notes of the Tallahassee banks during the last winter, (since their suspension of specie payment), at the earnest request of persons wishing to secure lands; and that he never took said bills, or any other bank notes, at any other rate than fifteen per cent. discount, to the best of my knowledge. I further certify, that his doing so was, in my opinion, an important accommodation to the people, as it not only saved them the trouble of running about to obtain specie, but also reduced the premium five per cent., as twenty per cent., to my knowledge, was the usual price demanded and paid for specie to enter land prior thereto; and that since the receiver has ceased to take any thing but specie or treasury notes, twenty per cent. has been given, to my certain knowledge, for the latter, in the currency of the country, for the purpose of entering land.
H. R. W. ANDREWS.

Bank of the Metropolis, April 19, 1838.

I have between $18,000 and $30,000 to collect on the government, for the Union Bank of Florida.

da. When these collections are made, I will take in payment the government draft on the receiver of public moneys at Tallahassee.

GEORGE THOMAS, cashier.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, April 21, 1838.

Sir: I have received your letter of the 19th instant, with its enclosures, and will submit the explanations therein made to the president, with those you may offer on the other point, as soon as they are received. It is hoped you will return to the land office and attend to the subject as early as possible. I shall notify Mr. Thomas to-day, that, relying on his note, the department will suspend drawing for the amount he is to pay until the appropriation bills pass, and the payment can be closed here. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the treasury.

M. J. Allen,
Receiver of public money, now in Washington.

April 25, 1838.

Sir: I have received your letter of the 21st instant, and would ask to what other point (requiring explanation) you refer therein; as I am under the impression that I have answered to all the charges of Mr. Gamble, except his statement concerning my subscription to the new stock of the Union Bank, which, being entirely a private concern, I have not noticed.

Our delegate from Florida, (colonel Downing), after examining all the papers, expresses himself dissatisfied with my course only on the point of my having received the 15 per cent. discount, though he acknowledges his belief that this was done for the benefit of the people, and that it was a saving to them; and I now conscientiously aver the same, and aver that it did relieve them to the amount of 5 per cent., besides saving them trouble; which facts you will find proven by others, by reference to the papers enclosed to you in my letter of the 19th instant; and I can procure further testimony to the same purpose, if deemed necessary. As evidence of gain not being my object, I told our delegate (as I did the people at the time of making their entries) that I would return the 15 per cent. on their payment to me of government funds in any reasonable time; which, I repeat now to you, I am perfectly willing and ready to do in every case. I will return to the land office as soon as practicable, which will be at an early date. In your letter of the 2d instant, (of which I have received a copy), you say it would be desirable that all my accounts should be arranged. By reference to the officers to whom I made my returns, you will find that my accounts and returns were all transmitted up to the 1st instant, before I left Tallahassee.

Any communication you may have to make me prior to the 10th of May, you will please direct to me at Baltimore. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. J. ALLEN,Receiver at Tallahassee, Florida.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, May 1, 1838.

Sir: Your letter of the 25th ultimo is received; in answer to which, I have to inform you that the charge as to entering lands is yet pending for further evidence in its support, and for rebutting proof. When that is received from Tallahassee, I shall lay the whole subject before the president. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
M. J. Allen, esq. Tallahassee.

Tallahassee, May 21, 1838.

Sir: I addressed you on the 13th ultimo; and as I have no acknowledgment of its receipt, I enclose a copy. I am yet without answers to letters to persons to whom I was referred for testimony. This may be in consequence of irregular mails, or of Indian disturbances; or it may be that the parties had said more on the subject, verbally, than they could vouch under their hands; and I am inclined to think this latter is the true cause of silence.

I need not say that my original letter, preferring charges against the receiver, was written from a sense of duty, and in the firm belief of the truth of every charge stated. I had heard charges made that lands were falsely marked on maps in the register's office as having been entered, which were not in fact entered, but, after applications by other parties had shown their value, that these lands were or would be entered by Allen, or his partner Andrews, who is the deputy of the register. But I was not informed of the parties who could testify on this point, and therefore said nothing about it. You will find evidence on this point in the letters of major Jesse Coe and general Searcy, and in the letter of colonel Jacob Robinson you will see that entries made by the receiver, under the belief that the lands were valuable, were cancelled when found to be worthless. There are many complaints for conduct such as that stated in the letter of Jesse H. Willis, esq.

I have not thought it necessary to obtain any other certificates than that of John Miller to prove the charge of extorting a high premium for entries of land paid for in the current bank notes of the country. I do not learn that the charge, in numerous instances, add to a large amount, is denied by Dr. Allen.

Before this letter can reach your hands, business will carry me from the territory, on my way to Europe. It is my intention to wait upon you as I pass through the city of Washington.

Very respectfully,
JOHN G. GAMBLE.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

I do hereby certify, that in the month of February last I applied to enter land, at the United States land office in Tallahassee, and, not having the specie, I paid the receiver a premium of 14 per cent. above the government price, for the land applied for.

And on same day I saw T. T. Clarady pay the receiver a premium of 15 per cent. for land entered by him. In both cases, the payment was made in the notes of the Union Bank of Florida.

Given under my hand this 7th day of May, 1838.
JOHN MILLER.

Rock Comfort, April 20, 1838.

DEAR SIR: At the time yours of the 13th instant reached me, I was just starting to my plantation on the river. Since my return home, I have embraced the first opportunity of giving you the information you asked for.

Some time in the fall of 1836 I called at the land office in Tallahassee, in company with general Searcy, who pointed out, on the map, a fraction on the Appalachicola river that seemed to be vacant, and was told that it was applied for, and would be reserved for the applicant till the next day. The next day I called again, with general Searcy, who desired to know whether the fraction had been entered, and was told by the receiver that it was, and that he was making out the certificate—I think it was for himself. I remain yours, with great respect,
JESSE COE.

Col. John G. Gamble.

Tallahassee, May 19, 1838.

DEAR SIR: In answer to yours of the 7th instant, I will state, that about the 18th November, 1836, major Coe and myself concluded to enter some land on the Appalachicola river and vicinity, for which we made application at the register's office, and obtained it. We saw other lots that we wished to enter, marked thus (S) in pencil, which we were informed had been entered. We said no more, but left the office. Next morning, precisely at nine o'clock, we called at the office. I asked Mr. Andrews (the deputy) to let me see the receiver's receipts for certain tracts marked as above stated: for some, he exhibited the receipts; for the rest, he said that he had none. Dr. Allen (the receiver) was sitting at a table writing, and observed that he was then making them out, as he was the enterer, and had omitted to do so. I observed that he was too late, that I or we were applicants for the land. The deputy register said that he did not know what to do, but that it had best be left to the register when he came. I then informed him that I then applied for all the vacant land in the Territory, from day to day, until it suited my convenience to take it out, and that I should contend for the land. The register rode up at this time; the matter was referred to him, and he gave it in our favor. This I believe to be substantially the occurrence alluded to by you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. G. SEARCY.

Col. J. G. Gamble.

Marianna, April 19, 1838.

DEAR SIR: Your note of the 13th instant came to hand, inquiring the conduct of the land officers towards me. When there the time before last, I carried on specie for Dr. Wilson to clear a piece of land; was warned not to designate the tract until ready to clear it, if not taken. In going to the office, John R. Chapman walked with me to ascertain two eights he wanted, but had to exchange Union money before he could take them. I advised him not to designate, but merely to cast his eye over the map, and point at different lands. He did so. Finding what he wanted was not taken, he inquired of Dr. Allen where he could get specie or treasury notes; he was answered they could be had of him at 15 or 20 per cent., (which amount I do not distinctly recollect); but I advised him to try elsewhere. He inquired at the bank, but none were there. He was told 5 per centum was the difference of exchange; but I believe he gave one of the former amounts, to save the land. While in the office, discovering such a watchfulness in certain persons, I asked to look at a map, where I knew real estate lay that would stick to the owner; it was readily shown; near it, on two sides of it, lands had been entered—I knew in one of the cases, by mistake. I put my pencil on ten or a dozen pieces, expressing some astonishment that such lands should be so long passed over, remarking that I had not entered the land for market, but for a settlement; but when my new stock was available, I would likely call. Chapman came up, remarking, the owners of the adjoining lands must share in that. I bound him in honor not to interfere with what I had marked; he wanted me to specify a time he should be bound to wait; I stated, when the banks resumed specie payments, as I could not pay 15 or 20 per centum. We passed off; in about an hour we called to clear his two pieces, and found, as he stated to me, three pieces of what I had noticed taken, scattered through my selection; in examining, I found the northeast of section 28 taken by Dr. Allen, in the midst of my settlement. I thought I had purchased the west half of it in the sales, but was mistaken. I explained the mistake to Dr. Allen in the presence of major Hackley. He (Allen) asked me 100 per cent. I offered him $100; he at first refused; but major Hackley came out so strong that he finally acceded to my offer. Hackley stated that he, as register, was blamed with speculation in his office, while he had stood aloof, but that Allen and Andrews were speculating to the disadvantage of the old settlers; and that, although governor Call had stated they had a right, he thought it improper, having before them the maps and books: the piece I got of him at $300; the papers had not been sent on. Chapman further states that the pieces marked "cleared," were abandoned. I told the joke to captain Mooring, and the fellow, no doubt, got wind of a trick, and drew off. Yours, very respectfully,

JACOB ROBINSON.

Col. J. G. Gamble.

P. S. It is hoped the directory will give to this section an independent sufficient branch to do the business of this country this fall; I am persuaded it will be to the interest of the institution.

Tallahassee, May 15, 1838.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiries on the subject of a transaction which occurred at the land office in this place, between Dr. Allen, the receiver, and myself, about the latter part of February last, I will state, first, that I do not desire to be an accuser of that gentleman, yet I cannot deny to you a statement of the facts you allude to. My friend, general John G. Chapman of Maryland, had visited this country for the purpose of making a planting establishment. He had examined several tracts of land, and had reports of many others that were for sale; one of which, belonging to Mr. Keith, lying on the Chupoln river, we thought from description would suit him. He had confided very much to my judgment and advice in the selection he contemplated making, and, being anxious to return home, he left it to me to examine Mr. Keith's land and report on it, which, if done favorably, it was to be considered a purchase between Mr. Keith and himself, all other parts of the bargain having been fully concluded between general Chapman and Mr. Keith. At the time it was convenient for me to go and look at the land, I called on Mr. Keith, then in Tallahassee, to obtain a description of the sections and townships. From his papers I made a small rough map with my pencil, of the land sections 26, 27, 34, and 35, in all of which Mr. Keith's tract run; marking upon the southwest quarter of 27 that it was

"vacant," as Mr. Keith informed me. I then went to the land office, (for the receiver's and register's offices are kept in the same room,) and asked Dr. Allen to get Mr. Andrews, the clerk of the register, to have me a perfect map made out of the township in which this land was situated, (which service he was in the habit of rendering to all who desired it,) denoting the entered and vacant land, and to have it done by the next day, leaving, at the same time, the "rough map," which I had made from Mr. Keith's description of the land, upon which was written in full, in lead pencil, on the southwest quarter of section 27, the word "vacant;" which I had done because Mr. Keith informed me that it was vacant, and was highly essential to the tract, and ought to be entered by general Chapman if he purchased, and, if not, he intended to enter it himself. These remarks of Mr. Keith was the reason why I so particularly designated this piece by the word "vacant," in pencil. When I called at the land office next afternoon to get the map ordered to be made out, (L. A. Thompson was with me, by accident, and witnessed what occurred between Dr. Allen and myself,) it was handed to me with the "rough map" I had left. I observed on the one made for me that the southwest quarter of 27 was marked as entered. I remarked to Dr. Allen that there was an error; that this piece was vacant. He replied, that he expected the map was correct. I replied again that it was not, for I had examined the land office the day before, when I ordered the map made out, and it was then vacant, and, unless since entered, there must be a mistake. He hemmed and hawed, and finally acknowledged that he had entered it. My first impressions, you may imagine, were not of a very pacific character. I felt indignant, and did not hesitate to so express myself. Here some altercation in words took place, which confused the doctor some little. He, however, made the remark, that if general Chapman wanted the land, he should still have it. Without reply, I left doctor Allen, and with Mr. Thompson, who witnessed all that took place, I consulted with regard to the matter. It was agreed that, as (if general Chapman did not take Mr. Keith's land) Mr. Keith's interests would be prejudiced, it would be better to make him acquainted with what had occurred. This I did; and upon consultation with that gentleman, determined to wrest the land from Dr. Allen without conditions. I therefore prepared myself with $200 in specie, and went to him with a deed prepared by Mr. Thompson, to pay for and obtain a transfer of the land. He received the money, but, instead of signing the deed, altered the entry in his book, and gave me the usual land office receipts in my own name. In twenty minutes after, I deeded it to Mr. Keith, with the understanding that, if general Chapman wanted his land, this piece was to be transferred at cost. My impressions are, that doctor Allen took advantage of my leaving the rough map with him, having upon it the word "vacant," written in pencil; and I came to this conclusion from having had repeated complaints of similar conduct in his office.

I am, very respectfully, your ob't. servant,

JESSE H. WILLIS.

Col. John G. Gamble.

Treasury Department, June 23, 1838.

Sir: Copies of letters from John G. Gamble and John C. McGehee are herewith enclosed; and I have to request that you will furnish such explanations and further evidence as it may be in your power to offer, as well in relation to the charge of Mr. McGehee as to the former complaints preferred by colonel Gamble, at an early day.

I am, very respectfully, your ob't. servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Matthew J. Allen, Esq.,

Receiver of public money, Tallahassee, Florida.

Washington City, June 21, 1838.

Sir: I have not been so fortunate as to find you at home or disengaged when I called at the department, and I am obliged to proceed immediately to New York.

The enclosed letter from judge McGehee, in relation to the conduct of the agents of the land office, was received, under cover, last evening; and is handed over to be placed with those previously forwarded.

My letter of 18th April advised that I had been misinformed of the facts in relation to one of the charges made against Mr. Allen in my letter of 21st February. All the other charges, I presume, are admitted by Mr. Allen; and, if denied, are proved by the evidence forwarded. I repeat what I said in my letter of the 18th April, that I volunteered in this business from a sense of public duty, which must be performed by some one. I had no personal cause of complaint, and no private grief to urge me to the course: nor did I anticipate that I should have had devolved on me the trouble of hunting up the evidence in support of the charges. I thought the investigation would have been made in Florida, where Mr. Allen and the witnesses would have met face to face.

Andrews continues to be the representative of Allen in the office of receiver. He is still clerk of the register. The two offices are kept in the same room; and, in practice, are no longer checks upon each other. Respectfully,

JOHN G. GAMELE.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Hickstovon, May 11, 1838.

DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter of the 8th, in relation to the charges against the agents of the land office in Tallahassee, and requesting me to state what I know in relation to the entry of Mr. Wallace's land. I will do so, as nearly as I can recollect.

I think near two years ago, Mr. Wallace, who had purchased an improvement, placed money in the hands of a Mr. Perry to enter an eighth of land for him. Perry applied, with the numbers and other description of the land, at the register's office, and (as Mr. Wallace said) was told that there was not time then to prepare the papers, but that if he would apply in the morning, his business should be attended to; he accordingly applied the following day, and was then told by Mr. Andrews, the register's clerk, that he had entered that land himself.

Some short time afterwards Mr. Wallace applied to me to inquire into it while at Tallahassee, (for I was then on my way). I called at the register's office, and applied to enter the same land, and was promptly told that the land had been entered by Mr. Andrews, the register's clerk. I then asked him some questions in relation to the entry, when he made it, and who informed him of the land, &c.; and became convinced, from his answers that all was not right, and gave him notice that I would continue the investigation until I could be fully satisfied. I immediately informed Mr. Hackley of what had occurred, and my suspicions of his clerk. He promised that it should immediately be looked into. I set out in a few minutes after this for St. Marks, and returned the next day, when Mr. Hackley informed me that it was a mistake of Mr. Andrews; that it was rectified, and that Mr. Wallace had the land. Here the matter ended. I have no reason to suppose that Mr. Hackley knew any thing of this matter until I informed him, and believe he had it corrected.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

JOHN C. McGEHEE.

Colonel John G. Gamble.

Receiver's Office, Tallahassee, July 12, 1838.

Sir: In your communication of the 23d ultimo, enclosing copies of letters from John G. Gamble and John C. McGehee, you request me to submit such explanations and further evidence as I may be able, with regard to the charge of Mr. McGehee, as also of the former complaints of colonel Gamble. As regards the former, the letter of Mr. McGehee does not even mention my name; and the transactions spoken of by him (according to the dates given by himself) transpired before I entered the land office, viz: in May, 1836. You will find, by reference to my returns, that I did not commence the duties of receiver till the 12th of August, 1836; however, I know nothing concerning it, except that Mr. Andrews says the case is mistaken. With regard to the charges of colonel Gamble, I believe I have answered them all in my former communications, (to which I refer you,) except his statements concerning my subscription to the Union Bank, which, being entirely a private matter, I presumed needed none. I will, however, state the circumstances connected with that transaction. The Union Bank, having determined to increase her capital $2,000,000, invited subscriptions to the new stock, to be secured by mortgage on real estate and negroes. At the time I subscribed, the subscriptions amounted to about $9,000,000, (more than four times the amount to be divided among the subscribers;) therefore, to get what you wanted, you were obliged to subscribe four times that amount. I desired, at that time, to put some lands which I had purchased (at government price) into the bank; the unimproved lands were usually appraised at from five to ten dollars per acre, and the bank was to pay out two-thirds of the valuation to the subscribers. I subscribed, through mistake, one day after the time limited, and my subscription was, on that account, thrown out. I have not a dollar of stock in the bank. I am fearful this will be tedious to you; but I could not tell what further evidence you desired, except you referred to this subject.

In conclusion, I will notice an assertion of col. Gamble, in his letter of the 21st ultimo, viz: "that Mr. H. R. W. Andrews still continues representative of Allen in the office of receiver." This is proved wholly false by the enclosed statement of Mr. R. B. Copeland, and I cannot conceive how colonel Gamble should be unacquainted with its falsehood; and I now assert (what I have before stated) that Mr. Andrews never has acted as my clerk, but that, when absent from the office, I have uniformly employed Mr. Copeland as my clerk and agent. I am, respectfully, your obt. serv't.,
M. J. ALLEN, Receiver, &c.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Tallahassee, July 12, 1838.

I certify that I have been acting as clerk to the receiver at this place since the 6th of April last; which fact is well known in Tallahassee, and especially at the Union Bank of Florida, of which John G. Gamble is president, and where I have made special deposits of what specie I have received since the date aforesaid, to the credit of M. J. Allen, receiver. R. B. COPELAND.

Receiver's Office, Tallahassee, July 23, 1838.

Sir: There remains of the amount I had deposited (as receiver) in the Union Bank of Florida (at the time of their suspension of specie payments), the sum of $12,414 63; which, relying on your letter of the 21st of April, I beg leave to request you will draw for, through George Thomas, esq., cashier of the bank of the Metropolis, according to the purport of the letter above alluded to, and the note of Mr. Thomas addressed to you on the 19th of April last; and I would be pleased that that were done immediately, that that matter might be closed.

The treasurer has overdrawn the specie on hand, as shown by my last weekly return, by upwards of $3,000; in consequence, I presume, of not knowing of the arrangement above alluded to, and my weekly returns of specie subject to draft including that sum in the Union Bank, viz: $12,414 63. Your attention to this subject will greatly oblige me. I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
M. J. ALLEN, Receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury,
Secretary of the treasury, Washington city.

Treasury Department, August 4, 1838.

Sir: You are informed, in reply to your letter of the 23d ultimo, that all was drawn on the bank which Mr. Thomas was disposed to pay; and that no unsettled affairs of the bank exist here. The bank at Tallahassee knows and can inform you of the details. The treasurer has been directed not to overdraw at any time; and it is hoped that his drafts will be promptly met by you. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Sec. of the treasury.
M. J. Allen, esq., Receiver of public moneys, Tallahassee, Florida.

Treasury Department, February 10, 1794.

Sir: The enclosed letter of the 27th of last month, from the collector at Tappahannock, relates to a subject equally delicate and disagreeable. It is my duty to add, that bills have returned protested to the amount of 3,000 dollars.

This conduct, though I trust proceeding from no ill motive in the collector, is of a nature so fatal to the punctual collection of the revenue, and at the same time so vitally injurious to the public credit, that I cannot forbear to submit it as my opinion that the public good requires the superseding of the officer. With perfect respect, &c.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON,

To the president of the United States.

Treasury Department, June 16, 1794.

Sir: It is with regret I inform you that another collector has suffered treasury drafts to return unpaid, which were drawn upon moneys reported by him to be in his hands—Abraham Archer, esq. of Yorktown. Enclosed are letters of apology on the subject. All the drafts which were at first declined were afterwards paid.

I perceive nothing substantially to distinguish this case from that of the collector of Tappahannock who was lately superseded on a similar account. Nor can I forbear, however painful the task, to submit it as my opinion, in this as in that case, that the good of the public service requires a displacement of the officer. Punctuality in this respect is too indispensable not to be made the invariable condition of continuance in office. With perfect respect, &c.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

To the president of the United States.

Treasury Department, February 18, 1795.

The secretary of the treasury has the honor respectfully to submit to the president of the United States certain documents, by which it appears that John Muir, collector for the district of Vienna, in Maryland, has neglected his duty in failing to collect, or to institute in season suits for the recovery of, bonds for duties due to the United States.

The collector has moreover failed to pay certain drafts, drawn on him by the treasurer of the United States, for moneys appearing, by returns to the treasury, to be on hand; and in this respect he is found to be in the same predicament as the collectors of York and Tappahannock who were superseded.

The secretary is firmly of opinion that the good of the public service requires that this officer should be displaced; and, from inquiries which he has made of Mr. Murray, of the house of representatives, he is induced to believe that James Frazier is a fit character to succeed to the office. All which is most respectfully submitted.

OLIVER WOLCOTT, Sec. of the treasury.

To the president of the United States.

[Mr. Allen is indebted to the government twenty-six thousand six hundred and ninety-one dollars and fifty-seven cents, ($26,691 57.)]

11.—Correspondence with John Spencer, receiver at Fort Wayne.

Treasury Department, April 25, 1836.

Sir: Your letter of the 4th inst., enclosing a return for the month of March, and a quarterly account for the quarter ending on the 31st ult., is received. Quarterly returns or accounts are not required to be made to the secretary of the treasury, but to the commissioner of the general land office, as your instructions from that officer will inform you. The returns required to be made to the secretary of the treasury, as you will perceive from the enclosed circular, are monthly, being duplicates of similar statements rendered to the general land office, and corresponding, in form, to that for March, received with your letter. As these statements for January and February last have not been received at the department, I must claim your attention to the omission, and insist on their transmission, in future, immediately after the close of each month. At the same time, I would also claim your strict attention to the regulations of the department in respect to the periodical deposits of the public money, and to the duty transmitting the usual evidences of such deposits to the secretary of the treasury, as the instructions require. I am, very respectfully, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Sec. of the treasury.

Col. John Spencer, receiver of public moneys,
Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Treasury Department, May 23, 1836.

Sir: Since the date of my letter to you of the 25th ult., your returns for the month of April have been received, from which I perceive that the public moneys in your hands on the 30th ult. amounted to the sum of $247,251 64, which amount is the accumulated receipts of your office since the 1st of January last. You cannot but be aware that the retention of the public moneys in your hands beyond the period of one month, unless the receipts of such month be less than $10,000, is a violation of your instructions. The object of this letter is, first, to require that the whole balance on hand at the time of the receipt of this letter shall be immediately deposited, and a certificate of such deposit transmitted to the department without delay; second, to inform you that the department cannot overlook the omission to do so, or your future neglect to deposit monthly, and to transmit your monthly returns, accompanied by the evidence of your deposit, in time to be received at this office within the month next preceding that for which the return is rendered; third, that any neglect or inattention to these requirements, unless satisfactorily accounted for, will require of me, from a sense of official duty, that you be reported to the president, with a recommendation that you be removed from office. I am, very respectfully, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Sec. of the treasury.
Col. John Spencer, receiver of public moneys,
Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Treasury Department, July 8, 1836.

Sir: Since my letter to you of the 29th ult., directing an examination to be made into the state of the land office at Fort Wayne, Indiana, the returns of the receiver for the month of May have been received, and exhibiting a balance of money in his hands, at the close of that month, amounting to $601,350 49. He has transmitted, under date of the 27th ultimo, a certificate of deposit in the "branch state bank of Indiana," made on the 15th of the same month, of $540,433 09, leaving a balance in his hands of $60,947 40.

I have to request that you will instruct Mr. West, the examiner referred to in my letter above stated, to make special inquiry into this matter, and report to the department the result. I am, very respectfully, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Sec. of the treasury.

Ethan A. Brown, esq.,
Commissioner of the general land office.

Treasury Department, July 8, 1836.

Sir: Your account as receiver of public moneys at Fort Wayne, for the month of May last, with the enclosed certificate of deposit, in the branch state bank of Indiana, for $540,433 09, has been received, leaving a balance in your hands of $60,947 40. I have to request to be informed why the whole amount in your hands was not deposited at the same time with the first-mentioned sum. I am, very respectfully, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Sec. of the treasury.
John Spencer, receiver, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Receiver's Office, Fort Wayne, July 29, 1836.

Sir: Yours of the 8th, urging an explanation why the balance of the money on hand was not deposited at the time I made the last deposit, obliges me to state to you, that, owing to the great amount of money that I had with me at that time, (for I had the whole amount due from me to the government at the time I left the office, except the specie that came in after the wagon that hauled the silver had left, which was about one week before I left myself), the cashier of the bank declined receiving in that deposit the eastern money and drafts, viz: on the safety-fund banks of New York, and the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Michigan; which I received, supposing that they were embraced in his list of funds. The eastern funds, I left in the bank at Richmond, with the cashier's promise that they should go in the next deposit. The Michigan paper I sent to Michigan bank; which was deposited there, and the certificate forwarded to the commissioner of the general land office in the last quarterly report.

The bank at Richmond received that deposit with great reluctance, being fearful that the government might draw the funds out before they could make their arrangement. The money is yet in the bank, for the government. I shall leave without delay, to make deposit, having received information that the bank at Indianapolis would receive the deposits, notwithstanding the letter from the president of that bank, which was the cause of my detention from making the deposit immediately after the receipt of your letter directing me to deposit in that bank, instead of that at Richmond.

Copy of a letter from the president of branch bank at Indianapolis, dated July 14, 1836.

Sir: Having understood that the secretary of the treasury has directed you to deposit moneys received at your office for public lands at this branch, I deem it proper that I should apprise you that the directory have it in contemplation to decline for the present receiving any further deposits, believing that we cannot accede to the terms embraced in the late act of congress in relation to the deposits, without too great a sacrifice of interest to this institution.

I am authorised to say to you, the board of directors of this branch, unwilling to add to its responsibility so heavy an amount as would likely be your next payment, have decided not to receive the deposit from that office. Respectfully, yours,
HENRY BATES, president.

John Spencer, receiver.
 Hereafter, I assure you that the deposits will be made, so far as I am concerned, in strict accordance with my instructions. Respectfully, sir, I am your humble servant,
JOHN SPENCER.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

 I certify that the above is a true copy: August 20, 1836.
JOHN M. WILIT,
Clerk in receiver's office, Fort Wayne.

NOTE.—Mr. Spencer offers the above as a proof that he was obliged to make a discount, or sustain a loss, when depositing at Indianapolis.
 I have not time to send a duplicate of the above.

Treasury Department, August 13, 1836.
 Sir: Your letter of the 25th ult., enclosing your monthly return for June, is received. Seeing that the balance in your hands amounts to the sum of $100,599 32, I must require that the same be transmitted to the bank of deposit forthwith, and request you to explain why the amount has been so long retained in your hands.

No answer to my letter of the 8th ult. has been received. I am, &c.
LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
Receiver of public money, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Receiver's office, Fort Wayne, August 22, 1836.
 Sir: I have just received yours of the 13th inst., acknowledging the receipt of my letter of the 25th ult., and returns for that month. It also presents the inquiry why the balance of $100,599 32 was retained so long in hand, and observes that no reply had been received to your letter of the 8th ult.

In answer to the above, I reply, that an answer at some length was written to your letter of the 8th, dated July 29th, which was probably on the way when you wrote on the 13th inst., and would no doubt be received soon after. The amount of funds in the Richmond bank, which I spoke of, was $52,831 39, and is included in the enclosed certificate of deposit.

My reasons why the balance of $100,599 32 was so long retained, are as follows: On the 20th of June I returned from depositing at Richmond.—From this time to the 26th I was busied in procuring security to my new bond, according to the requisition contained in the circular from the commissioner of the general land office of 25th May, and which was received on the 4th of June, while I was absent. On the 26th I started for Rockville to have it approved, and returned on the 10th of July; the office was opened on the 11th, and the extraordinary press of business rendered it advisable that I should remain for a few days until the press would be over. While preparing the funds for deposit which had accumulated to a large amount, I received the letter from the president of the branch at Indianapolis, (a copy of which I sent you in my letter of the 29th ult.), refusing the deposits from me. Afterwards, I received another letter accepting them, and, as soon as I could thereafter, I left to make the deposit, the result of which is contained in the enclosed certificate.

I beg leave to repeat the assurance that every attention shall be given to the subject of depositing which its importance and my duty require.
JOHN SPENCER, receiver.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Office of the state bank of Indiana, At Fort Wayne, Aug. 22, 1836.

Understanding that reports are in circulation in regard to the course that has been pursued by col. John Spencer, receiver of public moneys in this place, in receiving at a discount uncurrent paper in payment for lands, which are calculated to injure him in his relation to the government, I take this opportunity of stating such facts upon this subject as have come within my knowledge. The situation which I have occupied for some time in this branch bank, the daily intercourse which I have had with the receiver, and the consequent knowledge which I have obtained of the manner in which he has discharged his official duties, lead me to the opinion that the reports alluded to have originated either in misunderstanding or misrepresentation.

That paper not authorised by the cashier of the deposit branches at Richmond and Indianapolis to be received by the receiver has in some instances been taken by him at a small discount, is not denied by col. Spencer himself; but I take pleasure in saying, that in no instance within my knowledge has this been done when the necessary exchanges could have been effected at this bank or with individuals. Owing to the great amount of the sales of the public lands in this district for some months past, and the fact that a large majority of land-buyers have come here unprovided with the right kind of funds, the demand upon us for land-office money has been greater than we could supply. Under these circumstances, if exchanges had not been made by the receiver, many individuals who had come a long distance would have been under the necessity of departing without the lands they had in many instances selected, or travelling, at the risk of losing their selections, at least one hundred miles, over roads the greater part of the year almost impassable, to obtain the right kind of funds. It is under such circumstances, when the purchaser could be accommodated nowhere else, that uncurrent paper has been taken by the receiver at a discount.

I feel very confident that these exchanges have not been made at the desire of col. Spencer. In many instances, within my own knowledge, he has peremptorily refused to make the desired exchanges; and in all instances I doubt not that he has been induced to do it, rather on account of the pressing solicitation of purchasers, than with a view to his own emolument. In some cases, when we could not afford the necessary accommodation in bank, I have suggested to col. Spencer the necessity of his taking, in some instances, at such rate of discount as would satisfy him for the expenses of making the re-exchanges, other than land-office money.

I doubt not that the exchanges alluded to have been made by the receiver with reluctance, and at a small discount; and that if he is at fault in this matter, he has erred in liberality towards land purchasers, and a desire to accommodate them, and not with the intention of advancing his individual interests.

I give the foregoing to be used by col. Spencer as he may deem proper.
H. McCULLOCK, cashier.

Madison, August 31, 1836.

Sir: I am informed that some things are stated recently to the prejudice of col. John Spencer, receiver at Fort Wayne; and I am requested to write you. In doing so, I can only say that I have been gratified in learning that his deposits have been made to your satisfaction; and, if so, I hope that minor matters, if mere irregularities, will be overlooked. He is reputed to be an honest and honorable man, and I do not believe that he has intentionally either done wrong or violated his instructions. It would to some extent produce excitement if he were removed, for he has many warm and influential friends both at Fort Wayne and in Dearborn county, from which he removed to his present residence. Better let it be. With much respect,
WILLIAM HENDRICKS.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, September 2, 1836.

Sir: I have received the report of Mr. West upon the transactions of the land office under your charge; upon which I beg leave to remark, that the department trusts your deposits will hereafter be promptly made, and that no exchanges whatever of money will take place on any terms, as they open a door to improper practices and untounded imputations. I am happy to add, that the department can readily see the difficulties in resisting importunities to exchange money and to receive what is not permitted by regulation. It can also duly appreciate your excuses for not making more prompt returns and more frequent deposits; but it trusts that, hereafter, a more rigid conformity to your instructions will be practicable, and will remove all cause of apprehension and complaint. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY,
sec. of the treasury.

Col. John Spencer, receiver, Fort Wayne.

Treasury department, September 7, 1836.

Sir: Your letter of the 31st ultimo is received, and I am happy to inform you that Mr. Spencer's explanations have been such that he will, probably, continue in office. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEVI WOODBURY,
sec. of the treasury.

Hon. William Hendricks, Madison, Indiana.

Receiver's office, Fort Wayne, October 27, 1836.

Sir: This is to inform you that I have forwarded to the deposit bank one hundred and four thousand dollars, in silver, there to remain until I arrive with the gold and paper money.

My democratic friends think that I ought not to leave until after we hold our election for president, on the 7th November, which I have concluded to await; and shall leave on that evening, or the next morning, to deposit, with all the funds on hand up to that time. I shall write you again before I leave. The sales are rapid, mostly paid in gold and silver. My quarterly report will be forwarded by next mail for last quarter, which ought to have been done sooner, only for the want of help in the office. Hereafter, I think I can get my reports off, without much delay, after the close of the month and quarter. I am yours, respectfully,
JOHN SPENCER, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Receiver's office, Fort Wayne, November 8, 1836.

Sir: To-day I leave to deposit all the funds that I have on hand. I shall probably leave them at Lawrenceburg. During my absence, the office will be in the care of John M. Wilt. I shall be gone, probably, about two weeks. Respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN SPENCER.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Cincinnati, November 28, 1836.

Sir: Herewith you will receive the certificates of my last deposit. I have been much longer on the road than I had expected, owing to the badness of the same. We have had very wet weather, which caused high waters. I am now on my way to the office, and shall write you more fully when I get home. I am yours, respectfully,
JOHN SPENCER,
Receiver of public moneys, Fort Wayne.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

N. B. I had sent, some time since, $21,000 to the care of the Commercial Bank, until my arrival; the cashier then informed me that he had placed the same to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, which caused the two receipts of deposit. The charges on my books shall be the same as if all had been made together.
JOHN SPENCER.

Receiver's office, Fort Wayne, January 18, 1837.

Sir: Enclosed I send my certificate of deposit for one hundred and nineteen thousand one hundred and sixty-three dollars and eighteen cents, from branch bank of the state of Indiana, at Lawrenceburg. $119,163 18. Respectfully yours,
JOHN SPENCER.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

JOHN SPENCER, receiver.

House of representatives,
Washington city, January 5, 1837.

Sir: I desire to see the report of the examiner of the land office at Fort Wayne, Ia., made by Mr. West last fall, and all the papers connected with and relating to that report and examination, including the letters and correspondence of such officers of the government, and members of congress of either house, as may be on file in the treasury department upon that subject, or in reference to the alleged delinquency of the receiver of public moneys at that place; and as these papers are voluminous, and I could not well examine them satisfactorily in your office, I desire copies of the whole, as above referred to. As the letters and correspondence of gentlemen, the copies of which I seek, are upon a subject of a public nature in reference to a public officer, I have supposed they might be seen, and that it is not improper to ask copies. I would be glad to get those copies as early as may suit your convenience.

I have the honor to be, &c.

J. McCARTY.

Hon. Levi Woodbury.

Treasury Department, January 6, 1837.

Sir: Your favor of yesterday has been received; and I have since looked more fully into the papers and correspondence referred to, and regret to find them so voluminous, and some of them of such a personal character, that it would not comport with the general rules of the department to furnish copies of them, unless to individuals interested or assailed in them, or on a proper call by congress. I will, however, be happy to state to you their substance, or furnish copies of any particular papers you may designate, as in your own opinion affecting your private interests or character, if, on examination, it be found that they do. But if none are of that description, (and I believe none are), it appears to me, on mature reflection and examination of the precedents here in similar cases, that if any public purpose is contemplated by the use of the papers, it is better that the copies should be furnished only upon a public requisition. Allow me to add, sir, that if you or any other gentleman wish to prefer any new charges whatever against the receiver at Fort Wayne, or to have any further examination made into those heretofore explained by him, both the president and this department are ready at any moment, to cause a full inquiry to be made into them, and take thereon such further steps as the public interest may appear to require.

I am, very respectfully, your obt. serv't,
LEVI WOODBURY, sec'y. of the treasury.
Hon. J. McCarty, house of representatives.

Receiver's office, Fort Wayne, June 20, 1836.

Sir: I have just returned from making a deposit. I was much delayed in getting off, in consequence of the great press of business in the office, not being able to procure the necessary assistance. During the month of May I had to stay in the office. I had much difficulty in procuring a team to transport the silver, which I at last succeeded in getting. It had to go round through Ohio, by the way of Dayton, and was on the road between two and three weeks. I do assure you that it has been impossible to go through on the route, as allowed by the comptroller, with wagons or on horseback, for a considerable part of the time since the office opened on the 7th of March last. The Wabash, Mississinewa, and Salamonee rivers, and some smaller streams, have been so high as to swim my horse. This I had to do when I went on the 1st of June inst. I got the paper-money wet, but not much injured. It would be more convenient to deposit in Dayton, Cincinnati, or Detroit, than at Richmond or Indianapolis. There is no direct road to either of the last named places.

I am now getting the new bond made, and shall leave in two or three days to see the district judge for its approval.

I regret having been so situated as to get the reprimand from the secretary of the treasury that he has given me. I will in a few days be able to get another clerk, and will in future attend strictly to depositing as well as other duties.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obt. serv't,
JOHN SPENCER, Receiver.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec'y. of the treasury.

12.—Correspondence with J. H. Owens, receiver at St. Stephen's, Alabama.

Treasury Department, February 28, 1835.

Sir: It has been intimated to the Department that a practice prevails at some of the land offices of permitting entries and issuing certificates of purchase, without the payment of the purchase-money at the time of the entry. Such a practice being unauthorised and highly reprehensible, I have deemed it proper to make known to you that if it has been tolerated by you, it must immediately cease; and any repetition of it hereafter, coming to the knowledge of the department, will receive prompt and exemplary notice.

I cannot omit the occasion to impress upon you the necessity of a strict attention to, and punctual compliance with, the duties required of you in regard to the prompt deposit of the public moneys, and transmission of your accounts and returns; and to say to you that the performance of those duties must be regarded as paramount to all other in your official station.

I am, &c.,

LEVI WOODBURY, sec'y. of the treasury.

To receivers of public money at Cahaba, Huntsville, Montgomery, St. Stephen's, Augusta, Chocoma, New Orleans, Ouachita, Demopolis, Mardisville, Sparta, Tuscaloosa, Columbus, Washington, Opelousas, and St. Helena.

Treasury Department, April 12, 1836.

Sir: Finding that no attention had been paid to my letter of the 4th February last, reminding you that your returns for the months of November and December had not been received, and apprising you of the course which your continued neglect of this duty would compel me to adopt, it only remains to inform you that if your returns for November, December, January, February and March, are not received by return of mail, I shall report your neglect to the executive for his immediate action.

I am, &c.,

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
J. H. Owens, esq.
Receiver of public money, St. Stephen's, Ala.

Land office, St. Stephen's, Ala., May 29, 1836.

Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th ultimo, which did not come into my hands as early as due. I am surprised that you have not received my answer to your communication of February, in which I stated the reasons why my returns were delayed, as well as those of the register. All my accounts were made out at that period, but I suspended their transmission at the request of the register, on his discovery that, from the maps having been neglected, in many instances, to be properly marked by his predecessors, he had permitted numerous entries of lands which had been previously sold.

As the individuals were known to us, we thought it better to correct such erroneous entries at once, than to make returns of the lands so sold, and thereby subject such purchasers to delay in the receipt of their money, and the department to unnecessary labor. It required longer time than we had any reason to suppose to gain the attention of these individuals. And apart from this fact, independent of the ordinary business of a land office, in consequence of the appreciated value of the lands granted by the Spanish and other foreign governments, and of which the records are kept here, we are daily subjected to great labor, for which no note is taken, and for which the law allows no perquisite. Preparatory for the courts, the attention of the officers of this office is constantly called for by litigants in the investigation of these old claims, in granting orders of survey, in issuing patent certificates, and in the various incidents of this department of our duty, which necessarily demands time for patient and deliberate investigation. Having been honored, too, sir, with the command of a regiment of the military force of this state, I have been twice called on during this season for active and arduous exertion in organizing and furnishing a portion of the men required to march against the savage foe on our border. Having accepted of this command when no requirement was made on me for exertion, I did not deem myself at liberty to withdraw from it when its duties suddenly became of an important and responsible character.

I have received your letter and prepared my accounts, such as you see them, in the interval of a day from the embodying and marching of a detachment from this regiment to their rendezvous in the Creek nation. Nor did I believe that a little delay would be of serious import, as a reference to the bank returns (which I am assured are transmitted to your department), would show the amounts and periods of my deposits. Whatever my own losses or privations may be in the service of the Government, I am fortunate in having the disposition to pay up, without any other thought than that of the propriety of such a course of conduct, all that may be justly due from me. The causes of these delays, however, having been apparently removed, I beg to assure you that every endeavor will be used by both officers to obviate every complaint for the future. I transmit herewith two certificates of deposit, the originals of which I transmitted to you early in April. If at hand on the receipt of this, be pleased to forward the present enclosure to the commissioner of the general land office. I transmit herewith, also, a certificate of deposit of $30,000, dated 2d May, 1836. I am, very respectfully, your obt. serv't,
J. H. OWEN.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury department, September 7, 1836.

Sir: Again it becomes necessary to request your neglect to make your monthly returns for April, May, and July last, and to request your immediate attention to the subject. I am, &c.

Receiver of public money, St. Stephen's, Alabama.

Treasury department, December 19, 1836.

Sir: Again it becomes my unpleasant duty to complain of the neglect to forward your monthly returns to this office, and your quarterly accounts to the commissioner of the general land office, up to the period of your resignation; and to inform you that, if the same are not forthwith transmitted, it will become my unpleasant duty to cause the accounts to be stated, and to direct suits to be instituted on your official bonds for the amount which appears to be due. I am, &c.

Treasury department, November 30, 1835.

Sir: Your monthly duplicate returns for the months of August, September, and October, have not been received. The frequent occasions on which it becomes necessary to notice the neglect of receivers in this respect, suggests a resort to some more effectual remedy than mere complaint. Hence, as a means of enforcing a strict attention to this duty, I shall report any future omission in this respect for the action of the executive, unless satisfactory reasons are assigned for the neglect. The returns in arrear are expected to be transmitted forthwith. I am, &c.

 SIR: Your returns for the month of December have not been received. I regret that there should be any occasion to notice the neglect or accident, (as the case may be), in this important duty; and avail myself of the occasion to inform you that, unless your future returns are received at the department within the month next succeeding that for which the return is rendered, it will place me under the disagreeable necessity of reporting the fact to the executive, in order to comply with the general rule in this class of cases. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
Jas. W. Stephenson, esq.,
Receiver of public money, Galena.

Land office, Galena, February 27, 1836.
 SIR: I am reminded by yours of the — ultimo, which I had the honor to receive by the last mail, of the necessity of punctuality in the transmission of my monthly returns.

Such (since the commencement of cold whether) has been my own indisposition, such the amount of sales, and such the difficulty of obtaining competent assistance, that delinquency in this branch of my duties has been rendered unavoidable. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. STEPHENSON.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury department, December 5, 1836.
 SIR: It has been my unpleasant duty to complain of your neglect to transmit your monthly returns with promptness on several occasions; and I regret that it again becomes necessary to notice your neglect in this respect, as also of your omission to deposit the public moneys at the intervals prescribed in the instructions of the department. — I have therefore to require that your returns for September, October, and November last, be immediately forwarded to this office; and that the public moneys in your hands be forthwith transmitted to the designated bank of deposit, and placed to the credit of the treasury. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
Receiver of public money, Galena, Illinois.

Land office, Galena, January 5, 1837.
 SIR: I have just returned from St. Louis, via Vandalia; at which latter point I was some time detained in attention to private business. Your letter of the 5th ultimo is now before me, and I can only regret that my delinquency in forwarding returns should have been so frequently the subject of merited reproof. The only apology I can offer is, that the returns were not in a situation for examination, comparison, &c., at the date of my departure; and further that my trip was unexpectedly prolonged. In future, I shall hope to be more punctual. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. STEPHENSON.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Land office, Galena, April 23, 1837.
 SIR: On the 29th ult. I left this place to attend a meeting of the "board of public works" at Vandalia. Previous to my departure an understanding was had between the officers of the Galena branch of the State Bank of Illinois and myself, by which it was stipulated on their part, should my deposit be made with them, and the act meet the displeasure of the secretary, they would immediately place the identical funds to the credit of the United States in the agency of the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati at St. Louis. With guaranty, and the knowledge that the state had recently become a stockholder in the bank, I advised the gentlemen in my office to make the deposit, and forward the certificate immediately. By misunderstanding, however, the certificate was not applied for (although the funds were deposited) before my return. The board of directors of this branch confidently anticipate the deposits; hence their anxiety to preserve the fund in the country until your department shall have expressed its views on this subject. As, in my conception, the only objection to this course proceeded from the delay consequent on awaiting the acknowledgment of the receipt of the certificate herewith enclosed, I must presume to ask your indulgence should my compliance with their request not receive your sanction. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. STEPHENSON.
Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Treasury department, May 11, 1837.
 SIR: I return the certificate of deposit transmitted with your letter of the 23d ult. This deposit being authorized, it becomes necessary that you will promptly deposit all the public moneys with which you are chargeable in the agency of the Commercial Bank of St. Louis; and that you will continue to do so until otherwise directed.

No return having been received from you since that for the month of February, I have not the means of knowing the amount of public moneys in your hands at the time of the deposit in question; but, by your return dated the 28th February, I perceive the balance then on hand was $60,284 46, no part of which appears to have been since deposited. Under these circumstances, it becomes the more imperative that there should be no delay in the transmission of all the moneys in your hands to the designated deposit bank. The selection of the Illinois Bank as a depository of the public moneys is a subject of correspondence, but is not yet complete. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
J. W. Stephenson, esq.,
Receiver of public money, Galena, Illinois.

Land Office, Galena, May 31, 1837.
 SIR: I last evening had the honor to receive your circular of the 12th and letter of the 11th instant, returning my certificate of deposit in the Galena branch of the State Bank of Illinois. The deposit bank at St. Louis having stopped specie payment, as we are advised by the latest intelligence, it becomes necessary, in compliance with your circular of the 12th, that the public moneys on hand be withheld until your department is again heard from on the subject of their disposition. Mine are on special deposit in this bank; and I have now to request that I may be instructed to pay over the amount to my successor in office, who will be advised to receipt for the same. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. STEPHENSON.
Hon. Levi Woodbury,
Secretary of the treasury, Washington city.

Treasury department, June 20, 1837.
 SIR: The request made in your letter of the 31st ult., to be permitted to pay over to your successor in office the public moneys in your hands, is inadmissible. It is desired, however, that the same should be specially deposited to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, in the agency of the Commercial Bank at St. Louis, in case that agency is still in existence, or, in the event that is not, in the Bank of Missouri, as soon as possible; and that you transmit a certificate of the funds of which such deposit consists to this office. — I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
J. W. Stephenson, esq.,
Receiver of public money, Galena, Illinois.

Treasury department, November 11, 1837.
 SIR: Your monthly return for the month of August last has not been received; and you are requested to transmit a duplicate thereof without delay. I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.
 [The above circular was addressed to the receivers at Quincy, Illinois; Fayette, Jackson, and Lexington, Mississippi; Green Bay and Monroe, Michigan, July and August; Mineral Point, Michigan; Crawfordsvile Indiana, September; Galena, Illinois, September; Fayetteville, Arkansas, September; Tallahassee, Florida, September.]

dred and ninety-four dollars and four cents, ($43,294 04.)]

Treasury department, February 7, 1834.

SIR: It has been represented to this department that some of the receivers of public money in Mississippi have been engaged in trading on the bank notes they receive in payment of public lands, by exchanging them for bank notes of inferior value. I hope that there may be some mistake in this business, as it is my duty to state to you that such conduct would be regarded by this department as a gross violation of official duty, and be treated accordingly. But, as such a statement has been made from the most respectable authority, I must ask whether you have engaged in any such use of the public money received by you, and request a prompt answer to this inquiry. — I am, &c.

R. B. TANAY, secretary of the treasury.
To the receivers of public money at Augusta, Mount Salus, Washington, Chochevuna, and Columbus.

Land office, Mount Salus, March 7, 1834.
 SIR: I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 7th ult., the contents of which, I must confess, have astonished me. Should the representation made you, of trading in bank bills, or any speculation in money whatever, be charged against me, I unhesitatingly pronounce the same a gross perversion of truth, and stand prepared to disprove the charge as far as any negative is susceptible of proof; and take this opportunity, if such a charge rests against me, from any source whatever, of suggesting my right to the name of its author, that I may have it in my power as well to expose the calumniator as the calumny. If I know myself, I entered on the duties of my office with the expectation of the lawful profits alone of the office, and not of turning the office into a shaving shop. I have, in many instances, exchanged money for accommodation sake alone, but never for money in any under part, which never could affect the interest of the government; and having no reward for the same, you may be well assured I could have no inducement to disparage the value on interest of the government in such exchange; and have often exchanged Tennessee and Alabama money for our own bank bills, where persons were wishing to travel in the direction of those states, and the aforementioned bills would answer their purposes better there, though not so current here: all of which exchanges (some of them in United States paper, and some in state bank-paper) have been done by me without one cent profit, and, as I before said, without one cent loss to the government, and every individual who has been accommodated, or who has been acquainted with any such exchanges, will corroborate the above statement. If such exchange is a fault, I have erred unintentionally, and without the least benefit to myself if it is not a fault, (and I cannot conceive it one), then I am wholly blameless. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. DICKSON, receiver.
Hon. secretary of the treasury.

Land office, Mount Salus, (Miss.) March 7, 1834.
 I hereby certify that the above statement of S. W. Dickson is true, so far as the facts have come to my knowledge; and I further certify that I have known him, several times, to refuse to take a reward for the exchange of money.

Treasury department, March 25, 1834.
 SIR: The department having received no monthly returns exhibiting the transactions of the land office of which you are receiver, since your appointment, I have thought it proper to call your immediate attention to this duty, and to say to you that, as a means of enforcing a strict compliance with the regulations of the department in this respect, I shall not hesitate to report the case for the action of the executive, should the omission be continued. I am, &c.

R. B. TANAY, sec. of the treasury.
S. W. Dickson, esq.,
receiver of public money, Mount Salus, Miss.

Land office, Mount Salus, April 23, 1834.
 SIR: I hasten to answer your polite communication of 25th ultimo; and to express my great surprise at the circumstance of your not having received our last November return, forwarded to the commissioner of the general land office 31st January last, as soon as it could be prepared; and on 5th April, the December return was sent off; and immediately thereafter, I forwarded the January returns; and on the 31st January, I sent a certificate of deposit to the treasurer, to the amount of three hundred and fifty-nine thousand eight hundred and eight dollars and five cents, of which I informed the commissioner of the general land office. I sent those certificates in advance of my accounts, to show the immense press of business here, and that they might form an apology for the protracted delay of my accounts; and I would now further remark, that, for several of the first weeks, we had such a concourse attendant on the office, we could not more than attend to the immediate sales of land, with several clerks to assist; and we had to wait until January before we could write up the books, and make out the returns in the office, even in the first month. We forwarded our returns in the cases, on account of the bad roads and weather; I am unable to account for the delay of them on the road. You will please find enclosed copies of the letters I sent, accompanying the returns and certificates before referred to, which I hope will satisfy you of my due attention to the business of which you complain. The extreme ill health of my family for the last month, and even now but little abated, has prevented me from forwarding my quarterly returns earlier; but I assure you, the current business of the office is well attended to, and the remaining returns are now maturing for transmission. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. DICKSON, receiver.

Hon. R. B. Taney, secretary of the treasury.

Land office, Mount Solus, (Miss.) May 20, 1834.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you I have completed and forwarded you my monthly returns for the quarter ending the last year, as well as an account current for the same quarter; and that I also forward to the commissioner of general land office my quarterly return. I herewith also enclose to you two certificates of deposit to the credit of the treasurer of the United States: the first, for ninety-four thousand two hundred and forty-nine dollars and eighty-three cents; the second, dated 9th May, 1834, for thirty-one thousand seven hundred and twenty-five dollars and forty-one cents; amounting, in all, to one hundred and twenty-five thousand nine hundred and seventy dollars and twenty-four cents; which sum, added to the certificate which I heretofore forwarded the treasurer, (say three hundred and fifty-nine thousand eight hundred and eight dollars and five cents), amount in all, to four hundred and eighty-five thousand five hundred and thirty-three dollars and twenty-nine cents, posted by me since in office. I beg leave to suggest to your consideration, as an apology for my seeming delinquency in the delay of my returns, that innumerable mistake arose in the land entries of the first quarter, which were brought to my office daily for correction. In attempting to rectify such errors, I have produced a discrepancy in my return of sales and my quarterly and monthly returns. In many instances, those land purchasers would apply for, and obtain, a return of their money for lands previously sold and not marked on the maps, after my abstract for those sales would be written up; in some such cases the correction was made on the register, and in the bustle of business, neglected on the abstracts; which, I think, must have produced the errors. These errors required a search into each individual entry, over the immense sales of the two first months, in my book in the office, making a tenfold labor to the ordinary examinations and preparations. I now make my quarterly returns agree with my register, which induces the belief that the mistake has arisen, as before mentioned. I would now suggest, that all the improper entries, producing such endless trouble, were not under my control, and could not originate with me, and many of them not in the register's power to avoid, the maps being, in many instances, improperly marked. And another circumstance well calculated to produce embarrassment, the office was, in all the last quarter of the last year, not only full, but more than full, with eager purchasers. The spirit of speculation produced great fears with all the settlers, lest speculators would purchase around them, and crowd their settlements; and such was the mania, that many applied for, and some actually purchased, lands they had long since paid for; and such uneasiness prevailed that the register informed me, and I believe the fact to be that many made two, and some three, applications for the same land. Hundreds waited for weeks at the office, which produced a confusion unavoidable by the officers. I must thus particular to show the endless trouble I have had to encounter, in correcting mistakes over which I had no control; and I was informed that the practice had been, in the office, to correct mistakes before the entries were sent up. I was not aware, until recently, that my register of receipts each month should be accompanied by a monthly return to your department, not having seen instructions. I am now maturing, and will in a few days complete, my monthly returns for your department, and forward them, of the first quarter of this year. I do expect, as soon as I can get the business up, to be able to keep my returns up with the business. I have had an extremely sick family for the last eight weeks; but have used every exertion my situation, as such, would afford in the discharge of my official duties. I have charged the sales with the amount sent heretofore in the register of receipts; and charged in the succeeding month the error to balance the account; of which I will inform the commissioner of the general land office. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. DICKSON, receiver.

Sir: I regret to perceive, from your letter of the 23th ultimo, that the regulations of the department in regard to the transmission of monthly returns and certificates of deposit, have either been overlooked or not understood. Monthly returns, as the enclosed instructions will inform you, are to be made in duplicate; one to be forwarded to the secretary of the treasury, and the other to the general land office.

Certificates of deposit are to be addressed to this office. These, and the prompt and punctual deposit of the public money, are to be regarded as paramount duties, the strict performance of which will be insisted on. I am, &c.

S. W. Dickson, esq.

Treasury Department, November 1, 1834.

Sir: Observing that the sum of money deposited by you on the 30th of September last, is short, by a large amount, of the sum in your hands at that date, it is proper that I should call your attention to that clause of the circular of the 1st of May, 1831, which requires that each deposit shall include all the moneys in your possession, and inform you that the department will hold you to a strict compliance with the regulations in this respect.

I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the Treasury.

S. W. Dickson, esq.

Receiver of public money, Mount Solus, Miss.

Treasury Department, January 30, 1835.

Sir: Again it becomes my duty to notice your neglect to render your returns for the months of October, November, and December last. I feel the more surprised at the omission, since, by letters from the department, dated 25th of March and 21st of May last, you were given to understand the course which your neglect would oblige the department to adopt. It only remains to say, that if your returns are not promptly and punctually rendered, and the public moneys deposited as the instructions of the department require, I shall be under the painful necessity to recommend to the president that you be removed from office.

I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

S. W. Dickson, esq.,

Receiver of public money, Mount Solus.

Treasury Department, February 4, 1836.

Sir: Your returns for the months of November and December have not been received. I regret that there should be any occasion to notice the neglect or accident (as the case may be) in this important duty; and avail myself of the occasion to inform you that, unless your future returns are received at the department within the month next succeeding that for which the return is rendered, it will place me under the disagreeable necessity of reporting the fact to the executive, in order to comply with the general rule in this class of cases.

I am, &c.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the treasury.

To receive at Mount Solus.

Land office, Mount Solus, (Miss.) Feb. 16, 1836.

Sir: I herewith send you my monthly account current for November last; the vouchers are forwarded to the commissioner of the general land office. I very much regret this great delay in my returns, but it has been beyond my control to do otherwise. I have labored under severe indisposition for several weeks, and a part of the time I have been confined to my bed. I was first attacked with erysipelas of the ankle, and during the public sales was compelled to expose myself so much as to endanger the loss of my limb, if not my life; since which time my health has occasionally alternated, but I have never attended to business two days at a time without relapsing.

Another serious inconvenience to the discharge of my duties: my old clerk, in the midst of the press, was compelled to leave me; and I can assure you it was as much as I could effect to keep up the current business, and properly attend to the moneyed concerns of the office. My returns will be brought up as soon as my health will allow. The vicissitudes of my health have been so severe I shall, by this mail, send in my resignation to take place at the end of this quarter.

I would beg leave to mention that, though my vouchers of deposit in Natchez bank are late in their date, yet the money was deposited in the branch bank at Jackson in due time, and my indisposition prevented me from attending to the forwarding the certificates to Natchez; in fact, my bodily infirmity has prevented me from regular attention to the duties of my office.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. DICKSON, receiver.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, sec. of the treasury.

Land office, Mount Solus, (Miss.) March 15, 1836.

Sir: I herewith enclose you my monthly account current for the month of December last, a duplicate of which, with the vouchers, is sent to the commissioner of the general land office.

I beg leave to refer to my quarterly account current, sent to the general land office, showing the true balance on hand at the end of the third quarter, to show the error of $600 excess, which is charged to be on hand in the October monthly account; the error has also run through the monthly account current of November last, but the quarterly account current of each year corrects the mistake. I have also explained this error to the commissioner of the land office.

You will please make allowance for my very bad health for some months past, as a reason for my delay in my accounts. I have barely been able to keep up the current business of the office, and leave my accounts behind their usual time of settlement. I can assure you the deposits are all regularly made, and the fiscal concerns of the office wholesomely conducted. You must bear with my delay in the accounts. If I had anticipated such continued ill health, I would have resigned before this time. I hope, however, to bring up my accounts, as my health, within a few days, has greatly improved; and I shall spare no pains, as my health will permit, to settle all my accounts as soon as possible after my resignation takes place.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. DICKSON, receiver.

CIRCULAR.

Treasury Department, February 28, 1835.

Sir: It has been intimated to the department that a practice prevails at some of the land offices of permitting entries and issuing certificates of purchase, without the payment of the purchase-money at the time of the entry. Such a practice being unauthorised and highly reprehensible, I have deemed it proper to make known to you, that, if it has been tolerated by you, it must immediately cease; and any repetition of it hereafter, coming to the knowledge of the department, will receive prompt and exemplary notice.

I cannot omit the occasion to impress upon you the necessity of a strict attention to, and punctual compliance with, the duties required of you in regard to the prompt deposit of the public moneys, and transmission of your accounts and returns; and to say to you that the performance of those duties must be regarded as paramount to all other in your official station. I am, &c.

Treasury Department, January 29, 1836.

Sir: Finding that no monthly returns of the transactions of your office have been received since your appointment to office, I must claim your immediate attention to this duty. I enclose a blank, showing the form in which they are to be rendered, and request that you will transmit one for each of the months in arrear, and also for each future month, to this office; and, at the same time, a duplicate to the commissioner of the general land office.

Punctuality in the discharge of this duty, and in the transmission of the public moneys to the bank of deposit will be insisted on; and I would therefore commend you to a strict regard to the instructions of the department in these respects. The abstract of the month of December, addressed to this office, is received; but as it is not in the form required, it is as being referred to the land office. I am, &c.

Receiver of public money, Opelousas, Louisiana.

Receiver's office at Opelousas, La., Sept. 5, 1836.

Sir: Enclosed you have the affidavit of André Martin, esq., who was present on the 2d instant when I offered to deposit, in the office of discount and deposit of the Union Bank of Louisiana at Vermilionville, the sum of $17,200, all in bills of specie-paying banks in New Orleans, except $25 gold and silver; and a great quantity of said bills were the bills of the Union bank itself. The cashier of the said office of discount and deposit of the Union Bank of Louisiana gave no other reason why he would not accept the deposit offered by me, but that he was aware that congress, at the late session, had passed a law making it the duty of receivers of public moneys to receive only gold and silver; and moreover, that the government would only receive gold and silver from a deposit bank; and that he would receive nothing else in deposit on account of the government of the United States but gold and silver. I asked him (the cashier) if he had been instructed by the mother bank, and he said no, have brought the money, to wit, $17,200, all back to Opelousas, and have deposited the same in the office of discount and deposit of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of New Orleans at Opelousas, where it will remain until you instruct me that I am to do with it. I have always discovered in the cashier of the branch of the Union Bank at Vermilionville a disposition not to receive the deposits from this office, and several times he has told me that he would not receive the bills of any of the deposit banks in the state of Mississippi, which I always thought it my duty to receive.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN L. DANIEL, receiver.

Vernilionville, September 2, 1836.

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, parish judge, within and for said parish, André Martin, esq., of said parish, who declared, on oath first had and taken, that he was present on this day, the second day of September aforesaid, at the office of discount and deposit of the Union Bank of Louisiana, established in Vermilionville, in the parish of Lafayette aforesaid, when John L. Daniel, esq., receiver of public moneys at Opelousas, in this state, offered to deposit in said branch of the Union Bank of Louisiana, established at Vermilionville aforesaid, the sum of seventeen thousand two hundred dollars, public moneys belonging to the United States, all in bank bills payable in this state, except twenty-five dollars in gold and silver, and which sum of seventeen thousand two hundred dollars the cashier (Casimer Derbigny) of said branch of the Union Bank of Louisiana at Vermilionville refused to receive on deposit for the government of the United States.

ANDRÉ MARTIN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, the undersigned, parish judge in and for the parish of Lafayette aforesaid, on the day and year first above written.

Receiver of public money, Opelousas, Louisiana.

Receiver's office, Opelousas, (La.) Nov. 6, 1836.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3d of last month, enclosing a copy of a letter from Martin Gordon, jr., cashier of the Union Bank of Louisiana. I can only state, in answer, that when I arrived at the branch of the Union Bank at Vermilionville, to deposit the sum of $17,200, I recited to Mr. Derbigny that part of your circular which referred to the manner the deposits should be made after the 15th of August last, and further remarked to Mr. Derbigny that the certificates could be made out as usual, only stating below how much of the amount was in gold and silver, and how much of the amount was in current bank notes. Mr. Derbigny replied that he cared nothing about the form of the certificate, as he would not receive anything on deposit from the United States but gold and silver; he further stated thus, that, if I was a mind to leave the money in deposit on my own account, he would take a list of the bills, and I could leave it. All the above can be proved by Mr. Martin, and, perhaps by Mr. Voorhees. Since the time I offered to deposit as aforesaid, the directory of the bank at Vermilionville, as well as some of the directors of the mother bank, have been so well convinced of the misconduct of Mr. Derbigny, in regard to the aforesaid deposit, and in regard to others of his duties, that they have told him it would be better for him to resign, as he would certainly be turned out of the office he then held if he did not resign; and he, knowing that he could not much longer hold the same, resigned the office; which is now filled by a very worthy gentleman. I could forward you the certificate of Mr. Martin, confirming what I have above stated, and I could have a part of the same statements confirmed by Mr. Voorhees; and will do so if you require it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN L. DANIEL, receiver.

Sir: After having informed you, in my letter of the 4th of February last, that your continued neglect to transmit your monthly returns, within the month next succeeding that for which they are rendered, would subject me to the painful necessity of reporting the omission to the president, it is with regret that I am again compelled to take notice of a similar neglect. No returns for the months of January, February, and March last, have been received from you. Under these circumstances, I must require that they be rendered forthwith, and inform you that, if they are not received by return of the mail, I shall report your neglect to the executive, with a recommendation that you be dismissed from office. I am, &c.

Receiver of public money, Green Bay, M. T.

Green Bay, May 17, 1836.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 26th, which arrived in the boat which brought me from Detroit.

I am confident that my letter of March 2d, in reply to yours of February 4th, had not been received on the 26th at the department. And in the fear that that, as well as my returns for January, and February, and March, have been lost, I shall prepare and send duplicates by the next mail.

I beg leave to state, that during the past winter it was utterly out of my power to deposit the public money periodically, and at the same time to transmit regularly my returns to the department, signed by myself. During the summer season, no difficulty or omission will occur, and it is probable that the improvements and settlement of the country will have so far advanced by the next winter, that no interruption will happen in the regular discharge of my duties. I have made three trips to Detroit during the past winter, the difficulties of which you of course are unware. And I have written to the honorable Lucius Lyon, of the senate, to call at the department, and make an explanation, which I am sure will be satisfactory. It gives me the greatest pain and uneasiness to find that, in your opinion, I have neglected to perform any part of my duties; and I am impelled to greater exertion to remove that impression by punctuality in future. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. BEALL.

Sec. 3. And be it enacted, That every deposit of money hereafter, in any part of the state as a wager or bet upon elections in this state or elsewhere, shall be forfeited and paid over to the levy courts or county commissioners of the county, for the use of primary schools in said county.

From the quarterly report of the fire commissioners of the city of New York, it appears that the number of fires in that city during the three months ending on the 30th ult. was 64. The property destroyed is valued at $69,186, of which $34,434 were covered by insurance. Nineteen of the fires were occasioned by incendiaries, and seven by defects in the construction of chimneys, &c.

Eric canal tolls. The Albany Journal states that the Eric canal is yielding a "golden fleece." The following statement shows the amount of tolls received at the collector's offices in Albany, Schenectady, Little Falls and Rome, for the first ten days after the opening of the navigation in 1833 and 1839, with the excess of the latter over the former—amounting to about fifty per cent:

The St. Louis Republican, in an article setting forth the advantages and resources of that city, strongly urges the propriety of building steamboats and engines there, where, it is asserted, they can be constructed as well as in any other city. The number of steamboats built or building for that town is seventeen, and the amount of capital invested in them this spring is $450,700.

Circuit court. The cause of the United States vs. W. Steuben Smith, has occupied the attention of the court and jury during the last three days. The defendant was a clerk in the general land office, and was sued by the United States to recover a claim of $10,933, alleged to be due to the government by the defendant on settlement of his accounts. The defendant claimed of the government a sum of money exceeding the amount sued for by the United States, as commissions for moneys disbursed by him to various persons for account of the government. This cause was very ably conducted by P. S. Key, esq. for the plaintiff, and R. S. Coxe and W. L. Brent, esqs. for the defendant. A great number of witnesses, chiefly clerks in the service of the government, gave testimony for the plaintiff. The case went to the jury without argument from the council, about four o'clock on Saturday afternoon; and, after retiring about two hours, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of $7,745 95. Steamboat collision. The Natchez Free Trader of the 22d April says: "The steamer George Collier was run into on the night of the 18th inst. by steamer Empor, 23 miles below Memphis. The Collier was materially injured, having all the larboard deck, a part of the wheel, horse, and nearly all the cabin promenade carried away."

The last of the swans. The Louisville News Letter says, that a swan measuring nine feet between the tips of its wings, was recently shot on the Illinois shore of the Mississippi, opposite St. Louis, and is now in the museum of that city. "This," says the editor of the News Letter, "is the first bird of the species, which wintered in our waters for years." The yearly French explorers make frequent mention of the swan in the accounts they have left behind them of their discoveries in the western valley. The Mississippi, the Illinois and the Ohio, were once frequented by large flocks of this beautiful waterfowl.

The Chinese army. The Canton Register intimates that although the Chinese army nominally amounts to 1,700,000 men, yet, for the most part, it exists only on paper. It says, "if any body might inquire about the actual number of China's warriors, we should request him to divide the above by 100, and the quotient will not be far from the truth." With the exception, however, of the guardians of the frontiers, the whole mighty host consists of men of peace, who are always in garrison and act the part of the thief catchers and fill similar honorable offices."

Methodist conference in New Jersey. This body closed its session day before yesterday, having been together since Wednesday last week. The subject of Manning Force's running for congress last year, was the one which the reverend gentleman frankly declared, with expressions of his sincere regret, that he should not have accepted the nomination, had he been aware, at the time, that a rule existed discountenancing such conduct.

A resolution passed the last morning, declaring that any clergyman who should hereafter become a candi-

The president of the United States has officially recognised Frederick Rodewald, esq. as consul of the republic of Hamburg at Baltimore.

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN. The noble stand taken by Mr. Clay, himself a western man, in defence of the common right of the states to an equal distribution of the proceeds of the public land, is, of itself, sufficient to challenge the admiration and gratitude of citizens of the old states. Mr. Clay has, in the following letter, which explains itself, given fresh evidence of his enlarged and disinterested views, and of his stern adherence to principle:

[Nat. Int.]

GENTLEMEN: I have duly received your letter, transmitting certain resolutions adopted by the democratic whig association of the tenth ward of the city of New York, in relation to the public domain; and I request you to make the association my profound acknowledgments for the notice which it has honored my name. I rejoice that the people, in their primary assemblies, and in their proper communities, are directing their attention to this great interest. It is high time it should receive their earnest consideration. Faithfully administered, the public lands may be made powerfully instrumental in the advancement of the prosperity of the present generation, and of their posterity for a long succession of ages.

But they have been in danger of being swept away by pre-emptions, Indian reservations, graduation bills, and, finally, cessions of the common property of all the states to the particular states in which it is situated. And most of these projects, urged under the plausible pretext of benefiting the poor settler, have stimulated the speculator, and tended to aggrandize the speculator to the prejudice both of the honest emigrant and the people of the United States. I have felt to be my duty to oppose these projects; and it is a deplorable evidence of the loose morality which prevails in respect to the public property, that I have been denounced and calumniated for many endeavors to protect and preserve it for the benefit of the states and people of the union.

I share with you, gentlemen, in regret on account of the failure of the bill to distribute the nett proceeds of the public lands, which passed both houses of congress. It was defeated by a high-handed and daring violation of the constitution. If it had gone into operation, there would have been no extraordinary surplus in the treasury, no disturbance of the financial and business concerns of the country by a removal of the deposits, no temptation to those alarming annual appropriations which have been recently made by the federal government, and, I believe, no suspension of specie payments by the banks. Now that the public attention is awakened to this great national resource, I trust that project to which I have adverted will be checked, and that it will be cherished and preserved for the common benefit of all the people of the United States and their posterity.

I request, gentlemen, your acceptance of my thanks for the flattering and friendly manner in which you have communicated the resolutions of the democratic association of the tenth ward, and of the high consideration with which I am your friends and obedient servant,
HENRY CLAY.

UPPER CANADA. The parliament was expected to adjourn on Saturday last. Among the bills passed by the house of assembly was one authorising the receiver general to issue bills of credit, to the amount of £250,000, for carrying on the public works; by another bill the receiver general was authorised to negotiate a loan of one million in England, at three and a half per cent. upon the debentures of the province.

The clergy reserve bill, passed by the assembly would probably be lost in the council. The assembly had thrown out a bill providing for the expenses attendant on the safe keeping of the prisoners taken at Prescott and elsewhere, on the ground that those expenses ought to be defrayed by Great Britain. The following is from the Kingston Chronicle;
VOL. VI.—SIG. 12

"We understand there has been a letter addressed to the captain of the Telegraph steamer, that he and his boat would be burnt if he continues to visit this port. It is either the production of some designing rogue interested in another boat, or the same trade, or of some mischievous person, for a hoax. We can assure the captain and owners of the Telegraph that their boat is safe in Kingston harbor from any violence, as good laws, justly and promptly administered, can make her, and, moreover, that the commandant, in conjunction with the magistrates, has given orders concerning that boat while she remains here."

A bill has passed the assembly, appropriating £40,000 for payment of the losses sustained by individuals, in the destruction of their property, since the rebellion.

The banks are to resume specie payments on the 1st of August. [Com. Adv.]

MAIN BOUNDARY. In a report of the proceedings in the senate on the Maine boundary question, published in the Globe of the 9th inst. the remarks of Mr. Buchanan, with several others, were copied from the Intelligencer. The following note to the editors of that paper, making some corrections, escaped us at the time:

[Globe.]

Lancaster, March 22, 1839.

To the editors:

GENTLEMEN: There is one error in the sketch of the debate in the senate on the night of the 1st instant, on the subject of the Maine controversy, which appeared in the tri-weekly Intelligencer of Tuesday last, of sufficient importance to justify correction from me. I am made to say in the fourth column of the fourth page, when speaking of the proceedings on our northeastern frontier, that "all this the president looks at boldly and manfully, on an exalted eminence, above the feelings of the country," &c. &c. Now, I certainly never said, nor could have used such an absurd expression. The easiest mode of correction is to state the substance of what I did say, which is as follows:

"It is alleged that a force of four or five thousand men, under the command of sir John Harvey, is concentrating at the mouth of the Aristook, and that he has given notice to the land agent of Maine that unless his men should disperse he would drive them away; and the tardy freemen of that state are rallying to the rescue. All this the president looks at boldly and manfully, with a fixed determination to support Maine against such an unjust attack; but having been placed in a position of exalted eminence by the people of the whole country, where duty requires him to stand above the excited feelings so natural to the single state directly interested in the contest, and to view the question in his bearings upon the whole union, he says that if sir John Harvey should withdraw his forces, he will not, in that event, feel himself bound to send the forces of the United States to the support of Maine, should she determine to settle the controversy for herself by arms."

I might make some other corrections, such as that I did not say that the boundary question "had been a vexed question ever since the treaty of 1783," and that "this territory had never been considered for a moment, from 1783 till now, as a part of Maine;" having endeavored to prove, and I think successfully, in a report to the senate on a former occasion, that it did not even begin to be a question at all, until the conferences which preceded the treaty of Ghent; but I forbear to trouble you further.

I make these corrections in no spirit of complaint against the reporter, on the contrary, considering the lateness of the hour and the length of the debate, his sketch is more accurate than could have been reasonably expected. Yours, very respectfully,
JAMES BUCHANAN.

MONUMENT AT NORTH POINT. At a meeting of the "Maryland Cadets," held on the 17th inst. the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, we have been informed that the monument heretofore erected at North Point for the purpose of marking the site of the battle ground of 1814, and for commemorating that event, is in a state of dilapidation—and believing, as we do, that it is incumbent upon the citizens of Baltimore, and will be a pleasing duty to them to erect upon that spot a monument of a size and durability worthy of the place, and of the city of which it has been truly said, "She gives graves to her invaders and monuments to her defenders,"—and believing also that no portion of her citizens could take the lead in this matter with more propriety than the citizen soldiers of Baltimore—the successors of that patriotic band, who, upon that ground so gallantly met and repulsed the invading foe in 1814.

Therefore be it resolved, by the "Maryland Cadets," That we respectfully suggest to all our fellow soldiers of the city of Baltimore the propriety of taking immediate measures for erecting a monument upon the battle ground at North Point, and for the purpose of maturing plans for that object, each volunteer company in the city, be, and they are hereby requested to appoint five delegates, who with the field officers of the city are invited to meet in convention on Monday, the 8th of July next—and if practicable, we further suggest that the corner stone of the proposed monument be laid in due form on the 12th of September next, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle.

Resolved, That the following persons be and they are hereby appointed delegates to the proposed convention from the "Maryland Cadets," Levi Painstock, Archer Ropes, Joseph B. Williams, Joseph C. Manning, William Hope.

Resolved, That the editors of the several papers in the city be requested to publish the foregoing preamble and resolutions.

TAXES IN ILLINOIS. A writer in the Jacksonville Standard makes out the following table of the taxes of a property holder of that town, whose house and lot is worth $1,000, and whose personal property is worth $500.

State tax on the value of his house and lot,	$2 00
Do. on his personal property,	1 00
County tax upon the value of house and lot,	5 00
Do. on his personal property,	2 50
Tax to support paupers on house and lot,	1 00
Do. on his personal property,	50
Road tax, estimating labor at its value,	7 50
Corporation tax on house and lot, value up,	7 50

$26 50

This phrase, value up, supposes to give a fictitious value to the house and lot, by raising it to $1,500 for the purpose of increasing the revenue. In Peoria, according to the register, the taxes of a town resident with the same amount of property, would be:

State tax on house and lot,	$2 00
Do. on personal property,	1 00
County tax on house lot, 1-5 per cent.	2 00
Do. on personal property, do.	1 00
Road tax, 3 days, 1 25 per day,	3 75
Corporation tax on house and lot, 1 per cent.	2 50
	$13 25

EXECUTION OF MARSAUD. The following letter has been furnished to the editors of the Philadelphia Pennsylvania:

Bordeaux, March 24, 1839. Captain Marsaud, who murdered the captain and part of the crew, and took command of the French ship Alexandre, (which vessel was seized at Newport, Rhode Island, some time since, and sent under the command of an officer from on board a French man-of-war to Bordeaux), has been tried, found guilty and executed at Bordeaux for the above crime. A young man, his second officer, has also been tried and found guilty, but, on account of his age, has been recommended to mercy. The execution of Marsaud took place three hours after the passing of his sentence. Before his death he made a full confession of all his crimes. He said that seven men were thrown overboard by his order, and that the mate of the ship impudently begged of him only one half hour's time in order that he might write to, and take a last farewell of, his mother, and offered him (Marsaud) the sum of 30,000 francs for said half hour, but that he unmercifully denied it to him.

It is very much wondered at, in Bordeaux, why it was that the French authorities in the United States experienced so much difficulty from the American magistrates in having such a monster given up. It is also stated that four of the piratical crew who had a hand in the above mutiny and murders are still in the United States, and that all the entreaties of the commander of the French man-of-war Bergere could not induce the Americans to give them up.

NEW YORK CITY COUNCIL. On Tuesday the newly elected mayor and city council of New York were inducted into office. Both boards of the old council met in the forenoon, when the oath was administered by the late mayor to his successor. Alderman Williams, of the twelfth ward, was chosen president of the board of aldermen, and assistant alderman Jarvis, of the same ward, was elected to the chair of the board of assistants. In the old board of aldermen, the vote thanks to the president was offered by alderman Jeremiah, who made the following remarks on moving in:

Alderman Jeremiah rose and said that he wished to express the pleasure which he felt, upon looking back upon the year, and considering the happy manner in which the duties of the chairman had been performed, and that the vote of thanks which he would propose, was not the cold formality with which he might offer such a tribute to any man who had presided over public deliberations for a year, but the genuine expression of his satisfaction. He then offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in closing the labors of the present political year, the members of this board have cause for peculiar felicitation in view of the harmony which has characterized their deliberations, and which, in the midst of the excitement consequent upon a nearly equal division of political power, has not, in any manifest degree, interfered with the discharge of public duty.

Resolved, That in discharging the delicate and frequently difficult duties of the presiding officer of this board, Egbert Benson, esq. has merited, and hereby receives, the unanimous thanks of the members, for his impartiality and ability, and for that high regard for the public interests, which has so eminently distinguished him.

A large number of persons were present to witness the ceremonies.

LATEST INDIAN NEWS.

From the Tallahassee Star, May 3.

Once more we are compelled to darken our columns with the atrocities of the murdering and wretched Seminole. All has been quiet for some time past, but it was only the fearful calm which precedes the storm.

Lieutenant Hulbert was a native of New York, and a graduate of West Point. We sincerely mourn the loss of these valuable young officers of our army.

The following letter from capt. Peyton we publish verbatim:

St. Mari's, May 7, 1839.

Sir: I have this moment returned from Deadman's Bay, and have to communicate to you the melancholy intelligence of the murder of lieutenant Hulbert and private O'Driscoll, of the 6th infantry, by the Seminoles.

The express rider from Fort Frank Brooke and Fort Andrews did not arrive in season, and lieutenant Hulbert, with ten men, went out from the place on the 3d of May, to ascertain the reason.—About half way between the two posts, the command was halted, and lieutenant H. with O'Driscoll, of (F) company, went on in advance, intending to pass the night at Fort Frank Brooke.

They were both shot by a party of Indians at the Fourteen Mile creek, probably while watering their horses. O'Driscoll's horse ran into Fort Frank Brooke, slightly wounded, and gave the first news there.

Four balls were shot through lieutenant H., but neither he nor the soldier were scalped. Both bodies were interred on the 4th ultimo, at Deadman's Bay. The express rider has not yet been found, and but little doubt is entertained of his death.—Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. PEYTON,

Captain and assistant quartermaster.

Col. W. Davenport, first infantry, commanding.

From the news received from Tampa, it would appear that the Indians are determined not to treat with a view to emigration. They have heard that the land which government had assigned them west of the Mississippi cannot be found on their arrival—that country is no longer theirs, and they are naturally angry, and resolved to remain where they are at all hazards. The chief of the Tallahassee said at Tampa that, if the soldiers were sent after them, they would fight until their powder and lead was gone, and then with bows and arrows. He would not agree to hold council with general Macomb, for he was certain the whites had two faces; he said he spoke the sentiments of all the Indians north of Tampa Bay, and that any Indian who attempted hereafter to come in to the whites, would be killed. On the night of the 22d of April, about one hundred hostiles went into Tampa, and took away some thirty friendly Indians, who were waiting to emigrate. During the night the Tallahassee chief held a long talk with a Spaniard, named Jeanne Mantes De Oca, who speaks the Indian language well, and communicated to him what we have narrated above. [Star.]

VERY LATE FROM THE PACIFIC.

By the arrival of the ship Natchez, capt. Hayes, in the very short passage of sixty-eight days from Valparaiso, the editor of the New York Gazette has been put in possession of Valparaiso papers to the 1st of February; he is also indebted to a mercantile friend for the annexed extract from a letter of the 2d of March.

Valparaiso, March 2, 1839.

"A few days since we had a report from an outpost in Peru that a battle had been fought, in which the Chilians were victorious, but it required confirmation. Last evening the Boxer arrived from Callao with Lima dates to the 5th ultimo, stating that an action had taken place at Yungay, on the 20th January, between the Chilean and Peruvian armies of about 5,000 men each, in which the latter were totally destroyed; so completely had been the defeat that our Lima friends consider the confederation at an end. General Santa Cruz escaped with some of his officers, and has gone to Bolivia for the purpose of raising another army; but he is so fallen we think he cannot rise. The castles of his favorite, general Pizarro, who has in from 1,500 men, well provisioned, it is said, for five or six months. The Chilians were daily expected in Lima. Admitting that Santa Cruz has lost Peru, we still fear it will be the scene of civil strife for some time to come, for already the party now coming in are quarrelling among themselves. The foreign property had been taken out of the castles, and deposited on board vessels in the bay of Callao, ready to be entered at Chorillos, should that port be opened during the siege of the castles, which will probably take place. Thus stand affairs in Peru at our last dates; no business, of course, was doing, nor would there be until affairs were settled.

"The United States ship North Carolina, commodore Ballard, and the United States schooner Enterprise, will sail for Rio de Janeiro and the U. States on the 15th of March, and the sloop of war Albatross for the coast of Mexico 10th of March. The ship Angelica arrived from Europe, and sailed for Callao 18th February. The Henry Lee, from Boston, arrived 21st January."

The following is the official account of the battle fought at Yungay, between the Chilean and Peruvian armies:

"Colonel D. Pedro Urriola, commanding the battalion Colchagua, which took a distinguished part in the battle of Yungay, has arrived here, the bearer of communications which announce a most glorious triumph of the arms of Chili. Col. Urriola left the field of battle ten hours after the victory.

"Three thousand four hundred prisoners, 2,600 killed, the whole park of artillery, the commissariat with more than $90,000, the equipments, horses, &c. of the protector's army, are the fruits of this victory. Generals Moran and Urduinea were killed, the first in the battle of the 6th. Generals Herrera, Guinos, Bermudes, Otero and Armaza, the latter the bravest, were mortally wounded. Santa Cruz escaped with twenty men in the direction of Junin. It is believed that his intention was to flee, and embark at Pisco, but a company of Chilean carbiners with horsemen, who had been kept in reserve, followed rapidly to overtake him. The pretended protector abandoned the field an hour before the close of the battle.

"General Lafuente would march to Huacho with two squadrons of cavalry and two Peruvian battalions, and would be in Lima and Callao on the 26th and 28th January. General Gamara would march on the 22d January for Junin and the south of Peru, with a division of the restoring army; and the general-in-chief would follow with the remainder, leaving Gen. Lafuente the chief military in the north of Peru.

"The news appears also to have been a naval engagement, of which the following account is translated:

"The naval combat of Casma has terminated in a manner equally happy to the arms of Chili. Four vessels armed by general Santa Cruz attacked the division of commandant Simpson, consisting of the corvettes Confederation and Valparaiso and the barque Santa Cruz, which were completely defeated, with much damage, and the loss of the brigantine Arequipeno, with a crew of 70 men. The enemy's vessels were the Edmond, of 20 guns, a barque with 18, the Arequipeno, of 9 guns; and a golette with 2 swivel guns."

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

Valparaiso, March 2, 1839.

We have just received advices from Lima of the total defeat of the army of general Santa Cruz, at Yungay, on the 20th January. Santa Cruz escaped with only a few men, and arrived at Lima on the 24th. He has garrisoned the castle of Callao with 1,300 men under the command of gen. Moran and supplied them with three months' provisions. He again left Lima on the 28th for the south, with the purpose of re-organizing a new army. We think, however, in this he will fail, as his resources are completely exhausted. We consider the confederation at an end. The probability is, there will be a revolution in Bolivia.

Extract of a letter dated Valparaiso, March 3, 1839.

Just imagine the astonishment here at the recent news from Peru—the Chili army entirely victorious—Santa Cruz's boasted one cut up and prisoners, with four of his generals, himself a fugitive, with a few men! How different a result from that predicted by his proclamations and the letters of all the foreigners—and the whole gained by the Chili infantry.—To be sure, Santa Cruz charges one of his colonels with treachery, for which he was shot down on the spot the moment it was discovered. Santa Cruz's previous advices to Garcia del Rio, which reached Lima on the eve of the North Carolina's departure for this place, and which was all we knew here until this last intelligence reached us, were, that he had accepted the Chilians from Huancabamba, and had accepted their retreat to the coast, and they were now his. Using "Talleyrand's words," it was then "le commencement du fin" of Chili restoration. It will prove truly the commencement of his end, and I hardly think he will be able to hold up his head again, morally or physically. The "confederation" is done, to all intents and purposes. Santa Cruz has left for Cuzco to bring down another army—Moran, in the mean time, charged with the castles and 1,200 men, and Virgil, prefect of Lima, 1,500 men. The latter's orders, it is said, are, that, if the Chili army approach Lima, he is to retire under the castles to await the return of the protector, who will be down to support him in three months. In the mean time, instead of marching upon Lima, the governor here told me yesterday that Buines, Gamarrá, and Castillo are in march for the interior via Junja, and have no intention of going to Lima; that they write they intend following up Santa Cruz, so that he will not be able to get up a army before they have gained the whole country, and this, in my opinion, is decisive policy. Two thousand men are now ready to be embarked and sent to any point Buines may direct them to, and every thing here promises the greatest success in this administration's views. This last success has prostrated all opposition—national pride is gratified—and the government relieved from a most painful situation.

DREADFUL STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT.

From the N. O. True American of May 7.

The steamboat George Collier, which lay at the wharf opposite the custom house to undergo repairs for some time past, left this city on Saturday evening last, between five and six o'clock, for St. Louis. When near the mouth of Red river, about 80 miles below Natchez, at half past 1 o'clock, A. M., a serious accident occurred, which cost so many lives, and was so destructive of human life. The piston rod, which works in the cylinder, and by which the engine is propelled, being attached by a key or bolt which passes through the tea head, gave away at the rent which received the bolt, and being relieved from the immense weight against which it had to struggle, was driven through the cylinder head, and gave free room for the steam to escape. The aft doors of the deck-room were closed, consequently the effects of the steam were unavoidable upon the locum tenentes. The stands were thrown from under two boilers, but the concussion was not severely experienced on the boat. The most of those killed and injured were in the berths, on the deck all of the boilers. So soon as the accident occurred, many rushed forward unconsciously in the face of the danger, and in falling the boats were instantly perished, or lived to linger a few hours in indistinguishable misery.

It is supposed that between forty and fifty persons were scalded. The clerk of the Collier rates them at forty-four, consisting of deck passengers and part of the crew who had retired or were stationed on watch.

We crossed over yesterday to see the Collier and examine the extent of her damage. No explosion seems to have taken place, but the immense force of the sudden rupture of the piston at the key, thereby disengaging the whole propelling power from the machinery by which the boat was moved, impelled from the screws the cylinder head, and derailed the boiler stands, thereby causing a current of heated vapor to escape, which was fatal to all who came in contact with and were exposed to it.

We have scarcely ever seen a more heart rending spectacle than the dreadfully scalded yet eking out their few brief hours of maddening misery, who are yet on board the Collier, and where every attention and kindness is paid them that could be expected, and which may tend to lessen their agony. There are aged mothers, with faces and hands and necks, and every portion that could come in contact with the hot air, dreadfully blistered and presenting a horrid spectacle, calling for the lost ones whom they will see no more and forever. There were strong stalwart men, calling aloud in their misery for their great protector to relieve them. How noble did the fortitude of some of the females appear! The fair locks had been curled and crisped, and the bright and lustrous eyes had been quenched, or the irritation had closed up the swelled lids and shut out the world's light. What must have been the agony—the flesh falling from the red lips—themselves becoming of a sudden soft and ready to fall and leave the "face divine" a horrid spectacle.

We cannot conceive how the accident might have been anticipated. We do not remember to have heard of one of a similar kind. The steamer George Washington came down about an hour and a half after the accident, and towed her down.—Every assistance in his power was promptly rendered by capt. Quarrier of the Washington, than whom there is not a more aimable, attentive, high minded and honorable officer on the western waters. We take pleasure in according to capt. Quarrier his just deserts. Below will be found a list of the passengers, who have died and those who were scalded. The accident occurred near "Duniza Bend."

THE BRAGANZA CASE.

The Journal of Commerce gives the following report of the case:
 Robert Moore examined—In July and August last, I was 2nd mate of the brig Braganza; she sailed from Philadelphia on the 7th of July; Arnel F. Turley was captain, Thomas Vanderslice was 1st mate, and I was 2nd mate; there were four able seamen and a boy, who had shipped as an ordinary seaman. Cornelius Wilhelmus and Joseph Ver Bruggen, the prisoners in court, were part of the crew; they were known as Bill and Joe; there was another man known as Harry, who shipped at Philadelphia, under the name of John Adams; there was also a man named Hans Knewdson, and a boy who was called Tom; I did not then know his proper name. He is now in court and is called by the name of James Davy; there was a colored cook named Thomas Brown; these nine men composed the officers and crew. Mr. Deihl, the owner of the brig, and Mrs. Deihl and the captain's wife, were passengers.

On Saturday night the 5th of August, I left the deck a quarter after 12 o'clock, and the chief mate Vanderslice took charge of it. I can't say positively what season it was on deck, but I know it was Vanderslice's watch then; and Hantz and Joe belonged to his watch, and Adams and Wilhelmus belonged to my watch. I don't know if the seamen of my watch remained on deck. The eldest of the prisoners is Wilhelmus, and the other is Joe Ver Brugger.

When I left the deck I retired to my berth in the state room of the cabin. The captain and his wife were in bed in the starboard berth, and the owner and his wife in the larboard berth. The state room in which I slept was farther forward than the berths in the cabin. I fell asleep until about two o'clock, when I was awake by a cry of murder on the deck; I thought the voice crying murder was that of the chief mate, and I believe so still; I heard the cry twice repeated after I awoke, and I then heard a scuffle; I leaped out of bed and went into the cabin and found the captain and Mr. Deihl getting into it; I went straight on deck the captain having just preceded me; he was not then armed to my knowledge. I was at the bottom of the steps and he was at the top going up; on reaching the deck I saw a person lying on deck with his head hanging down the companion way: It was a bright night, but the person was so covered with blood that I did not know him until he spoke to me, and I then recognized him to be Vanderslice. The whole crew were on deck when I went up. As soon as I came on deck I found Joe (Ver Bruggen) engaged with the captain, and it appeared that the men of my watch, Bill and Adams had not then engaged in the scuffle; but they did so immediately. I found Joe fighting with a pump brake in his hand, and Wilhelmus had a sheath knife in his hand; Hantz or Adams had no weapons in their hands. I took a belaying pin in my hands and defended myself, and seeing Joe engaged with the captain, I struck him, and I believe I also struck Hantz who attempted to catch hold of me. We then scuffled together and he tripped me and I fell, and while down Joe (Ver Bruggen) struck me with the hand spike, and Harry (Adams) attempted to stab me; and in making the attempt cut off part of his own fingers. While the others were thus engaged with me, the two prisoners were engaged with the captain, who ran down the cabin for some weapon of defence. In the meantime Wilhelmus and Adams went and opened the gangway, which left an open place in the bulwarks so that a person could be easily thrown over. Hantz and I were still scuffling, and two of them, Wilhelmus and Adams took hold of me and attempted to launch me into the sea, and in the scuffle Hantz and I went overboard together. Neither of us however touched the water; we both of us caught hold of the guy line and got back. Some of the crew threw a rope to Hantz, and Joe (Ver Bruggen) seeing me holding on, took a hand spike and struck me with it so as to fracture my arm. The captain had in the meantime come on deck with a cutlass which attracted Ver Bruggen's attention, and he left me and I got on deck in an extremely exhausted condition and badly wounded, and in that state I crawled down to the cabin, where I saw Vanderslice lying at the bottom of the stair case. While I was crawling down I saw the captain held down on the deck by the two prisoners, to whom he was begging for mercy, saying "spare me for the sake of my poor wife and I will forgive you every thing you have done." As soon as I got into the cabin they spiked down the companion way which prevented any person from coming up from the cabin to assist the captain. I continued to hear the captain's cries for mercy during two or three minutes, and then every thing was still. After that I heard some thing fall on deck and the cries were resumed, and in a few minutes I heard a splashing in the water, and heard a cry from the captain who was floating on the sea, and who said, "oh! my God I am dying." The brig was not then going more than two knots an hour. I saw the captain in the water from the cabin window, and saw him fall astern of the vessel. While looking through the window I saw him endeavoring to swim, and heard him utter the same words repeatedly, and that was the last I heard of him. The vessel had passed away from him before he sunk. We were kept confined in the cabin and I did not come on deck until the 7th day after. Every day we communicated with the crew through the cabin windows, and when I came on deck we found Wilhelmus had the command of the vessel.

selves being detected. When speaking to us on the subject they asked us for several things in the cabin which we refused to give, until we knew what they would do with us. They did not intimate to us what they intended to do with the vessel until a few hours previous to our leaving her. In a few hours after they killed the captain, they changed the course of the vessel, and in a few days after, they told us they were bound to the British channel.

We had requested them to let us on deck two or three days before they did, and they declined, but did not give their reasons. In the course of our communications they required us to give them the fire arms which were in the cabin, and there being no ammunition we consented to throw them overboard, and did so through a cabin window. They also required us to give up some of the nautical instruments, and money, and threatened if we did not do so, to exclude all light and air from us, and they put a plank across the deck lights the first morning to prevent light from coming in. On the morning of the 2d day they told us we had not given them all the specie on board, and if we did not give it up they would fire on way to make us. On the same morning they endeavored to suffocate us by burning something close to the bulkhead of the cabin. I hallooed to them and promised them that if they took away the smoke I would see if there was any more property in the cabin and give it to them, and they then removed the fire. Mr. and Mrs. Deihl were the first persons who went on deck when we were let out of the cabin. On that morning they told us they could see a sail from the cross trees, and that if we wished to save our lives, this was the time, and they said they would give us the jolly boat. In about three hours after they said this, we were let on deck. Joe was then at the wheel, and the other four men were standing round the companion-way. Each of them, except the boy, had either a knife or hatchet in his hand. Wilhelmus represented himself as captain, we asked for the long boat, which they at first refused, but afterwards gave it to us, and allowed the cook and Mr. and Mrs. Deihl and Mrs. Turley and I to go away in her. We left the mate languishing of his wounds, and too weak to be removed. We left the brig at two o'clock in the afternoon, and she steered N. N. E. and we steered S. S. E. and were picked up next day by a brig bound to Greenock in Scotland.

I arrived here 26th of October last, and never saw the prisoners since I left the vessel until this morning.

Mr. Deihl, owner of the Braganza, was next examined and gave substantially the same account of occurrences of the last witness. Mr. Deihl found part of his property which the mutineers took from him, in custody of the United States marshal of this city, to whom it had been sent by the authorities where the prisoners were arrested.

James Davy, examined.—I am a native of England, 18 years old, a shipper of a boy on board the Braganza at Philadelphia, on the 8th or 8th of July, and I do not certain which. I was on board when she left Philadelphia, and was out about 30 days when the mutiny commenced. On the night of the mutiny I was at the wheel from 12 to 2 o'clock, when it was taken by J. Ver Bruggen. I then went forward and laid down behind a hen coop to sleep, it being then very fine weather. I was roused from my sleep by some person screaming out, who I believe was the first mate, and on looking about I saw a general scuffle going on, but could not tell exactly what part each person was taking in it; but I saw Adams and Ver Bruggen fighting against the 2nd mate, and the two others against the captain. I never saw the first mate at all at that time. The gangway then went overboard, and I saw Ver Bruggen and the 2nd mate, and John Adams had a handspike striking at the 2nd mate, to prevent him going upon board; he was then holding on to the rigging to get on board; Joseph Ver Bruggen and Wilhelmus then threw down the captain, and Ver Bruggen knelt on his neck, while Wilhelmus went to fasten the fore hatches.—I was at this time standing at the hen coop, screaming out; and Cornelius Wilhelmus came and told me to look after the steward, and not let him break out. I continued crying and he kicked me. Joseph Ver Bruggen, Cornelius Wilhelmus and Adams were the three I saw throwing the captain overboard. The 2nd mate had by this time got on deck. When the captain was thrown overboard, he caught hold of the main-chains; while they went and fastened the companion way. By the time they had done that, the captain had climbed over the bulwark and got on the deck, and fell down on it.—When the captain fell on deck, Wilhelmus took a stick and gave me two or three times with it on the head, and Wilhelmus and Adams then threw him overboard, and he again caught hold of the main chains, but was too weak to climb up, and begged them to drag him in and said he would not think of what passed. Wilhelmus then went forward and got the cook's axe and struck at the spot from whence the captain's voice came, but I could not see the captain's person, from the position where I then stood. Some person also threw a stick at him, but I am not positive which of them did it. I then heard the captain exclaim, "O Mary, dear Mary, I'm dying!" and I saw no more of him.

The crew then hauled down the stern sails and put them in the sky light of the cabin. Wilhelm told me to go aloft and send down the studding sails, which I did. Cornelius Wilhelm afterwards acted as captain and Hantz as mate. Sometimes one of them gave me orders and sometimes another. That morning when we were at breakfast Cornelius Wilhelm told how he struck the captain with the handle of the axe when he held the main chain to prevent himself falling into the sea; Ver Bruggen also told how he had struck the chief mate with a hatchet, and that when the captain was coming up the companion way he struck at him with the hatchet; but the captain avoided the blow, and returned back to the cabin and got his cutlass and came up, and struck Ver Bruggen in the arm and cut him and made him let go the hatchet.

After the long boat had left the vessel, the mutineers threw the first mate overboard, although he was still alive. John Adams, one of the mutineers hanged himself in prison at EmLen, the second day after he was arrested.

After the mutineers had set the people adrift in the long boat they steered for the British channel and continued their course until they reached a small island near Hanover, where they ran the ship ashore and abandoned her and went on to Emden, in the king of Hanover's dominions, where the report of the piracy had already reached through the English newspapers, in consequence of which the prisoners were arrested and sent here for trial.

Thomas Brown, a colored man, who was cook on board the Braganza, was next examined, but his evidence added nothing to what had been already adduced.

Hans Knewdson, who has been also indicted for the same offence, was then brought into court to give evidence at the request of the prisoners but declined doing so.

No further evidence was offered and the case went to the jury about 10 o'clock this morning, and they returned a verdict of guilty.

CANADA.

From the Globe.

We publish below an interesting correspondence in relation to an outrage committed on the American flag in the Welland canal, in Canada.

It is gratifying to find the British authorities so prompt in disavowing the insult and injury, and making leaders at the same time of full indemnity.

A useful lesson is thus taught to many of the defamers of American government, as it seems manifest that some lawless and violent people exist on the Canada side, and sometimes commit aggressions on our peaceful commerce and citizens even across the border. Less taunting remarks should be used both in Canada and England in regard to the ability of our officers entirely to prevent every kind of excitement or outbreak on so extended a frontier. The English and Canadians, who cannot prevent such attacks as that on the Stephen Girard, even within the limits of Canada, and with a powerful military to aid the civil authorities, should not, from their glass houses, throw stones at the democracy of this country for "inability in preserving order." They will find the great mass of our people as ready as themselves to acknowledge and redress manifest wrongs, when not able to prevent them amidst such numerous and extensive difficulties as exist on the Canadian frontier, aggravated as they always have been by foreign agitators and refugees from Canada itself.

Custom house, Cleveland, Ohio, April 29, 1839.

Sir: On Monday, the 22d inst. a very gross outrage was committed on the American schooner "Stephen Girard," captain J. C. Huginin, while in the Welland canal, on her passage from Oswego to Cleveland. The vessel was surrounded by about one hundred and fifty of the Canadian militia, who were soon to be disbanded. They forcibly boarded her vessel, cut the balyards, for the purpose of bringing down the American colors, which in the attempt to pull them down, were entangled in the cross-trees. They forced the captain to send one of his men aloft to bring the colors down. He yielded to the violence of the mob, who seized upon his colors, and after having waived them in derision, tore them into pieces. These militia men next attempted a destruction of the vessel, which fortunately escaped from the canal into Lake Erie, amidst a pelting of stones by the mob, and with the loss of her jolly boat, which they destroyed.

I am happy to inform you that the evil effects of this transaction, so outrageous, and so calculated to prevent our further commerce through the Welland canal, have been fortunately obviated by the Canadian authorities, in the immediate arrest and confinement of the militia men composing the mob, and by a course of measures to punish them with the utmost rigor of the law.

Captain Huginin was immediately followed by a letter from lieutenant colonel Baldwin, commanding the battalion to which the militia men were attached, expressing the regrets of himself and the other officers of that battalion, on account of this transaction; that the offenders were arrested, and had been put in confinement, and would be punished; that indemnity would be rendered for the injury sustained, and that a repetition of a similar offence would be strictly guarded against.

In addition to this, I forward you the letter of R. A. Tucker, esq. provincial secretary of the province of Upper Canada, (having retained a copy), in relation to this subject, together with a copy of my reply. I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL STARKWEATHER,

Collector of customs.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

Government house, Toronto, April 25, 1839.

Sir: An account has just reached the lieutenant governor, that a gross insult was offered by some militia men, on Monday last, to the master of the American schooner "Stephen Girard," of Oswego, while that vessel was lying at port Colborne, on her way to Cleveland. No official report of this reprehensible proceeding has yet been received; but by a letter from the collector of port Colborne to a director of the Welland canal, it would appear that some militia men, in a state of intoxication, boarded the vessel, cut the pennant balyards, and, by threatening language, compelled the master to throw them on shore. They also endeavored to impede the progress of the "Stephen Girard" through the canal; and in this attempt her jolly boat was materially injured.

His excellency trusts that it can be hardly necessary for him to express the great concern he feels on this occasion; nor is it his wish to palliate an offence, the commission of which has excited his highest displeasure.

He hopes, however, that you will do every thing in your power to allay that angry feeling to which such an outrage is calculated to give rise, and by the publication of a true statement of the facts of the case, to divert it of that false coloring with which it will probably at first be represented. It will, likewise, perhaps be regarded by you as a part of your duty to direct the attention of your countrymen to those lawless and cruel aggressions on this province which have provoked an act of a retaliatory character from a few drunken soldiers; and his excellency doubts not but that every proper means will be employed by the public functionaries at Cleveland to compose and tranquilize the public mind. In the same spirit he authorizes me to assure you that the perpetrators of outrage shall be visited with the severest punishment our laws will permit; and that such effectual means shall immediately be adopted to prevent its recurrence, as will enable your vessels to pass through our canals without the slightest danger of interruption or annoyance of any kind.

For your further satisfaction on this point, his excellency has directed an intelligent officer to proceed instantly to Cleveland to afford every explanation that can reasonably be required on the subject of my present communication. I have only to add that it is the particular desire of the lieutenant governor that the master of the "Stephen Girard" should come here to substantiate the charges against the militia men, who are now under confinement, and that he may rely on experiencing protection and kind treatment from us. I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

R. A. TUCKER, provincial secretary.

S. Starkweather, esp. collector of customs, Cleveland.

Custom house, Cleveland, (O.) April 29, 1839.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th inst. by Lieut. Jones, special messenger of lieutenant governor Arthur, relating the outrage lately committed by some Canadian militia men on the master of the American schooner "Stephen Girard," while passing through the Welland canal, on her passage from Oswego to Cleveland. In relation to the same affair, letters had been previously received in this place, addressed to capt. Huginin, the master of the vessel, by J. Black, collector at Port Colborne, and by Lt. col. Baldwin commanding the battalion to which these militia men were attached, expressing the indignation of the officers of that battalion at the outrage referred to, and giving assurance that full indemnity would be rendered for the injuries sustained; and that the offenders would be signally punished, and a repetition of any similar offence strictly guarded against.

These letters were published in our newspapers, together with a true account of the transaction, and had the effect immediately to tranquilize the public mind, and to allay fears as to any future disturbance of our commerce on the Welland canal, which, I am happy to say will not receive the slightest interruption growing out of that unfortunate affair.

The extreme displeasure manifested by the lieutenant governor of your province in relation to this matter, and his solicitude and his extraordinary efforts to bring the offenders to speedy justice, afford the most gratifying evidence that, however, great may have been the provocations which the recent lawless aggressions of some of our citizens have produced, the Canadian authorities are determined to suppress all attempts at retaliation, and to afford the most ample protection to the peaceable intercourse of our citizens with the people of your province.

Captain Huginin, in obedience to the wishes of his excellency governor Arthur, will proceed without delay to Toronto, to appear as a witness on the trial of the militia men who committed the outrage referred to. I have the honor to be, very respectfully your obedient servant,

SAMUEL STARKWEATHER,

Collector of customs.

To R. A. Tucker, esq. provincial secretary.

THE WAVE.

It is gratifying to perceive what a single vessel belonging to the war department, manned and conducted by her officers with zeal and energy, has accomplished.

U. S. schooner Wave,

St. Augustine, April 20, 1839.

Sir: I have the honor to report to you the arrival of the Wave at this place, from an examination of the eastern coast of Florida, with the result of her operations on this coast, under your order of July 1838.

The barges Shocco and Emmett, with which this vessel was furnished, commenced their operations within the Florida reef on the 2d September last; and with the aid of the sloop Panther, (chartered with the approbation of general Taylor, and now succeeded by the schooner Osage), it is believed that the Wave's force has penetrated every inlet and indentation of a southern coast of Florida susceptible of approach in boats. These continuous expeditions, if they have not resulted in the capture of any of the illicit traffickers with the hostile Indians, have been eminently successful in driving them from the coast. A suspicious vessel has not been inside of the Florida keys since November last, and but one since the object of the Wave's visit to the coast was known. Connected with the suppression of this traffic, the Wave has been enabled to render important service to the interests of navigation, in determining accurately doubtful points of the Florida coast, as well as the position of the western portion of it, which had never before been subjected to the examination of the surveyor. The enterprize of the Messrs. Blunt, of New York, placed at my disposal the means to effect this.

In connection with these duties, the discharge of others of a more pleasing character devolved upon us. A party of twenty fellow beings, who, amidst the horrors of the tempest, had been cast on the eastern coast of Florida, were rescued from the doom which awaited them from the Indians, and transported to Key West. They were the crews and passengers of the steamer Wilmington and the Spanish brig Triumfante. Assistance was likewise rendered to the following vessels in distress:

The brig Bogota, bound to Key West from New Orleans, knocked her rudder off on Carysford reef; hauled it for her, and sent her to sea.

Found the wreck of the brig Alna, captain Thomas, of Portland, Maine, on the eastern coast, about twenty-five miles north of Cape Florida, in possession of a small party of Indians. Her crew had been murdered, with the exception of two. We killed three and wounded two of the Indians in their flight, and destroyed three canoes. Found the bodies of two of the brig's crew, and burnt her.

The brig Exit, from Baltimore for New Orleans, via St. Marks, was ashore on Sonabro reef in October; assisted her to get off, and saw her safe through the reef.

The steamer Wilmington, ashore fifty miles north of Cape Florida, was a total loss; saved the crew and passengers, thirty in number, with their personal effects, and landed them in Key West.

Saved the crew and passengers, forty in number, with their personal effects, of the Spanish brig Triumfante, ashore sixty miles north of Cape Florida. Took from her sixty muskets, fifteen hundred pounds of lead, two hundred and eighty bales of cotton and moveables appertaining to her equipment, transported them to Key West, and burnt the vessel. In January, found the United States schooner Jeannette inside the reef, having beaten over Pickle's reef, furnished her a pilot and such assistance as was required to take her to sea.

Such, sir, is the result of the Wave's operations in this coast up to the present date; and, if a self-encouraging perseverance and untiring energy insure success, then have the officers and crew I have the honor to command effected all that could be anticipated from so small a force. To them, through you, sir, I would take this occasion to tender my sincere thanks for the cheerful and able manner in which they have executed every order and service required of them.

The Wave will sail to-morrow for the reef, examining the route, the eastern coast. She will leave the Outer bar on the western coast, and be replaced by her on this. The revenue cutter Camell, lieutenant commander N. C. Coste, placed under my orders in December last, is retained within the reef, where, with the boats, she can be most advantageously employed. This vessel is so far advanced that her commander reports her wholly unready for sea service or duty on the coast. Very respectfully, sir, I have the honor to be, of the hon. J. R. Poinsett, secretary of war, Washington city.

IRISHMEN AND SONS OF IRISHMEN.

At a numerous and respectable meeting of Irishmen and sons of Irishmen, held on Wednesday evening, the third of April, at Ryan's "Democratic Head Quarters," Chestnut street, alderman John Innes was called upon to preside, and Mathew Carey, Bernard Duke, col. W. H. Elsegood were appointed vice presidents; and Stephen Edward Rice, John C. Doyle, and Wm. Young were appointed secretaries.

The meeting was opened by the call for it being ad from the chair, from which it appeared that the object of the meeting was to consider whether the liberal, generous and enlightened sentiments recently expressed by Gov. Seward toward emigrants of all nations, did not demand some expression of gratitude towards their author. To exhibit the sentiments entertained by one of the most pure and enlightened of our public men, the chairman read a paper from a committee of naturalized citizens, in which, to James Madison, then president of the United States, and his answer. The opinions and feelings manifested in this correspondence were so entirely in accordance with those of the meeting, that they unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the chairman be requested to furnish a committee with a copy of both letters for publication.

Several gentlemen having addressed the meeting, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of five be now appointed to prepare a preamble and resolutions for the consideration of the meeting. The following committee was appointed: Philip Banks, Stephen E. Rice, John C. Doyle, John Killion and doctor Young. The committee retired, and, after some time, made the following report:

Whereas, This meeting having heard with affectionate respect and cordial gratitude, the language used by governor Seward to the legislature of the state of New York, in which, with peculiar elegance and energy, he recommends that emigrants from every country, who come to the U. States to make it their home, shall not only be welcomed and naturalized according to law, without regard to the race of their fathers, or their religious creed, but that they shall, in truth, in fact, and in good faith, be admitted into the American family, as members of one and indivisible, with the native born citizens of the republic; and, whereas such sentiments claim our highest approbation, and call upon "Irishmen and the sons of Irishmen" to make known how sensibly they feel, and how fully they appreciate the character of the statesman who not only entertains, but desires to carry into full operation such an enlightened and liberal course of public policy; wherefore, be it, and it hereby is

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to consider of the most suitable and appropriate manner of conveying to his excellency governor Seward some testimonial of our esteem and gratitude.

The report of the committee being accepted, and the resolution proposed being unanimously adopted, the following resolution was adopted in the same spirit of unanimity:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed, to whom the above report and resolution shall be referred, with instructions to devise some plan to carry it into effect, and to report to an adjourned meeting to be held at this place on Monday evening next, at half past 7 o'clock, and that they be vested with discretionary powers in their call for the adjourned meeting, to publish such parts of the proceedings of this meeting as they shall think proper.

Whereupon, the chairman appointed, as the committee, Philip Banks, Stephen E. Rice, John C. Doyle, John Killion and Dr. Young, which appointment was approved by the meeting, which directed that Alderman Binns should be chairman of the committee.

The chairman having left the chair, and vice president Bernard Duke having been called to it, the meeting, on motion of Mr. Abbott, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the sincere and cordial thanks of the meeting, and they hereby are, given to alderman John Binns for the ability and impartiality with which he has discharged the various duties of chairman of this assembly.

Monday evening, April 5.—The meeting was organized by the call of alderman Binns to the chair. The committee appointed at the last meeting being called upon for their report, it was read from the chair, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the report of a committee made to a meeting of "Irishmen and the sons of Irishmen," held at Ryan's Democratic Head Quarters, on Wednesday evening, the 3d of April instant, have had the matter referred to them under their consideration, and respectfully tender the following report:

That it would be entirely in accordance with the acknowledged generous spirit and grateful hearts of the Irish people, for that portion of them which have become citizens of the United States, to make known to governor Seward the sentiments they entertain towards him for his recent official announcement of his anxious desire that emigrants from all nations, who come to the United States to make it their home, shall be received kindly, treated with affectionate regard, and not only be entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities of native-born citizens, but that, in truth and in practice, they shall be regarded as one and indivisible—and, further, the committee think it would be well for this meeting of "Irishmen and the sons of Irishmen" to accompany the expression of such feelings and opinions with a suitable piece of plate, with a suitable inscription, to be for us and our posterity, and to governor Seward and his posterity, a perpetual memorial of our grateful feelings and of his generous sentiments; wherefore, be it

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to carry into full effect the recommendation which has just been read, and to make known their proceedings at a future meeting to be called by them at this place.

Whereupon, the following committee were appointed: Mathew Carey, Robert Patterson, S. E. Rice, J. C. Doyle, John Killion, Philip Banks and Dr. Young, to which was added the chairman of the meeting.

Resolved, That the same committee be appointed to receive subscriptions for the purchase of a piece of plate to be presented to Gov. Seward, with a suitable inscription, to be a lasting memorial of the grateful feelings of "Irishmen and the sons of Irishmen," and a perpetual evidence of the generous and enlightened sentiments of an American statesman.

After some appropriate explanatory remarks from Mr. John C. Doyle, he offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Philip Banks, who, in the course of his remarks, gave an account of the origin of the call for the meeting on the 3d instant. After several other persons had addressed the meeting, the resolution was put and carried unanimously.

Resolved, That our expression of the approbation we entertain in the sentiments expressed in the message of governor Seward, is not made known from any wish to have any influence on the pending charter election in the city of New York, or from a desire at all to bias public opinion, but simply to publish the grateful effusion of the hearts of Irishmen of all political parties for the manly stand taken in their behalf by this truly patriotic governor.

Stephen E. Rice, esq. after some pertinent remarks, moved the following resolution, which was adopted without a dissenting voice:

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting are justly due, and are hereby tendered to the editors of the World, the Philadelphia Gazette, Herald and Sentinel, United States Gazette, Pennsylvania, American Sentinel, Evening Star, and such other editors as have had the kindness not only to publish the calls for the meetings, but to accompany them with expressions of kindness to us and to our countrymen.

It was then proposed that the proceedings of this meeting, and that of the meeting on the 3d inst. be published. This resolution give rise to much speaking without much difference of opinion, and was finally unanimously adopted, with instructions to the committee that they should not publish until after the New York charter election. By order of the meeting, JOHN BINNS, Chairman.

Stephen E. Rice,
John C. Doyle,
Wm. Young, } secretaries.

It is rather late to present the above as news, but as the proceedings recorded, have been misconceived by some, and misrepresented by others, it has seemed due to the gentlemen, that we should make a record not only of the acts of the meeting, but the subjoined letter from governor Seward of New York, to one of the officers:

Albany April 24th, 1839.

Stephen Edward Rice, esq.

DEAR SIR: Your kind letter of the 20th inst. has been received. I have no language to express the feelings which have been called forth by the demonstration of kindness towards me by adopted citizens in Philadelphia. It seems to me that there is enough of national interest, of national ambition, and of national pride in this country, to enable us to banish all sectional feelings, and all hereditary prejudices, and enough of philanthropy involved in the success of our form of government, to rally all our fellow citizens, whatever may be their birth or lineage, around our democratic institutions. These institutions ought to be regarded not merely as designed to secure the "largest liberty" to the greatest number of our own citizens, but as the means of extending throughout the world the knowledge of the inalienable right of man to self-government, and of the means by which that inestimable right may be established and secured. I feel that I cannot err in inculcating philanthropy even broader than patriotism, and a love of liberty as comprehensive as human society.

With grateful acknowledgments of the kindness expressed in your letter, I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA.

To the senate and house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

GENTLEMEN: The bill entitled "an act making appropriations to certain turnpikes, state roads, &c. within this commonwealth, and for other purposes," has been presented to me for executive approbation; but as I cannot give that approbation to this bill, consistently with my own sense of duty, I return it to the house of representatives, in which it originated, with my objections.

It makes large appropriations to the payment of the debts of several incorporated companies; to the building of bridges; the improvement of streams; the repair of various turnpike roads; and the building a hall in the city of Lancaster—many or all of which objects might be perfectly proper and right, had the commonwealth a superabundance of funds. But at a time when we are laboring under an existing state debt of upwards of thirty millions of dollars, it does not appear to me that it would be either prudent or proper to borrow money, or tax the people to raise funds to give away, with so profuse a hand, on improvements, many of which are secondary at least, in character and general importance. If it were even advisable to increase the state debt for this purpose, under any circumstances, the present is not a propitious time, as there is difficulty in procuring money for existing responsibilities on favorable terms, and that difficulty would no doubt be increased, by increasing the amount required.

[Here follows a list of the appropriations.] The primary object avowed by all departments of the government in the commencement of our system of internal improvements, was to secure to the commercial empire a due portion of the increasing western trade or commerce, and to develop the immense mineral resources of this commonwealth, distributed throughout the coal and iron fields in such exhaustless abundance, and the agricultural productions of her fertile valleys in her interior, northern and western countries. To carry this design into operation, the main lines between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and the lakes, were first undertaken, and the coal and iron fields of the north and northwest penetrated by the Susquehanna canals.

The immediate tributaries of the main lines, opening into rich mineral deposits, of course form a part of the system, and are necessary to its entire completion. To secure the trade of the western states, and of the northwestern portion of New York, was also an essential object of the founders of our improvement system.

Experience clearly demonstrates the wisdom and sound policy of the undertaking. Had all the energy and means of the commonwealth been devoted to the vigorous prosecution of this system in its original simplicity, the state would now be reaping the full fruits of her expenditures, and the public debt would not have been swelled to its present enormous amount. Influenced, however, by unfortunate causes and counsels, the legislation of the state has recently tended to distract the attention, and divide the means of the public, by the prosecution of various undertakings unconnected with the main lines, and, in many instances, wholly for the benefit of private companies; thus placing the public means under their unlimited control, when the faith of the commonwealth was already pledged to apply its resources to the completion of its own works, and to the payment of its own liabilities. It is manifest at a glance, that just so far as the original system has been departed from, so far has the system itself been retarded, and the public money been squandered upon unproductive objects. I do not mean to say these objects may not have been of great value to particular sections and particular individuals; but the public at large had not the same interest in them, nor could their commencement, or even completion, materially contribute to the prosecution of the main design. I rank them, accordingly, among that class of secondary improvements, which should not be undertaken by the commonwealth, while others of much greater importance remain unfinished and unprofitable.

It has only been within the last few years, that this infraction of the internal improvement system has been carried to the greatest extent. The drains upon the treasury of the commonwealth, through a thousand unseen channels, have frittered down her resources, crippled her energies and involved her in the most inextricable difficulties. To a person not intimately acquainted with the facts, it would be a question not easily to solve from an examination of the recent appropriation bills, whether the main lines of our improvements were presented on account of their own intrinsic importance, or merely as pretexts for lavishing upon numberless other subordinate objects, millions of dollars of the money of the people. In some instances, as in that of the bill under consideration, the appropriations to secondary objects have been made first, while the appropriations to the main lines have thus far failed entirely. It will be but one step further in the departure from the original system, to drop the main lines altogether, and henceforth disperse the treasure of the commonwealth among incorporated companies, local prejudices, local interests and expert bargaining to secure in the general scramble, the largest share of the public money.

It is far from my intention to attribute to any of these motives, or to the influence of any of these causes, the formation of the present bill. I am speaking of the direct tendency of this course of legislation—to what consequences it must inevitably lead, not to what result it has already reached in its progressive influence on the legislation of the commonwealth.

Unless a radical change of my opinion should take place, I can never yield my sanction to the predominance of this innovation on our internal improvement system. I conceive it to be at open variance with judicious economy, sound policy and enlightened legislation.

Thus viewing it, I should be recreant to my duty were I to sanction this bill. No man can be more reluctant than I am to exert the veto power. I shall never do it on light or trivial occasions; still less shall I claim to set up my opinion in opposition to that of the two houses of assembly; but when the completion of the main lines of improvement and the interest of the people are all involved in a measure, I cannot hesitate in the adoption of my course.

It is highly desirable, no doubt, to those concerned, that the debts of all turnpike companies, and, in fact, all other companies in the commonwealth, should be paid. But the question is, at this time, shall we borrow money to pay them, when it requires the joint exertion of every branch of the government to sustain its credit, which has been already stretched to its utmost limit to satisfy existing liabilities, and to defray the expenses incident to the management of public affairs? I cannot believe the people of Pennsylvania are prepared to answer this question in the affirmative. If I have misconceived my duty, or misunderstood the public sentiment, it is a gratifying consideration that an ample remedy is provided by the constitution.—Claiming only the merit of rectitude of intention, I cheerfully commit this bill to the action of the legislature, and to the final judgment of the people, satisfied that, on this, as on all other subjects, they are the best judges of their own interests, and of the fidelity of their public servants.

Although not necessarily connected with the main subject of this communication, it seems to me not to be improper to call the attention of the legislature again to the means of increasing the credit of the state, and of rendering it at all times more certainly available. During the existence of our present currency, mainly composed as it is of paper, fluctuations in our pecuniary affairs to a greater or less degree, are perhaps unavoidable.—Apprehensions of this state of things, frequently operate to deter capitalists from advancing money to the state when required for public purposes. It is believed that the evil would be principally removed, if provision were made by law, for paying the loan holders the interest on the loans, at all times, in gold or silver, or in equivalent funds, at their own discretion.

This would be right and just, because the money loaned to the commonwealth was of the same kind, and the interest on it should be paid in a medium as valuable to the creditors as the original advancement. I respectfully suggest to the legislature the propriety of inquiring into the subject, and of adopting such measures as are compatible with sound policy and enlightened justice. No occasion should be spared, either on the part of the executive or of the legislature, to impart to the credit and standing of this great commonwealth all the strength and stability to which they are entitled by her native resources, and the industry, enterprise, and integrity of her citizens. DAVID R. PORTER.

PART V.

FACTS CONNECTED WITH THE FOREGOING DEFALCATIONS, AND DEEMED MATERIAL TO DEVELOPE THEIR TRUE CHARACTER.

It may well be supposed by the house, that, in the course of an investigation involving so large a mass of testimony, both written and oral, and from the despatch incident to their labors, the committee have discovered numerous facts of deep interest to the house and country, which they have been unable to embody for presentation to the house under either of the general divisions of this report which have preceded, and although such facts have a direct and kindred relation to the subject of defalcations of public officers and their returns. Some of them will now be briefly adverted to.

The committee have found that both the late and present collectors at the port of New York have been in the receipt of large annual incomes, amounting, according to the testimony, from $5,000 to $15,000, from storage of dutiable merchandise in the public store-houses while the duties on such merchandise are being computed.

The public stores at New York thus used, are divided into two classes by the collector: one, devoted to the merchandise under appraisement; the other, to merchandise not ordered to appraisement, nor permitted to be taken by the importer, and being still in the keeping of the law officers, to secure duties. The former are called appraisers' public stores, and are rented at the public expense. No storage is charged on merchandise deposited in them, but their whole management is at the expense of the government. The other stores are called general order stores; and on these, perquisites, amounting to the sums before named, annually, in the shape of storage, cartage, and labor, are charged and received by the collector, who takes upon himself the payment of the incidental rent, retaining to himself the entire surplus. Of this large and profitable class of income, neither the late nor present collector has made any return whatever to the treasury, notwithstanding the requisitions of law appear imperatively to require it. By the act of May 7, 1832, section 9, establishing the compensation of custom-house officers, it is expressly enacted "that, whenever the emoluments of the collector of the customs at New York shall exceed four thousand dollars in any one year, after deducting the necessary expenses incident to his office in the same year, the excess shall, in every such case, be paid into the treasury for the use of the United States." By section 11 of the same act, section 9 is so limited as not to extend to fines, penalties, or forfeitures, or the distribution thereof; and by section 18, compensation to collectors for superintending light-houses, in addition to the before-named salary, is provided.

In the opinion of the committee, the emoluments of the collector at New York, arising from public store-houses, which are necessarily at all times under the charge of sworn officers paid out of the public treasury, are, for no sound reason, to be distinguished from any other emoluments of his office, for which he is required to account to the treasury. And why the collector has been or should be permitted, by virtue of his office as collector, to regard as an unofficial expense the rents of any number of public stores, and, under this pretext, to make them the sources of profitable speculation, while the superintendence of the whole is at all times necessarily conducted at the expense of government, and by subordinates paid by government, is to the committee wholly incomprehensible, and believed to be not only an evasion, but a positive violation of the provisions, as well as obvious intent of law.

The books of storage, cartage, and incidental expenses of the public stores, are not kept so as to exhibit the truth, or any record true, as to the extent of emoluments thus annually arising to the collector; and, from the testimony of the principal storekeeper, both in relation to these perquisites under the former and present collector, as also from the testimony of Mr. Hoyt himself, the committee are of opinion that the design of this loose manner in this portion of the accounts of the custom-house is to escape the possibility of full and minute investigation into the extent of moneys thus withheld from the public treasury, and lest its importance might justly be appreciated. The subpoenaed testimony of Stdney Wetmore, public storekeeper, examined by Mr. Wise, will elucidate these positions:

Question 3. Will you please state the amount of storage charged under the late and present collectors, and the amount of rent and expenses paid by these collectors respectively, for each quarter since you have been in office?

Answer. I cannot state the amount paid to the late collector correctly, as he often drew the amount from my hands collected daily, and part of the time paid rents himself, and part I paid by his order. So that he can only tell what are the net proceeds received from the stores during his term of office. The amount of net proceeds received by the present collector for the three quarters he has been in office, I think is about $2,500.

Question 4. Is there no regular book or account kept of amounts received for storage?

Answer. I keep a cash book of the gross amount of storage, cartage, and labor received; but which does not show the amount paid out for expenses nor does it distinguish what part is received for goods sent on private storage at request of the merchant, or what accrued on goods sent on general order.

Question 5. Are you not the only proper officer charged with keeping the accounts of storage; and what is your gross estimate of amount received by Mr. Swartwout per annum for storage?

Answer. I am the only officer charged with the keeping of the storage account. Mr. Swartwout received some of the stores; of course I cannot say what should be deducted from the gross amounts for rent of them; but from all the mean I have of knowing and judging of this business, should say the net amount, after deducting rent and expenses, and exclusive of Mr. Swartwout's stores, might average, yearly, between $5,000 and $10,000. The business, as I before have stated, is very variable, owing to the quantity and manner in which goods have arrived. Mr. Swartwout's storehouses were worth probably $3,000 per annum. This would make the entire net perquisite $5,000 per annum. I have known, during five years, the net perquisites on storage to be as low as $2,000 per annum, and to vary from that to $10,000 per annum, in one instance. Hence, put the gross average at $5,000 per annum.

Jesse Hoyt, collector, examined by Mr. Wise.

Question 3. Do you account to government for the profit of these stores, other than appraisers' stores? If not, to whose use are the perquisites of storage, over and above rent and expenses, appropriated?

Answer. I do not account to government for any excess over rent and expenses. This profit, I understand, has been, from the organization of the present tariff system down to the present time, considered as belonging to the collector. It is a private storage business of no expense to the government, and it has never claimed the profit.—The person holding the office of collector leases the stores and pays the expenses, and charges the storage to those who use the stores; and the rate of storage is that established by the chamber of commerce, as this witness has always understood.—This profit, witness believes, has always been for the use of the person holding the office of collector.

Question 4. Does the collector or the government pay the officers who attend to storage?

Answer. In answer to this question, this witness says that the law requires that all goods imported are to be landed and taken care of by "officers of the customs," until duties are paid or secured. To each of the public stores there are a sufficient number of inspectors (sworn officers) to attend to the receiving and delivering of the goods from the public stores. There are two or three of such officers to each store, depending upon the size; and in some cases there may be four of such inspectors to a store. These inspectors are called off for other duties, when the case requires, and are also responsible for other duties when their services are demanded. These officers receive their daily pay, as inspectors, from the government money. They do not, as witness understands, do any labor; but merely keep an account of goods received and delivered. The laborers are paid by the person holding the office of collector, who receives the storage.

Another development of fact made by the committee in pursuing the inquiry in regard to the disposition made of public moneys by Messrs. Swartwout and Price, and other public officers, is deemed by the committee deserving of being presented to the special attention of the house. How far it may have entered into the defalcations of the late collector and district attorney, as an incipient impulse in breaking down the true estimate by the public officer of his relations to community and to government, is left to the judgment of the house upon the facts reported. But of its direct tendency to reduce public office to the degraded character of merchandise, to be bought and sold to subordinates by a regulated annual stipend, and to demoralize and prepare the mind of incumbents of office for acts of peculation and plunder upon the public revenues, there is no doubt remaining in the judgment of the committee. The system of a regular taxation of public officers connected with and deriving patronage from the custom house at New York, by a tariff proportioned to such patronage in each case, for the support of party elections, is now alluded to. Instead, however, of attempting to characterize this system in the terms merited, the committee will attempt only to present a summary of the testimony taken upon the subject, referring for more minute details to the pages of the committee's journal.

Arent S. De Pryster was sworn as a witness.

In his first answer, he testified that he had held the situation of weigher in the custom house about five years.

In reply to the 3d question, he returned the following answer:

"The weighers were called on to pay fifteen dollars each for the support of the election; and when I declined, Mr. Vanderpoel, the deputy surveyor, observed, that I ought to consider whether my $1,500 per annum was not worth paying fifteen dollars for. Under the impression that it was the price of my situation, I paid it. The above occurred during the last spring election for charter officers. During my holding office, for about five years, I was occasionally called on; but always declined, until within the last two years."

In his fourth answer, he said his office of weigher was held under the United States, and paid laterly out of the treasury; formerly, a commission was allowed on the amount of goods weighed. In his fifth answer, he said he knew only by hearsay as to whether the salaries of other subordinate officers were thus assessed for the use of party purposes; and adds, "but I saw many of the weighers pay the tax of fifteen dollars."

The money thus collected, he testified "was intended to be used to support the election of persons attached to the present administration." The person who collected the tax from him was Mr. Vanderpoel, who "at that time held the office of deputy surveyor. He did not recollect the amount of his salary. He believed he now holds the office of appraiser." He (Mr. Vanderpoel) had a list of the names of the officers from whom he collected the tax. The last payment of $15 made by the witness, referred to in his 3d answer, was made "since the last collector (Mr. Hoyt) came into office." The witness had been removed by Mr. Hoyt, but had never condescended to ask the reasons, &c.

David S. Lyon was sworn as a witness. In answer to the first question, he said: "I was the first deputy collector of the port of New York during the whole time Samuel Swartwout was collector."

In answer to the 21st question, he said: "I have frequently been called on to contribute to political objects while I was deputy collector, as an officer of the custom house. The amount was from twenty to one hundred dollars. The tax was pro rata, according to salary. It bore a proportion of from one to six per cent. I frequently paid a part of the amount. When it was too high, and more than I could afford, I urged them to reduce it. In one instance, when I was assessed twenty dollars, Mr. Swartwout told the collector of the tax that ten dollars was enough for me to pay. For a few years back I have not paid any thing to the general committee, because I could not afford to pay the amount assessed, and because I could not conscientiously longer sustain the party. The collectors of the Tammany Hall general committee, one of whom was John Decker, called on me several times. William Tyack once or twice called on me to collect the amount with which I was assessed; he was not the regular collector, but was one of the general committee. I believe that nearly all the officers of the custom house, in doors and out, and the clerks, were similarly taxed, and generally paid what they were assessed. It was assessed by the general committee of Tammany Hall, and for the support of the party denominated the Tammany Hall party. If the individual did not pay the amount he was taxed with, the collector would remark, you will be reported to the general committee—and every body well understood that proscription would follow. The collector of the general committee has an alphabetical book, which contains the names of persons taxed, and the amount each individual is required to pay."

This witness had ceased to be deputy collector, and was so notified by the present collector when Mr. Swartwout's term of office expired. Thus, by these two ex-officers of the customs, was it proved that, during the term of Mr. Swartwout, and of the present collector, (Mr. Hoyt), both, had this pro rata tax been assessed upon the salaries of officers of the government.

Abraham B. Vanderpoel, a person now incumbent in office, was sworn as a witness. He said: "I was appointed to the office of inspector of the customs in May, 1829, at $1,095 per year, and held such until 1836, when I was appointed deputy surveyor, at $1,500 per year, and March, 1835, appointed appraiser at $2,000 per year."

Mr. Wise then propounded the 2d question to the witness, and certain occurrences took place in the committee, which were unanimously ordered to be stated on the journal, thus:

"Mr. Wise propounded to the witness, Abraham B. Vanderpoel, the following question, to wit: Question 2d. 'Do you know whether the officers of the custom house have ever been called on to contribute sums of money to party and political objects? What officers have been so called upon; by whom; for what amount; with or without regard to their salaries of office; when did they contribute; if they refused, was any intimation given that their refusal might occasion their removal; what amount has so been contributed or collected; and for the support of what party, at any one election?'"

"The witness took the interrogatory without objection to propounding the same, and proceeded to write his answer thereon on the paper attached to the question, and had written the following, to wit: 'I have known officers attached to the custom house to have been called on for—' when Mr. Owens, member of the committee, interposed, and informed the witness that he was not bound to answer any interrogatory relating to his private affairs; and, thereupon, Mr. Foster, another member of the committee, objected to propounding the interrogatory. The witness here commenced to tear off what he had written before objection was made to the interrogatory. Mr. Wise prevented him from doing so by forbidding the act. Mr. Foster insisted that the witness had the right to tear off what he had written, and that it was not his answer until it was complete and handed in, and he asked the witness whether it was his answer, and he replied 'it was not; and the committee having decided that the interrogatory should be propounded, the said question by Mr. Wise was again handed to the witness, and he returned the following: 'I decline to answer the 2d question.' The witness was then permitted to retire."

John Decker was sworn as a witness. In answer to the 3d question he said: "I have been collector for the democratic republican party in this city. It is not an official appointment, and I have made no collections for this year; nor have I been discharged from said appointment." In answer to the 4th question, whether he had ever collected any sum or sums of money from William M. Price, whilst he was district attorney of the United States, for the democratic republican party of New York, he said: "All the collections I ever made for the democratic republican party were strictly confidential; I therefore respectfully decline answering the question." In answer to the 17th question, he said he was the collector of the democratic republican party for five or six years previous to 1838. By the 19th question, he was asked whether, during the time he was collector of the democratic republican party in the city of New York, and since, he had known William M. Price to pay or contribute any sum or sums of money to political and party objects, he answered: "I cannot answer that question without violating confidence." In answer to the 20th question, he said: "He had never known William M. Price to contribute, at any one time, or at different times, to carry an election for the democratic republican party in the city of New York $500, nor half of that sum." He was then asked how much less he had known him to contribute. He declined to answer. He was asked whose confidence he would violate by answering the 19th question. He answered: "The confidence of the finance committee of the general democratic republican committee." In answer to the 26th question, he said that Mr. Vanderpoel was a member of one of these committees in 1838; and, in answer to other questions, that other officers of the custom house had been members of these committees during the past four years; that Price's contributions had not amounted, to his knowledge, to $500; that there were other collectors beside himself; the members of the finance committee were all collectors; that he declined answering how often he had collected from Mr. Price; that his instructions from the finance committee were, that he should not inform any person from whom or how much he collected from any person; and that these instructions were the reason why he declined to answer several questions of the committee, in as far as he thought it would be a violation of confidence.

Thus, though it was very apparent from the testimony of this witness that Mr. Price had contributed something to party and political objects, yet what amount he had paid to the seven or eight collectors of his party for such objects, whilst he was an officer of the government and a defaulter, could not be ascertained by reason of the secrecy enjoined upon these collectors by the general or finance committee of the party.

The committee further report, under the head of general facts material to characterize the late defalcations at New York, that the following testimony shows, 1st. The whole amount of specie collected at the custom house of New York during the entire period of the suspension of specie payments, was less than the sum of $150,000, and of that sum but $70,000 was carried to the credit of the treasurer of the United States; 2d. That, during the suspension of specie payments, the treasury department had to send from Washington city to the collector at New York drafts for specie to pay debentures and expenses of his office; 3. That Mr. Swartwout, during the suspension of specie payments, notoriously received a large portion of the revenue collected at New York in bank notes which were not allowed by the department to be carried to the credit of the treasurer of the U. States; and 4th. That this receipt of bank notes not carried to the credit of the treasurer of the U. States, must be regarded as an important cause tending to aid Mr. Swartwout, in abstracting the public money; and 5th. That the bonds contained in the list of Phillips, in document 13, the receipts of which Mr. Swartwout never debited himself with as paid during the first quarter of 1837, and which constitute the chief item of his defalcation, were never suspended either by the order of the secretary of the treasury or by the act of congress of October, 1837, and were actually paid before the suspension of specie payments; and thus the excuse of the department for not detecting the defalcation of Mr. Swartwout's bond account, founded upon the confusion arising from the suspension of the payment of duty bonds, utterly fails. The testimony is as follows:

Joshua Phillips was sworn as a witness.

Examined by Mr. Wise.

Question 1. Were the bonds included in the list kept by you and contained in document 13, herewith handed, and chiefly payable in the 1st and 2d quarters of 1837, paid to Mr. Swartwout?

Answer. All the bonds included in the list kept by me, and contained in document No. 13, were paid to Mr. Swartwout.

Question 2. Were the bonds included in the amount of difference between the sum of that list of bonds, $597,331 63, and the sum of $646,754 83, (the alleged deficit of Mr. Swartwout), paid to him, and, if not, to whom?

Answer. The money for all bonds collected were, in each and every instance, paid over to Mr. Swartwout, and the above difference was paid to him.

Question 3. Were those bonds paid at maturity?

Answer. In consequence of the business of the custom house having got behindhand, the bonds were not made up (by ascertaining the amount of each, &c.) in time to be sent to bank for collection, and they were collected at the custom house; and, generally, the bonds contained in list of document 13 were paid after maturity.

Question 4. How long, generally, after they were due, and in what months of 1837, were they paid?

Answer. The bonds were paid, generally, from ten to twenty days after they became due, and in the months of January, February, March, April and May, 1837. All were paid previous to the suspension of specie payments.

Question 5. Was the payment of any of these bonds suspended by the order of the treasury department in May, 1837, until congress was assembled in the September following?

Answer. None of the bonds contained in said list were suspended by any order from the treasury department.

Question 6. In what kind of money did Mr. Swartwout receive the amounts of bonds and customs after the suspension of specie payments?

Answer. For some time after the suspension of specie payments by the banks, Mr. Swartwout directed the cashier's department to receive the notes of the banks in this city in payment for bonds and customs; and that course was pursued until the issue of treasury drafts, and, occasionally, during the whole time that Mr. Swartwout remained in office.

Question 7. What amount did Mr. Swartwout receive in bank notes?

Answer. Previous to the issue of treasury drafts, the whole amount collected was received in bank notes. The particular amount I cannot state. The amount of specie received during the suspension was about $500,000, and of that amount $70,000 was transferred by Mr. Swartwout to the treasurer of the United States.

Question 8. Was not the whole amount of bonds included in your list of bonds received by Mr. Swartwout in 1837 paid to him in bank notes?

Answer. The whole amount was paid in bank notes.

Question 9. Were these bank notes, after the suspension of specie payments in May, allowed by the department to be paid by Mr. Swartwout to the credit of the treasurer of the United States?

Answer. After the suspension of specie payments I am not aware of any money being transferred to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, except $70,000 in specie.

Question 10. Please state, categorically, whether the department authorised, or in any way, directly or indirectly, permitted or prohibited the credit of bank notes, during the suspension of specie payments by Mr. Swartwout to the treasurer of the United States?

Answer. I do not know that the department authorised, or in any way permitted or prohibited, directly or indirectly, the credit of bank notes during the suspension of specie payments to the treasurer of the United States further than (if my memory is correct) Mr. Swartwout having told me, some time after the suspension, that he had received a letter from Washington directing him not to receive any money on account of the U. States, except of that description authorised by law.

Question 11. Did not Mr. Swartwout, soon after the suspension of specie payments, pay a visit to Washington to obtain from the department an arrangement as to the kind of money in which customs should be received?

Answer. Mr. Swartwout did, soon after the suspension, visit Washington, and his object was to make an arrangement as to the kind of money he might receive for customs.

Question 12. Upon his return to New York, did he not, at a public meeting of merchants, and at all times after his visit to Washington, publicly and privately, announce that he would receive bank notes in payment of customs.

Answer. Upon his return to New York Mr. Swartwout did, at a public meeting of merchants, declare that he would receive bank notes in payment of customs; and upon every occasion when applied to by persons as to the description of money he would receive, his answer was, that he would take bank notes, and that he had told them at Washington that he would take the responsibility.

Question 13. Was it not notorious in New York that Mr. Swartwout was receiving bank notes in payment of customs?

Answer. It was.

Question 14. The treasury department, knowing the amount of protested treasury drafts received at the custom house in New York, and the amount of specie paid there during the suspension of specie payments, must it not have known that Mr. Swartwout was receiving bank notes, and must it not have had the means of knowing the amount of bank notes he received?

Answer. I do not think that the treasury department was aware of the total amount of specie received, as no regular returns were made of it.— They knew the amount of protested treasury drafts received. Inquiry was made from Washington as to what amount in specie could be placed by the collector to the credit of the treasury of the U. States, and in three instances the amount of $70,000 was so placed; and I believe it may have been known at Washington that he was in the habit of receiving bank notes.

Question 15. Was not the hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury, at the custom house in New York during the summer of 1838, before Mr. Swartwout sailed for England? If so, during what month?

Answer. I saw a person, during the summer of 1838, (the month I do not know), at the custom house, and I was told it was the hon. Levi Woodbury. I had never seen him before that time. I do not know whether it was before or after Mr. Swartwout sailed for England.

Question 21. Does the statement contained in your letter of November 9th, 1838, to H. D. Gilpin, solicitor, as contained in doc. 13, showing the mode of collecting bonds through the banks, apply to the bonds contained in your list of bonds taken by Mr. Swartwout, and not accounted for by him to the United States?

Answer. The statement contained in my letter of November 9, 1838, to H. D. Gilpin, solicitor of the treasury, showing the mode of collecting bonds through the bank, does not apply to the bonds contained in list taken by Mr. Swartwout, and not accounted for by him to the U. States.— These bonds were all collected through the custom house, and were never placed in bank. It is possible that a few of them might have been put in bank for collection and returned to the custom house, and afterwards paid there; but the amount, if any, was very small.

Question 23. Which were the banks the notes of which generally Mr. Swartwout received during the suspension in 1837?

Answer. The notes of all the banks in the city of New York were received generally by Mr. Swartwout during the suspension in 1837, except those of the Dry Dock Bank.

Question 24. Have not all these banks since resumed specie payments; and if their notes, received by Mr. Swartwout in 1837, had, after it was known that they were received by him, been ordered by the department to be paid by him to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, and been so paid by him, would the United States have lost a dollar upon bonds so received by him in bank notes?

Answer. All the banks in the city of New York have resumed specie payments; and had Mr. Swartwout, after it was known he was receiving bank notes, been ordered by the department to transfer the notes so received, the United States would not have lost a cent in bank notes received by him, if he had made the transfer so ordered.

Mr. Ogden examined by Mr. Wise.
Question 42. Were the bonds included in the list of bonds kept by Phillips, and contained in doc. 13, paid to Mr. Swartwout?

Answer. These bonds were all paid to Mr. Swartwout.

Question 43. Were the bonds which were due and payable in the 1st and 2d quarters of 1837 paid at maturity?

Answer. I believe they were all paid at maturity, with some exceptions, which were sent to Mr. Price for prosecution.

Question 44. Was their payment suspended or affected by the order of the treasury department in May, 1837?

Answer. The payment of these bonds was not affected by the order of the treasury department in May, 1837.

Question 45. What kind of money did Mr. Swartwout receive for customs after the suspension of specie payments?

Answer. Mr. Swartwout received in payment treasury notes, banks notes, checks on the banks, and gold and silver; the principal part in bank notes and checks, and treasury notes when they were below par. The amount of gold and silver was very small, it never exceeded $7,000 any day, and seldom amounted to that sum; generally two to four thousand dollars. The whole amount of our receipts in specie during the suspension of the banks, was about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. More than two-thirds of our receipts were in bank notes and checks.

Question 46. Were the amounts received in bank notes by Mr. Swartwout, during the suspension of specie payments, placed to the credit of the treasurer of the United States?

Answer. The amounts of bank notes received by Mr. Swartwout were not passed by him to the credit of the treasurer of the United States.

Question 47. Must the department not have known then, from his quarterly accounts showing the whole amount received by him, and the amount placed to the credit of the treasurer of the U. States, that he was receiving a large proportion of the customs in bank notes, which were not allowed to be carried to the credit of the treasurer?

Answer. Certainly, had they examined his quarterly account, they could have ascertained the amount received by him, as well as they could have become acquainted with the amount of receipts in bank notes which were not carried to the credit of the treasurer.

Question 48. Whilst the quarterly accounts of Mr. Swartwout for 1837 showed that large balances were in his hands, did not the treasury department repeatedly, during the suspension of specie payments, send to Mr. Swartwout drafts for specie to pay debentures and expenses of his officers, &c.?

Answer. During the above period large balances were in Mr. Swartwout's hands, and the government passed heavy drafts upon him for specie, which he was unable to pay in specie; in fact, we had to apply to the treasury department for specie to pay debentures and the current expenses of our office.

In addition to the foregoing testimony of Messrs. Phillips and Ogden, the cashier and assistant cashier at the custom house at New York, under Mr. Swartwout, the committee submit the following correspondence between Mr. Woodbury and Mr. Swartwout:

May 10, 1837.

Sir: Owing to the heavy run which was made throughout Monday and Tuesday upon the banks of this city, they all came to the determination last evening of suspending specie payments for the present, the deposit banks being included in the number. As soon as the deposit banks opened this morning, I called upon the presidents and cashiers to confer with them in relation to this measure, and have been advised by the Manhattan Company and Bank of America to continue to receive the notes of the city banks as usual.

On looking over the "circular to collectors and receivers of public money and to the deposit banks," I find the instructions so positive that I prefer suspending receipts for bonds, in this office, which may be returned from the banks, until I can receive your further instructions. In this decision I am sustained by the opinion of the district attorney. Many persons have tendered bank notes for their bonds, which fell due some days since, but I have declined receiving them until I hear from you. In order that I may receive the earliest information from you, I shall send this letter by the "express mail." I am, &c.

S. SWARTWOUT.

Hon. Levi Woodbury.

P. S. The National Bank refuses to receive the notes of the Mechanics' Bank in consequence of the large balance due them.

To collectors of the customs.

Treasury Department, May 12, 1837.

If the bank where you deposit should suspend specie payments, you will yourself collect and keep safely in your own hands the public money for all duties at your port, until further directions are given to you by this department how to deposit, transfer, or pay it. You must, of course, continue to adhere to the existing laws of congress, and the former instructions of the treasury, in respect to the kind of money receivable for customs; and by which it is understood to be your duty to require payments to be made in specie, or the notes of specie paying banks that are at par.

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Treasury Department, May 19, 1837.

SIR: This department has, with much surprise, seen several representations in the daily press concerning certain declarations made by you at a recent public meeting in New York city, as to the course you intended to pursue in future in collecting the public revenue.

The importance of the subject, and the nature of these representations, render it my unpleasant duty to call your immediate attention to them.

Some of the accounts of what took place represent you as saying, in substance, that, as the orders of the treasury could not be complied with, you, on your own responsibility, would dispense with them; while others state that you understood a discretion had been left to you by the executive on this subject; and that, in the exercise of such discretion, you should not conform to the instructions of the department, either by collecting the money yourself, which fell due for duties, or by collecting it in such kind of money as the laws require. Other representations convey the idea that, if you pursued such a course the government would make no objection to it.

Under a belief that in these reports as to your remarks and determination on this subject, some unfortunate errors must have occurred, or that you must have imbibed very incorrect opinions concerning the views entertained by the department, it becomes proper on the present occasion to repeat, in explicit terms, the real character and extent of those views.

1. The order as to the mode of collecting bonds by yourself, rather than through the banks, and in specie or its equivalent, was, in the last report, in accordance with the course which you reported to this department for its approval on the suspension of payment by the banks. The order was the same in substance, in all respects, at your port, as that adopted at all other ports in the United States, where no banks paid specie on demand for their notes, and where, in that event, the express language of the deposit act of June, 1836, imperatively required their discontinuance as public depositories; and other laws virtually forbid the receipt of their notes for duties.

2. But, in the wide-spread calamity which had recently fallen on the commercial world, and, through it, upon those banking institutions, in common with others which were depositories of the public money, it was evident that our finances must become embarrassed through the previous embarrassments of others, and that great care and efforts must be exercised to meet faithfully the current public engagements. At the same time, it was desirable that every indulgence and forbearance should be exercised, and were intended by the president and this department to be liberally exercised towards the public debtors, which those engagements would permit.

3. Accordingly, in order to mitigate the evils which pressed so heavily on the merchants, this department, with the sanction of the president, at once authorised a postponement to be granted, in all suitable cases, of the payment of duty bonds, as well before as after suit; and subsequently, as new events justified, permitted it to be extended till after the commencement of the next session of congress.

The department likewise empowered the collectors to receive for duties the drafts of the treasurer, in favor of the public creditors, which might not be paid in specie to the holders by the banks on which they were drawn.

Outstanding debenture bonds are also receivable in the same way; and, to afford the opportunity to procure still further aid and relief, if it shall be deemed proper by congress, that body has been specially convened by the president at the earliest convenient day.

After all these mitigating measures, neither the president nor this department saw any further indulgence which could be given consistent with the acts of congress, and which it was within our powers to bestow, limited and regulated as those powers are by various express laws.

It was, and still is, hoped that the merchants would, till congress assembled, cheerfully incur the diminished sacrifices, in respect to the payment of some of the duties, which their liabilities and business might render necessary; and that the officers connected with the customs would feel a pride, as well as zeal, in encouraging them to uphold the laws faithfully, and neither countenance nor permit any departures from them.

The executive possesses no authority to delegate to you, nor has it intended to delegate, any discretion to disregard those laws in any particular, or to act contrary to the instructions of the department which had been issued in conformity to them; nor can it sanction the exercise of any such discretion on the part of any of the officers of the customs.

It would seem better that the duties, whether due on bonds or in cash, when the goods are entered, and which the merchants may be unable, if not postponed, to pay in any of the legal modes before pointed out, till the early day on which congress convenes, should go entirely unpaid from inability to meet them legally, than be collected or discharged in a manner that is not sanctioned either by the acts of congress or our duty to the government.

The department is willing to make liberal allowances for acts growing out of the sympathy naturally felt for the embarrassments of the commercial community, and the strong desire to contribute to their relief; but you must be sensible that the newspaper accounts which have already appeared, are calculated to convey the idea that the president and this department are disposed to overlook, or even to approve, the unauthorised course which it is said you propose to adopt; and it is possible that, from your full knowledge of the sincerity and extent of the anxious desire of the president and of this department to afford relief, you may have entertained the impression that such would be the case.

It therefore becomes my duty instantly to inform you that all such impressions are erroneous, and it is hoped that many of the considerations before stated will have occurred to you; and that, under their influence, you will continue to discharge your duties in the manner pointed out in the acts of congress and the instructions of this department. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, sec. of the treasury.

Samuel Swartwout, esq., collector of New York.

May 22, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th inst., and beg leave to state, that I regret that you should have believed the various reports of the newspapers, in regard to the language said to have been made use of on the 7th inst. I will give you the precise words made use of by me, and leave you to judge whether there was any impropriety in them. Several gentlemen called upon me to request that I would meet the merchants at their exchange, and inform them of the result of my visit to Washington. I did so; and when there, it was stated, that immediately on the receipt of your communication of the 12th instant, I set out for Washington; that when I arrived there, I waited upon the secretary of the treasury, and expressed to him my apprehensions that the order could not be carried out, and begged to know whether some expedient could not be adopted to relieve the merchants from specie payments; that the secretary showed me the law, read it, and observed that it was imperative, and could not be disregarded; that upon this I went to see the president, who gave me the same assurances, expressing, at the same time, his deep sympathy for the merchants who were so unfortunately situated; that as no relief could be offered through the authority of government, I had offered to act without his orders, provided I was permitted in any way so to do, and that I would throw myself upon the people and congress for my justification; but that this proposition was promptly disapproved by you. In conclusion, I remarked, that notwithstanding the government could not authorise any deviation from the law, I was perfectly willing to take such responsibility, and that I believed the people and congress would bear me out in it.—This same declaration was made in your and the president's hearing, without exciting your alarm in the least at the time.

In renewing it here, I did not mean to be understood as having acted on it, or assumed it; but simply expressed my belief, in case it should be done, and I was willing to run the hazard, that I, or any other person so doing, would be fully sustained by congress. The expression, therefore, of such a belief was not criminal, although to carry it out might have been; but this I did not do. The instructions contained in your letter of the 12th inst., and in subsequent orders, have been strictly carried into effect. Not a dollar for bonds, or cash duties, has been received at this office, since Mr. Ogden received your letter of the 14th instant, in any thing but specie. I have not authorised or countenanced a deviation from it. There has not then been any violation of the orders of the department. The most unpleasant circumstance connected with this affair, is the impression that I may have authorised the supposition that you or the president had, by innuendo or intimation of any kind, induced me to assume this responsibility.—This is impossible. I may be imprudent, overzealous, or incautious; but I beg you and the president to believe that I am incapable of duplicity or falsehood. I could not, in the most remote degree, have done so. I never dreamed of such a thing, and never could have entertained the idea, or in the slightest degree have intimated it to others. I will detain you no longer than to request that hereafter, when any thing is published in the newspapers reflecting upon this office, you will do me the favor to believe that we are acting for the best, and have no intention of disregarding the directions of the government. S. SWARTWOUT.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

In conclusion, the committee cannot forbear remarking, that during their whole investigation they have not found the case to which the laws, as they already exist, do not apply, or in which they are defective. The permanent provisions of the laws constitute every necessary check upon collectors, receivers, and disbursers of public money; and the checks which, by law, have been, and may be, created in the discretion of the executive, have only to be attended to, and applied by those whose duty it is to superintend the execution of the laws, to ensure faithfulness, and detect delinquencies or defalcations in public officers.

Indeed, in all the new recommendations which have been proposed by the president or the secretary of the treasury, the committee have found either what already exists, or what might always have been prescribed and enforced in the form of treasury regulations, and what, if enforced, would have prevented the late defalcations; and these new recommendations can, indeed, be regarded in no other light than as so many proofs of what regulations, in respect to the late defaulting collectors, receivers, &c., have been hitherto wholly neglected by the present executive and heads of departments.

The committee hereto append the journal of their proceedings, and submit it to the house as a part of this report.

PART VI.

MR. HOPKINS'S SPECIAL CONCURRENCE IN THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE, APPENDED THERETO BY VOTE OF THE COMMITTEE.

I have had the requisite time for scrutinizing the report of the committee with that care and attention which its length and importance deserve, and which I could have desired; and I should have preferred, for this reason, to have presented the journal of the committee, without comment, to the house of representatives. But, as conflicting opinions prevail in the committee, and are to be submitted to the country in the shape of formal reports, I consider it my duty to say that I concur with the committee in all the conclusions at which they have arrived, so far as those conclusions apply to the extent and character of the defalcations of Samuel Swartwout and William M. Price.

I should be faithful to my duty, and do violence to the most conscientious convictions of my judgment, if I did not also declare my entire concurrence in those conclusions of the committee which relate to the conduct of the late naval officer of the custom house at New York; to the late and present solicitor of the treasury; to the secretary and accounting officers of the treasury department, including the late comptroller of that department; and, in that part of the report which reviews the conduct of J. Hoyt, the present collector of the customs at the port of New York.

G. W. HOPKINS, member of the committee.

REPORT OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. OWENS, from the minority of the committee herein mentioned, submitted the following:

25th congress, 3d session.

Congress of the United States,

In the house of representatives, Jan. 17, 1839.

Resolved, That the communication from the president of the United States of the 8th of December, 1838, relating to the defalcation of the late collector of the port of New York, (except so much as relates to the modification of the revenue laws), be referred to a select committee of nine members, to be appointed by the house, by ballot, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the causes and extent of the late defalcations of the custom-house at New York and other places; the length of time they have existed; the correctness of the returns which have been made by the collectors, naval and other officers, and the deposit banks, respectively; and all such facts connected with said defalcations as may be deemed material to develop their true character.

Be it further resolved, That said committee be required to inquire into, and make report of, any defalcations among the collectors, receivers, and disbursers of the public money, which may now exist; who are the defaulters; the amount of defalcations; the length of time they have existed, and the causes which led to them; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

The minority of the committee, appointed under the above resolutions of the house of representatives, beg leave to report:

That the committee entered on the duties assigned them soon after the passage of the resolutions. At their first meeting and organization in the city of Washington, a resolution was offered in these words:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause this committee to be furnished by the proper executive department with a table showing the defalcations which have occurred among the collectors, receivers, and disbursers of public money, and other public officers, since the 4th day of March, 1829; the names of the defaulters; the amount of each defalcation; when each case occurred; the length of time each case has existed; what steps have been taken by the proper departments or officers to prosecute the defaulter, and to secure the United States in each case; and what defaulters are retained in the same offices in which they became defaulters, or have been appointed to other offices.—

which, in the opinion of two of the undersigned, (the third not being then present), was unauthorized by the terms or the spirit of the resolutions of the house, which are confined to the late defalcations, and could not be construed to include defalcations as far back as the 4th March, 1829, which had been heretofore reported to congress by the secretary of the treasury, and no action had thereon by the house. Under this view of the subject, and believing it to be the first step to give a liberal construction to the power delegated, (and which opinion was confirmed by subsequent events), one of the undersigned deemed it a duty he owed to the house to offer an amendment, in these words: "Strike out the words 'defalcations which have occurred among the collectors, receivers, and disbursers of public money, and other public officers, since the 4th day of March, 1829,' and insert the words, 'the late defalcations in the custom-house at New York and other places, and any other defalcations prior to 1838, and not heretofore reported by the departments to congress and the country.'" The amendment was rejected, and the original resolution adopted.

The committee being impressed with the belief that the great object of the house in raising the committee was to investigate the causes and extent of the defalcations at the custom-house at New York, deemed it proper to adjourn to that city, where the defalcations had arisen, the witnesses or actors in the same resided, and the documentary evidence was to be found. In pursuance of this determination, the committee assembled, on the 24th January, in the city of New York, and, without loss of time, engaged in the arduous duties of the investigation. At the suggestion of one of the members, whether the committee were to carry on their investigation open to the public at large, it appeared to be tacitly agreed that such a course was calculated to embarrass the committee, as they had no power to suppress disorder, in case any should arise; but no intimation was given that the proceedings of the committee should be secret. In the mean time, paragraphs appeared in the newspapers of New York, stating the committee sat with closed doors. It was evident also, from the wide and extended range of the investigation, that many persons were likely to be implicated, both officers of the government and private citizens. The undersigned believed that the committee, though a select committee, was not a secret committee; that the house, when it passed the resolution, never intended the proceedings of the committee to be kept secret; that justice required prompt and early notice should be given all persons accused; that the charge should be made in a public manner, the accused confronted with the accuser, and that secret inquiries were unknown to the constitution, and alien to the practice and feelings of the American people. The minority of the committee entertaining these sentiments, and not knowing the views of the majority upon this interesting subject of secrecy; and finding (though other persons were excluded) two or three witnesses at one and the same time were admitted into the committee-room, thereby subjecting the proceedings of the committee to misrepresentation, and the action of individual members to suspicion and calumny, deemed it proper to bring the subject before the committee in a substantive form, and to call for a distinct expression of opinion, by proposing the following resolutions:

Whereas all proceedings of an inquisitorial character, and conducted in secret, are at variance with the principles of republican government and abhorrent to the feelings of the American people:

And, as justice demands that all persons, whether they be officers of the government or private citizens, who, in the course of this investigation, may be implicated or charged with official misconduct, or being concerned in aiding or abetting such misconduct, should have immediate and prompt notice of the charge, so that, if innocent, they may repel it; and that, whatever may be the nature of the charge, it is but reasonable and just that the same be publicly brought forward and publicly answered:

And, as the members of the committee have no reason to desire to disguise or conceal from public view all or any of its actings and doings in the exercise of the delicate and responsible commission imposed on them: to the intent, therefore, of having no misunderstanding on this subject,

Be it resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee that, though a select committee appointed by the house of representatives of the United States, it is not a secret committee; that, though invested with the power of inquiry as contained in the resolutions of the house, that power ought to be exercised in an open and public manner, and should be not only free from any direct charge of concealment, but from the remotest suspicion of it.

And be it further resolved, That all the proceedings of this committee shall be open and public, as being the mode, in the opinion of this committee, best calculated to attain the ends of justice, to satisfy the just expectations of the people, and to protect the rights and privileges of American citizens.

Which, after an amendment offered, were all finally laid on the table, to the astonishment and mortification of the undersigned, and, no doubt, to the surprise of the people of the United States.

Under these extraordinary circumstances, the proceedings of the committee being secret or public, according to the judgment, discretion, or caprice of witnesses or members of the committee, the investigation was carried on. Numerous witnesses were examined as to the extent of the defalcation.

The undersigned will not go into a detailed statement of the heads or items, such as forfeitures, penalties, bonds, &c., upon which Swartwout based his speculations, but refer the house to the journal of the committee. They will simply remark, that the bond item gave the facility and laid the foundation of the principal part of the defalcation. These speculations commenced at an early period of Swartwout's official life, and went on, increased and increasing, until its close. The artful management with which it was concealed will attract attention. One occurrence referred to in the testimony is not the least remarkable in this extraordinary affair. When Swartwout, in 1834, was renominated by the then president of the United States, the nomination was referred, as usual, by the senate to a committee, which committee was composed of a majority opposed to the then administration. In the investigation of Swartwout's accounts before that committee, suspicion arose that he was in default. Mr. Shultz, the then auditor of the custom-house, a witness examined by this committee, was called upon by the committee of the senate to aid them in the examination and to give them information in regard to Swartwout's accounts; and after, it is presumed, a thorough investigation, the committee reported favorably to the senate, and the appointment was confirmed by the then existing senate, composed of a majority of senators opposed to the administration; though there was at this time a defalcation to a considerable amount known to Mr. Shultz, but not communicated to the committee of the senate, as will be seen by reference to the following questions and answers:

Question 26. Did you know, when you were before the committee of the senate in 1834, that Mr. Swartwout had not paid over to the cashier the sum of more than $30,000 received by him for forfeitures?

Answer. I knew that Mr. Swartwout had at that time more than $30,000 for forfeitures which he had not paid over to the cashier.

Question 27. Did you inform the committee of the senate, or any officer of the treasury department, that Mr. Swartwout had not paid over the money received by him for forfeitures; and, if not, why?

Answer. I did not, because I did not think it my duty.

Question 33. Why did you not regard it as your duty to inform the secretary of the treasury, or the committee of the senate, that Mr. Swartwout had not paid over the money received from the marshal for forfeitures?

Answer. Because we clerks of the custom-house consider ourselves as in the service of the collector, and not in the service of the United States. The "collection law" does not seem to regard the clerks of the collector as in the service of the United States, as the markers and weighers, &c., who are appointed by the treasury department. We have always thought ourselves the private assistants of the collector. It was my duty to render the accounts truly, and credit the United States truly, as I did; but not to inquire into the private transactions of the collector.

These answers afford a valuable instance of custom-house morality and patriotism.

That the defalcations should have been so long concealed from the department and the public, though at first a matter of surprise, will create no great astonishment when Mr. Shultz's testimony is considered.

The manner of keeping the accounts in the custom-house was calculated to effect the object of concealment. The auditor of the custom-house and the naval officer, intended as checks upon the collector, were kept in total ignorance as to the true state of the accounts; and, as the treasury department depended on their statements, it was equally ignorant.

Two of the witnesses, Ogden and Phillips, cashier and assistant cashier of the custom-house, say, they frequently made no entry at all in the cash-book, of moneys abstracted by Swartwout for his private expenses. When bonds were paid, no credit was given for them. The cash-book being in the possession of these individuals, they furnished such statements to the auditor as suited their purposes, and concealed the accurate and true state of the account.

Some effort was made in the course of the investigation, to show that Swartwout always made to the department at Washington true and accurate statements of the aggregate amount of his accounts, and thereby drawing an inference, that if they had been carefully examined the defalcations could soon have been detected. The undersigned are of opinion such is not the fact, and that it was scarcely possible, under any circumstances, to make the detection in any other manner than by the personal inspection of the bonds and the books of the custom-house. On this branch of the subject we beg leave to refer to the testimony of Mr. Woodbury and the first auditor at Washington, as contained in the journal.

Mr. Fleming, the auditor at that time, and now auditor of the custom-house, (a very respectable and intelligent witness), testifies that he had suspicions in June, 1837, that there was a deficiency in the bond account; he communicated the suspicion to Mr. Phillips, the assistant cashier, who answered him in a very laconic manner, "that credit was given in the cash-book for all the bonds that were paid; the rest were in suspense." He also states, that though the accounts of Swartwout transmitted to the department at Washington contained a true and accurate statement of the aggregate amounts, there was a deficiency and concealment of the true cash balance, as was afterwards discovered by the examination of the cash-books of the custom-house, in a sum exceeding six hundred thousand dollars. In this manner the fraud was carried on and kept secret. Mr. Fleming also states, that but for the suspension of the payment of the bonds, and specie payments by the banks, the frauds could not have been carried on without exciting suspicion and leading to detection.

Great credit is undoubtedly due to the present collector and auditor of the custom-house for making the discovery as early as it was made. The urgency of the former to have his accounts settled, and prepared for transmission to Washington, in a great degree produced and hastened the development. But for this circumstance, the combination and conspiracy existing in the custom-house to defraud the government, would have had the effect to conceal it a much longer time.

It may be confidently asserted, that under the existing laws, and, indeed, under any safeguards that may be established to protect the public purse, without honor and integrity in the public officer it may and will be plundered, and the fact concealed for a considerable time without the possibility of discovery.

The business of the custom-house at New York is so various and complicated, that, under the provision of the act of Congress, the collector is allowed three months after the expiration of each quarter to make his returns; frequently, from necessity, this time has been extended to four months; two or three months are consumed in the auditor and comptroller's offices at Washington in auditing and settling these accounts. Until this is done, the defalcations cannot be certainly known; so that they may be concealed from five to seven months, and that under the operation of the law.

By reference to the journal, it will be seen that there is some discrepancy in the testimony on the subject of the extent of the loss. Most of the witnesses agree that the amount of defalcation corresponds with the statements heretofore made by the officers of the government who were sent to New York, at or immediately after the same was made known, and whose reports have been submitted to the house.

The witness (Mr. Shultz) before alluded to, former auditor of the custom-house, and who for a long period of time filled that station, reduces by his testimony the amount in a considerable degree. The house has before seen what reliance should be placed on the evidence of Mr. Shultz. As additional evidence of the confidence to be given him, the journal is referred to, where Mr. Shultz states that the weekly returns made to the secretary of the treasury under the regulation of the department included the items forfeitures and penalties, and which, in his opinion, would have enabled the secretary in fifteen minutes to have detected the defalcations, so far as those items are concerned, though testified to with great confidence, and with an apparent knowledge of the fact, is totally disproved by the chief clerk of the treasury department, and the documentary evidence derived from that department, to wit, the weekly returns themselves. Mr. Schultz is also a very aged man, infirm in body and mind, and, like most old persons, better able to give a clear and distinct account of transactions of long standing than recent occurrences. But, whatever may be the accurate amount, the ostensible sum total, established by unquestionable testimony, is very large. The actual or real amount, however, lost to the government, concerning which no information can be obtained, it is impossible to say, and can be only a subject of conjecture.

One fact brought forth by the investigation is of a remarkable character and deserves notice. Mr. Thompson, the cashier of the bank of America, (then one of the deposit banks), states that checks of different amounts, some for very large sums, were indiscriminately drawn by Swartwout or his deputies, and paid by the bank. This practice, dangerous at all times to the government and the collector, was peculiarly hazardous under the administration of the late collector, whose business habits did not qualify him for a strict scrutiny into the fiscal affairs of his office. By it, an opportunity was afforded and temptation given to speculation in the custom-house.

The causes which combined to produce the defalcation are various:

The first was the unfortunate appointment by the president and confirmation by the senate, for two successive terms, of a man like Swartwout, who, from habits and pursuits, was totally disqualified to discharge the duties of collector at New York; a port the most important in the Union, and where one-half if not two-thirds of the revenue of the government is collected.

The second was the disposition of Swartwout to engage in large and hazardous speculations—a passion the most lasting in its excitement, and most disposed to increase by the food it feeds on; and in an officer of the government intrusted with large sums of money, the most dangerous in its operation upon him as an individual, as well as the government.

There is much testimony on this head. Some of the witnesses best qualified to judge—the brokers of New York—state, in technical language, he was a great operator in stocks in Wall street; like all business of this description, it was liable to great fluctuations, Swartwout sometimes winning, at others losing large sums of money. The evidence as to actual loss or gain is by no means satisfactory.

The third cause which contributed, in some degree, was the want of a regular and periodical examination of the bond account in the auditor's office in Washington. One of the witnesses, and a clerk in that bureau, says the bond account, prior to the defalcation, had not been examined since 1832. Before that time it had been the practice in the office. Why it was abandoned he knew not, unless from an opinion it was not necessary, or that there was not a sufficient number of clerks in the office to discharge the duties, at all times very onerous; there being, at a moderate calculation, not less than 30,000 bonds taken in a year in New York alone. But whatever may have produced the abandonment of the practice, it was calculated to lead his successor in office into error; that successor would naturally follow the practice existing at the time in his bureau, as the one adopted from experience, and found to answer the public exigencies. No blame can, therefore, be attributed to the present first auditor, he having been, previous to these occurrences, but a short time in office, and, of course, not well qualified to judge of the practical utility in this particular branch of his duty. On this subject we beg leave to refer to his testimony as contained in the journal.

The fourth cause was the non-execution of Swartwout's official bond for a great length of time after his last appointment in 1834. The bond bears date in 1834, but remained in the custom-house unexecuted until 1837, when it was certified by the district attorney of New York, Mr. Price, and the comptroller at Washington. For nearly three years no bond of the collector of New York, the principal port in the Union, was in the comptroller's office; and the collector was left to carry on the great fiscal operations of the custom-house without any security, except that based upon his own responsibility. As to the sufficiency of the security afforded the government by the bond when executed, that is a subject not susceptible of positive proof, until tested by legal decision, and must remain a matter of speculation and opinion.

Should the security in the bond be hereafter found insufficient, it will be attributable to Price, the district attorney of the city of New York, where the sureties resided, and who, before he certified the bond, did make, or ought to have made, the necessary inquiries as to their pecuniary responsibility.

The bond, though executed at so late a period, will protect the government as far as the amount extends; a large part of the defalcation having taken place after its execution, and therefore embraced by it.

It is true, little security will be afforded by it to the government, when the penal sum contained in the bond is compared with the large amount of the defalcation; and had a regular account of the bonds been kept in the auditor's office, there is very strong and conclusive testimony to show it would have neither prevented nor detected the defalcation.

The bond of Swartwout not being executed and deposited in the office, nor any entry of his appointment as collector made by the comptroller of 1834, was such a want of official diligence as no one could have supposed or anticipated, and could not have excited any suspicion in the mind of his immediate successor (not the present acting comptroller, who came into office after the discovery of these defalcations), so as to induce him to order an examination; he took it for granted the usual course had been pursued in relation to Swartwout's appointment and bond. The neglect, therefore, of the former auditor and comptroller, in these particulars, is strange and unaccountable.

The only excuse for it is to be found in the fact, that, a short time anterior to these occurrences, and long before, the heads of these bureaus were two aged men, incapable, from physical and mental infirmities, to discharge the duties imposed on them with the diligence and strict supervising attention that these important offices demanded.

The evidence on the journal on this subject is very strong. The retention of aged persons in office who have grown old in the service of the state, is an evil incident to all governments, and more particularly to our democratic one. To dismiss an officer under such circumstances, is a harsh measure, and well calculated to shock the feelings and enlist the sympathies of the people; to retain him when incapable of performing his functions, is dangerous to the security of the public treasure, and injurious to the best interests of the people. Better would it be to let the civil officers of government, who have faithfully discharged their duty for many years, retire at a certain designated period of life upon a pension, than to have them remain in office but the shadows of themselves. Upon the principle of economy alone, so dear to the American people, the course suggested would be highly advantageous to the country.

The fifth cause was the irregular and loose manner in which the whole business of the custom house was conducted, (and which has been adverted to before in this report); and from the fact that the naval officer who, under the laws, was intended as a check upon the collector, has not, in the execution of his functions, supervised the accounts with that care and diligence the importance of the subject demanded.

The sixth cause is to be found in a practice grown up of late years—the keeping by the collector what is termed a "suspense account," under which head he retains large sums of money to meet protests and suits upon duties overpaid, &c., and which, for his own security, he is in a great measure compelled to retain; the courts of justice having determined in such cases that he is personally liable. Whether these decisions are founded on true and just principles of national policy, the undersigned will not undertake to decide; but they may be permitted to remark, the sooner there is some legislative action on this subject, the better for the country and the collectors.

The seventh cause was the convulsion and total derangement produced in the business of the custom house by the suspension of the payment of bonds by the government, and the suspension of specie payments by the banks. The amount of bonds operated upon by these causes are contained in the answers of Mr. Woodbury, in these words:

Question 37. What amount of bonds were due, or running to maturity, a short time before, at the time, and during the time, of the convulsion produced by the suspension of specie payments by the banks, and coming under the instructions of the solicitor of the treasury, in May, 1837?

Answer. In reply, I would state, that the amount of bonds falling due between the 1st of May and the 1st of October, 1837, in the United States, was, probably from five to six millions. I have not examined to see the exact amount; but of those, some were put in suit, and neither paid nor postponed under the instructions of the solicitor, in May, 1837, and others were paid without suit or postponement: so that the amount postponed under these instructions was estimated to be not far from four millions of dollars.

Question —. What amount of bonds came under the provisions of the acts of congress of 1837: the one produced by the fire in New York, and the other produced by the suspension of specie payments by the banks?

Answer. In reply, I state, that the postponements actually made under the two acts in October, as to former bonds and merchandise on which cash duties had accrued, are estimated to have been from four to four and a half millions. The amount coming within the operation of relief asked and granted on account of the fire, is supposed to have been about $1,063,000.

As also to the following question:

Question 1. Please state, should a combination exist between the district attorney and the collector to defraud the government, by placing bonds which have actually been paid in his weekly account, transmitted to your department, under the head of bonds suspended, or bonds in suit, if there are any means in your power, as secretary of the treasury, to make the detection, except by personal inspection and examination of the bonds at New York?

Mr. Woodbury answers in the negative, and gives his reasons in extenso, as will be seen by reference to the journal.

The suspension of specie payments by the banks, so sudden and unexpected, at a period of profound peace, and under the appearance of great national prosperity, was well calculated not only to derange the business of the custom-house of New York, but did convulse the whole trade of this country, and, in its consequences, affected that of those states or kingdoms with whom we had commercial relations. A contingency so extraordinary could not have been anticipated; and, consequently, there were no existing laws to protect the government from its beneficial effects.

By rendering the acts of congress in relation to the safe-keeping of the public money a dead letter, it made the banks cease to be depositories of the public money; took away the authority of the department to receive their paper in payment of public dues; and, from necessity, threw the payment of the bonds into the custom-house, and into the hands of Swartwout and his agents, uncontrolled by any legislative provision, or any other safeguards that otherwise would have been provided to protect the public purse.

It may be, and no doubt will be, said, that notwithstanding this act of the banks, if their paper had been received by the government, and the bonds still paid in the banks, the loss, or a greater part of it, would not have been sustained. The undersigned will not undertake to decide what would have been its ultimate effect.

The legality and propriety of such a measure, as an act of the government, is submitted to the good sense and intelligence of the American people; the reason for the secretary of the treasury not adopting it, is to be found in the acts of congress, and the practice of the government founded thereon, which prohibit the officers of the revenue receiving in payment any thing but gold or silver, or its equivalent. The secretary of the treasury was not warranted by law to receive the paper of these banks; if he had done so, he would have been liable to impeachment; and, from the known temper of the times, would, in all probability, have been impeached. If authority to receive such paper had been given, it would have been not only a violation of the laws of the land, but disreputable to the office and degrading to the country; it would have had a tendency to give official countenance to this act of the banks, so unjust and highly injurious to the interests of the people, and calculated to fix a stain on the national character. If an option had been left him, he could not, as a public officer, and a patriotic man, have hesitated in looking to, and holding on in this great emergency, to the individual responsibility of the bondsman, rather than receive the paper of banks which had taken the law into their own hands; had legislated for themselves, and themselves alone; and had violated the obligations of their charters and the faith pledged to the public. This cause, therefore, opened a field for those engaged in the frauds and peculations, by placing the money of the people in the hands of Swartwout and his subordinates, uncontrolled by law, and was seized upon to carry on a most daring system of robbery and plunder.

By reference to the testimony, it will be seen the large defalcation occurred on the bond account, and in the first and second quarters of 1837, a short time prior to and subsequent to the suspension of specie payments by the banks. The bond account, however, had been deranged, no doubt, in a very considerable degree, before 1837, by the renewal of bonds under the acts of congress, occasioned by the fire in New York, and advantage taken of it.

The eightth cause, and one of the principal, was a combination of unprincipled men, officers in the custom-house, to defraud the government and plunder the people. Without this combination Swartwout could not have concealed his frauds a day, certainly not a week. That men of former good character and standing in society should have entered into the conspiracy, aiding and abetting Swartwout in his peculations of the public purse, is a subject not only of deep mortification, but a national disgrace.

It is a deplorable and remarkable instance of the corruption of the times in which we live. It becomes still more remarkable from the fact, that one of the men (Phillips, the assistant cashier of the custom-house) so aiding Swartwout in his peculations, when examined as a witness, and the question was propounded to him by a member of the committee, "Why, knowing as he did that Swartwout was defrauding the government, he did not give information to the treasury department?" answered, with great coolness and composure, in conformity with the custom-house practice and the reason given for it by Mr. Shultz, "that he was the clerk of Mr. Swartwout, and did not like to disclose the secrets of his employer;" apparently considering as a virtue his fidelity to a public officer, who, with the witness's co-operation and active agency, was defrauding the people. These developments, and the inferences naturally drawn from them, must irresistibly lead the house to the conclusion that the safety of the public money imperiously demands that no officer of the custom-house connected with its fiscal concerns should be appointed by the collector himself, but should receive the appointment from the government, and give his sole allegiance to the country.

Other causes not known may, and no doubt did, contribute to produce the defalcations. The subject-matter, however, both in relation to the extent and the causes of the defalcation, is still involved in some uncertainty. The character of the testimony is more than doubtful. Some of the witnesses, and those best acquainted with the facts, were active agents, if not participators, in the frauds; the fountain, therefore, from which we derive our information, or the greater portion of it, is impure and defiled. No reflecting man, acquainted with the operations of the human heart and the springs of human action, will or can place much reliance in testimony thus characterized and stamped with the impress of fraud and profligacy. Each man, and the house collectively, will give credence to it according to the degree of credulity he or they may possess; and, at last, a great deal must depend, like the mysteries of our holy religion, upon the faith of the individual searching for truth.

The disposition Swartwout made of these enormous sums abstracted from the public coffers is an enigma not easily solved. The evidence furnishes no clue to it. The inconsiderable sum left in the hands of Ogden, and the value of the real estate in different parts of the union, form but a very inconsiderable item on the credit side of the account; and some of the witnesses say Swartwout is now a needy man. That he should have been possessed of so little property, can only be accounted for on philosophical principles and the natural operation of the human mind. Money thus acquired is not long retained; it is soon dissipated in extravagancies that leave no trace behind them. Much credit is due to Mr. Hoyt, the present collector of New York, and the solicitor of the treasury, through whose instrumentality the money in Ogden's hands, and the security afforded by the real estate, were obtained. The money, as Ogden testifies, was intended by Swartwout for other purposes, and would have been so applied, but for the sudden arrival and unexpected and vigorous application of the solicitor of the treasury to him, as agent of Swartwout, to pay the same to the United States.

During the progress of the investigation, and before it had closed, in relation to Swartwout, a member of the committee submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That Mr. Hoyt, the collector, be required to furnish this committee with all letters to and from the treasury department and the collector of the customs at New York; and, also, all orders and instructions from the treasury department to said collector since the 1st day of January, 1837, up to the present day, and the answers of said collector, if any, to said orders and instructions, not already furnished to this committee.

This resolution afforded another instance of the construction given by the majority of the committee to the authority contained in the resolution of the house, and opened a wide field of inquiry, never anticipated by the house or the country. One of the undersigned, therefore, moved the following amendment:

"Provided, The said letters, orders, and instructions have reference to the late defalcations embraced in the inquiry of this committee."

The amendment was rejected, and the resolution adopted. Satisfied it never was the intention of the house by its resolution to authorise the committee to go into the investigation of the actings and doings of all and every collector and disburser of the public money, charged or not charged with defalcations; and believing that, if such was the intention of the house, it had no constitutional power to invest the committee with such authority, for, though the house, in the exercise of its high parliamentary power, has frequently raised committees to examine into alleged frauds, it has never undertaken, by its sole authority, to appoint a committee as a fishing committee to travel through the country and collect materials for the accusation of the officers of the government. So far from this, the undersigned have always believed, in this free country, regulated by law, the acceptance of an office by an individual does not deprive him of the rights of a citizen; and before he can be called upon by the action of the house of representatives alone to defend himself, he must be charged with some offence—that, however expedient and proper it may be to supervise the conduct of public officers, charged or not charged with official misconduct, so far as the latter are concerned, it cannot be done but by a legislative act, passed in the forms provided by the constitution.

Freedom consists in being governed by known laws, and not by the discretion or caprice of either branch of congress. The officer of the government, against whom no charge is made, however innocent, must be blind indeed if he does not see, his sensibility must be blunted if he does not feel, that the inquiry alone casts a shade of suspicion on his character; that, in public opinion, he is more than half condemned by the act of the house. Such proceedings, if tolerated, are calculated to degrade the officer in his own esteem, and in that of the public; and the inevitable consequence is to drive from the service of the state every honorable man.

To allow either house of congress, by its action alone, to direct its scrutiny into the conduct of this or that particular officer, without charge, allegation, or suggestion of misconduct, would be to usurp an authority not recognised by the constitution, and liable, in high party times, to great abuse. It would be an arbitrary exercise of power of no ordinary character—similar to the sic volo of the Roman lady. It would be the concentrated essence of despotism.

For the purpose of testing this great principle, and ascertaining the sense of the committee on it, one of the undersigned submitted the following resolution:

Whereas doubts appear to exist as to the power conferred on this committee by the resolution of the house of representatives; and, as it is important that a distinct expression of opinion should be given on the subject, for the information of the house under whose authority we act, and the people of the United States:

Be it resolved, That it is the deliberate opinion of this committee, that the authority conferred on them by the resolution aforesaid, is limited in its character; that it is confined to the investigation of the late defalcations, and to the actings and doings of the officers of the government therein contained, against whom any charge is made, or suspicion of misconduct rests; but, that they are not authorised, by virtue of the said resolution, to call upon all or any of the officers aforesaid, to exhibit their books, papers, accounts, and correspondence, unless some foundation is laid for the inquiry by a distinct charge, general rumor, or the suggestion of some member of the committee, upon his responsibility, that there is cause to believe there is misconduct in the management of the office; that any other practice would be dangerous to the rights of individuals, arbitrary in its character, and in direct conflict with the genius and principles of our republican government. The committee, so far from considering such a power was ever intended to be conferred on them, are of opinion that the exercise of such an unlimited authority by the house of representatives alone would be a violation of the constitution, and the common principles of justice.

Which was rejected.

At a subsequent meeting of the committee, when the reading of the journal was in progress, the mover of the resolution proposed to amend it, by striking out the last sentence and substituting the following:

"The committee, so far from considering any other power was intended to be conferred, are of opinion that the delegation, by the house of representatives alone, of an unlimited authority to call on all officers, without restriction, would be a violation of the spirit of the constitution and the principles of common justice."

It is evident the object of the mover was not to change the nature of the proposition, but to express in more distinct language the idea intended to be conveyed. This reasonable request was inexorably refused, and the proposition itself not allowed to be inserted on the journal. It is submitted without further commentary, to the calm judgment of the house, and to the intelligence of the people—the latter "being seldom wrong in their opinions, in their sentiments never."

By the rejection of that resolution, and the course pursued by the majority of the committee, it was manifest, to a common observer, the case of Swartwout and Price was to be partially, at least, abandoned, and a new field of discovery opened and entered upon. The undersigned, fully impressed with this idea, deemed it a duty they owed to the house and the country to have a distinct expression of opinion by the committee on the subject of the defalcations of Swartwout and Price, constituting, as the undersigned supposed, the principal object of the house in raising the committee.

For this purpose one of the undersigned submitted the following resolution:

Whereas, under the resolutions of the house of representatives, one of the great objects was the investigation into the causes of the defalcations of Swartwout and Price; and as the visit of the committee to New York was to attain that object, (the persons and papers being there to enable them to make the necessary examination into the said causes); and as the public mind has been greatly excited on the subject, and looks to this committee for a thorough investigation into the actings and doings of the persons above mentioned:

Be it resolved, That this committee will proceed, with all despatch, to investigate the case of Swartwout, in which they have made considerable progress; and, when that is complete and ended, they will take up the case of Price and give that a thorough investigation.

Which resolution was laid on the table.

The call, under the resolution before alluded to, was made on Mr. Hoyt, the present collector, for papers and documents in relation to his official conduct. He responded in a written communication, and, among other matters, asked if the committee considered him as a defaulter, and embraced in the resolution of the house of representatives. The replication was by a resolution in the following words:

R-solved, That, in response to the letter of Mr. Hoyt, of the 25th instant, the chairman be instructed to call upon him again to furnish this committee with all letters not heretofore furnished from the several officers of the treasury department to the late and present collector at New York, and from said collectors to said officers of the treasury department, since the 1st day of January, 1837, up to the 17th day of January, 1839; and also with all orders and instructions from said officers to said collectors, and the answers of said collectors thereto, if any, not heretofore furnished, since the 1st day of January, 1837, up to the 17th day of January, 1839.

And be it further resolved, That this committee cannot recognise any authority or right whatever in any collector, receiver, or disburser of the public money, to call upon "the committee," or "any of its members," to prefer or to disavow a charge of his "being a defaulter," before such officer sends "the correspondence" of "his office," when required, under the authority of the house of representatives, "to send for persons and papers," to enable its committee "to inquire into, and make report of, any defalcations among collectors, receivers, and disbursers of the public money, which may now exist." Nor can this committee, or "any of its members," report whether Mr. Hoyt is or is not now a defaulter, until, by examination of the "persons and papers" for which it has sent and will send, it shall discover "who are the defaulters; the amount of defalcations; the length of time they have existed; and the causes which led to them." And when the committee shall have found the facts embraced by these inquiries, closed its investigation; it will make report thereon to the house of representatives.

By this resolution, the house will perceive the opinion entertained by the majority of the committee as to the extent of their power, and the mode and manner of carrying it into execution.

The doctrine here avowed is, that an officer of government, against whom no charge is made of defalcation, and no suspicion expressed, is called upon to exhibit the papers of his office, not in compliance with the requisition of existing laws, but ipse dixit of a committee, professing to act under the order of the house of representatives alone, and who say to him "they cannot report whether he is or is not now a defaulter, until, by examination of the 'persons and papers' for which it has sent, and will send, it shall discover who are the defaulters."

If the political doctrine contained in the resolution is the doctrine of the house of representatives, it is important it should be known to the people. If it be wrong, they will put their mark of disapprobation on it, if it be right, they will give it the sanction of their opinion. But, until they do give it that sanction, the undersigned will consider the doctrine at variance with every principle of liberty and individual right.

Mr. Hoyt complied with the resolution, and furnished the papers; but demanded of the committee, as an act of justice and matter of right, that they would go into a thorough investigation of his official conduct, prior to their departure from New York. The house will see hereafter what attention was paid to this reasonable request. During the investigation, a practice was pursued in the examination of two, and sometimes a greater number of witnesses, at one and the same time, embarrassing to the committee, and calculated to produce great confusion; also, a practice of allowing interrogatories to be given to witnesses, with the privilege of answering them at their leisure, and out of the committee room. The injurious effect of the latter practice was strongly exemplified by permission given, under resolution, to David S. Lyon, (who was afterwards proved to be a dismissed officer of the customs, and stood in relation of a public prosecutor of Jesse Hoyt, the collector), to take the question or questions home with him, to be answered next morning.

The resolution is in these words:

Moved that David S. Lyon, a witness duly sworn, and now in attendance, and who states that he is in ill health, and unable longer to attend the committee this evening, be permitted to take away with him the first interrogatory propounded by Mr. Wise; and that he be allowed to draw up his answer thereto in writing, and bring the same to the committee, for their consideration, at the meeting to-morrow morning.

These practices, so novel and unprecedented, in the opinion of the undersigned, and so likely injuriously to affect the rights of all persons implicated in the investigation, it was deemed necessary to check, if possible, by a direct vote of the committee. One of the undersigned moved the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the practice adopted by the committee, of examining two witnesses at the same time, is calculated to defeat the object of this investigation and just expectations of the country, as well as to produce great embarrassment and inconvenience to the members, and particularly when, under the rule of examination, one member is compelled to examine two witnesses at the same time; and whereas the injurious effect of this practice is strongly exemplified by the examination at the same time, and in the presence of each other, of two witnesses, to wit, Henry Ogden and Joshua Phillips, cashier and assistant cashier, attached to the custom house, and called upon to testify to the actings and doings of the cashier department: be it, therefore,

Resolved, That, hereafter, one witness alone shall be admitted into the committee room, whose examination shall be complete and ended before the introduction of another.

The other resolution was in the words following:

Whereas the practice of permitting witnesses to prepare their answers to interrogatories out of the committee room, and not in the presence of the committee, upon their suggestion of ill health, real or affected, is dangerous in its character, and injurious to the rights of those implicated, as the conduct and manner of witnesses in giving their testimony are almost as important as the matter; and as the intention of the house of representatives, from whom we derive our power, was to have a fair, honest, and impartial investigation:

Be it resolved, That all and every witness, in the course of this investigation, shall be sworn and examined in the committee room, and in the presence of the committee.

The first was rejected, a substitute being offered and adopted, as will be seen by reference to the journal—the latter laid upon the table. These acts need no further observation. We give the text; the commentary can be applied by others.

While on this branch of the subject, there was another practice adopted by the committee, which, in the opinion of the undersigned, affected the private rights of individuals; inquiries, not as to defalcations, but the disposition by officers of the government of their own money for party or political purposes; as will be seen by a question to, and answer of, De Peyster, also a dismissed officer of the customs.

Question 3. While you were connected with the custom house, do you know whether or not the officers of the customs were called upon to pay any part of their salaries, or any assessment or tax thereon, for party or political purposes? If yes, state whether you have ever, and when you have made any such payment; and state the motive upon which such payments were made.

Answer. The weighers were called on to pay fifteen dollars each for the support of the election; and when I declined, Mr. Vanderpoel, the deputy surveyor, observed, that I ought to consider whether my $1,500 per annum was not worth paying fifteen dollars for. Under the impression that it was the price for my attention, I paid it. The above occurred during the last year's election for charter officers. During my holding office, for about five years, I was occasionally called on, but always declined until within the last two years.

In the pursuit of this object, an occurrence took place in the committee room, which was deemed of sufficient importance to be spread upon the journal. The statement is in these words:

Resolved, That the following facts be entered on the journal:

Mr. Wise propounded to the witness, Abraham B. Vanderpoel, the following question, to wit:

Question 2. Do you know whether the officers of the custom house have ever been called on to contribute sums of money to party and political objects; what officers have been so called on; by whom; for what amount, with or without regard to their salaries of office; when did they contribute; if they refused, was any intimation given that their refusal might occasion their removal, and what amount has been so contributed or collected, and for the support of what party, at any one election?

The witness took the interrogatory, without objection to propounding the same, and proceeded to write his answer thereon on the paper attached to the question; and had written the following, to wit:

"I have known officers attached to the custom-house to have been called on for"—when Mr. Owens, member of the committee, interposed, and informed the witness that he was not bound to answer any interrogatory relating to his private affairs; and, thereupon, Mr. Foster, another member of the committee, objected to propounding the interrogatory. The witness here commenced to tear off what he had written before objection was made to the interrogatory. Mr. Wise prevented him from doing so, by forbidding the act. Mr. Foster insisted that the witness had the right to tear off what he had written, and that it was not his answer until it was complete and handed in; and he asked the witness whether it was his answer, and he replied "it was not;" and the committee having decided that the interrogatory should be propounded, the said question by Mr. Wise was again handed to the witness, and he returned the following: "I decline to answer the 2d question." The witness was then permitted to retire.

If the information given to the witness of his rights stood in need of justification or precedent, it is contained in the following statement of facts which had previously occurred in the committee room:

Mr. Owens propounded to Mr. Joseph the fifth question.

The witness wrote his answer in the following words, to wit:

"He owed us a very large sum of money on account of these stock operations, as the revulsion of 1837 had occasioned a very great loss on the stocks we had, and which were sold after our failure by the parties who had them under hypothecation;" and handed the foregoing answer to Mr. Owens, who, after reading it, told the witness he had not answered the question fully, not having stated the amount of Swartwout's indebtedness. Whereupon, the witness replied, "that he would not wish to state that, as he had not his counsel here, and the amount was yet to be settled between him and Mr. Swartwout."

Mr. Wise then observed, in the hearing of the witness, that, as a judge in this case, he felt it to be his duty to say to the witness that he had a right to decline answering a question relating to his private affairs. The witness, after some conversation between Mr. Owens, Mr. Foster and Mr. Wise, took back his answer, and added the following words:

"As to the amount, I do not think it necessary to state it, as it is a matter of account between Mr. Swartwout and ourselves, and has to be adjusted when we come to a settlement with him."

The subject is calculated to attract the public eye, and produce reflection. It affords a remarkable instance of the course pursued by the majority of the committee; the respect observed to the rights and privileges of witnesses under examination before a committee regulated by no known laws, but governed by the dictates of an arbitrary discretion.

In the opinion of the undersigned, the question propounded the witness had relation to his private affairs. The witness, Vanderpoel, answered it in part, but as soon as he was informed of his rights and obligations as a witness, he refused to complete it, and said it was not his answer, and wished to destroy it; it was, nevertheless, retained, as appears by the statements above referred to. The whole proceeding carries along with it, its own commentary, and, without further observation, it is submitted to the house and the country.

Whether a committee of this house, appointed under its extraordinary and discretionary parliamentary power, undefined and undefinable, is authorized to go into the investigation of the private affairs of officers of the general government in relation to their actings and doings as citizens of the state in which they reside, and having reference to their domestic elections, (the question is general, and De Peyster refers to the charter elections), is a subject of grave consideration. It assumes an attitude that places it beyond the reach of mere party movements. It strikes at cardinal principles dear to the American people. It is the assumption of a power not warranted by the limited constitution under which the general government lives, breathes and has its being. The doctrine of state rights is a mere mockery to the understanding if this principle is warranted and acted upon. Admit it, and the acceptance of office under the general government ipso facto denationalizes the individual as a citizen of New York. The right of inquiry involves the right to pass laws. If congress can say the officer shall not have the right to use his money for one purpose, they may say he shall not use it for another. They may say he shall not attend the polls; and, putting the cap-stone to this political pillar, they may say he shall not vote at any election. Sanction this principle, and you have a consolidated government in all its forms.

This doctrine, like others akin to it, may be maintained by specious argument and ingenuity; but the people of this country, as they have heretofore done in all proceedings affecting their lives, their property, or political rights, will not be guided by the refinements of learning, but consult their understanding, and be governed by the plain dictates of common sense. The evidence on the subject of money spent for party purposes, has reference to the time of Swartwout as collector. The general conclusion derived from it, that the practice is not confined to one party, but pervades all parties in New York. That it is the general, if not universal practice, the best evidence is afforded by the witness David S. Lyon, who, according to his own admission, belonged to both parties, and is well qualified to testify to the fact.

That the payment was not compulsory, but voluntary, is evident from the answer of De Peyster, who says, for three years out of five he contributed nothing. And there is no evidence he was prosecuted by Swartwout.

With a view of putting a stop to such inquiries, and to enable witnesses, particularly ignorant men, to know their rights and obligations, one of the undersigned offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That every witness, upon being called to testify, shall be informed by the chairman that he is not obliged to answer any question upon his private affairs, or the private affairs of others.

Which was rejected.

The examination of this witness, David S. Lyon, an officer who had been discharged by Mr. Hoyt from the custom house, had not progressed far before it was evident his intention was to criminate the collector. The undersigned considering the plainest principles of justice were violated by allowing the character and reputation of an important officer of the government to be attacked, as it were, in the dark, without his knowledge, and without the means of ascertaining the charges made against him, one of them moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That Mr. Hoyt, the collector, be furnished by the clerk with copies of all the interrogatories and answers of David S. Lyon, a witness examined in this investigation, as far as he has made answer to them, and having relation to the conduct of said Jesse Hoyt.

Which was adopted.

But this being considered too great an indulgence, a reconsideration was moved and carried, and an amendment offered, as follows:

Resolved, That Jesse Hoyt, the collector of New York, be forthwith summoned as a witness; and that, before he is examined, the interrogatories submitted to David S. Lyon, a witness examined this morning, and his answers thereto, be read to him, if desired, he be allowed to read the same, and that he have liberty to attend the committee during the examination of any witness who may be called upon to testify concerning his official conduct.

The amendment was adopted; and the resolution, as amended, was voted for by the undersigned as a dernier resort, or the same would have been lost.— They beg leave to call the attention of the house and the country to this amendment—to this boon given to Mr. Hoyt in his position of collector, surrounded as he was by open and secret enemies in the shape of officers discharged by him, under an imperious sense of duty to the public and himself, from their places in the custom house, and foreign importing merchants, who fancied they had been injured by him in the discharge of his duty as collector. They beg the house and the country to look at it in its two-fold aspect—as a subterfuge, and as an indulgence given to an American citizen who had his reputation, dearer to him than his life, and his liberty at stake, and say "if these things can pass us like summer clouds and not attract our special wonder."

Mr. Hoyt was summoned to appear for himself, not as an ordinary witness, but in the double character of a witness and party accused. For rapidity of movement and quickness of execution, it was more like a warrant than a subpoena. It was no sooner served than Mr. Hoyt was in the committee-room. Lyon's testimony, as far as it had gone, was read to him; and he was instantly placed in the crucible of one of the members of the committee, who examined him for many consecutive hours.

We know not how others felt at the scene passing around them; but for ourselves, it was a subject of deep humiliation, and has left an impression on the memory not easily erased. In the progress of the investigation into the official conduct of Mr. Hoyt, intimations were thrown out occasionally, in the committee room, that the time had nearly arrived for the departure of the committee from New York. Those intimations were warnings not to be neglected. The evidence against Mr. Hoyt was in manuscript; though not printed; it would, as a matter of course, appear on the journal. All that he had to oppose to it was his own testimony, and that of one or two other witnesses. Justice demanded that he should have a full and fair opportunity to introduce rebutting evidence; propriety, and the peculiarity of his position, required this opportunity should be afforded him in the city of New York. One of the undersigned, therefore moved the following resolution:

By reference to the testimony of David S. Lyon, a witness examined in the course of this investigation, it appears charges of a serious character are brought against the present collector of New York, Jesse Hoyt, and intending to implicate Benjamin F. Butler, the district attorney of New York; and as justice requires the said Jesse Hoyt and Benjamin F. Butler, should be heard fully in relation to the said charges, to enable them to spread upon the journal of this committee the evidence upon which their defence may be founded, so that as the journal contains the position, the article, (if the testimony furnishes it) also should appear for the instruction of the house and the information of the people of America.

Be it resolved, That this committee will not adjourn its sitting in the city of New York, where the parties reside, and the evidence most likely to be found, until the said Jesse Hoyt and Benjamin F. Butler have full and ample time to prepare their defence (if any they have) to the charges against them as officers of the government of the United States.

It was moved to lay the resolution on the table until the examination of witnesses was completed; and it was so laid on the table.

Mr. Hoyt himself, under circumstances more particularly developed in the journal, sent a written communication making the same demand. It was neither read nor received. The ground upon which the rejection of this application was based, was the refusal of Mr. Hoyt to respond to a question propounded to him until his communication was acted on. On the same day, at half past four o'clock, P. M. the following resolution was proposed:

Resolved, That this committee having accomplished its principal object, to inspect the books and papers in the custom house, coming to the city of New York, and desiring to inspect the books and papers in the treasury department at the city of Washington, during the short period of time now left to the further prosecution of its inquiries, will adjourn this day at 10 o'clock, P. M. to meet at 12 M. on Tuesday the 12th instant, at the room of the committee on commerce, in the capitol; and that the witnesses heretofore be summoned to appear at that place till further ordered.

It was moved by one of the undersigned to amend the resolution as follows:

Whereas, in the course of the investigations of this committee, witnesses have been introduced and sworn whose testimony has tended to charge the present collector of the port of New York with official misconduct; and whereas the said collector has applied to this committee for permission to be heard in relation thereto, and to go into a full investigation thereof, by witnesses to be produced by him, and requesting that such full investigation may be had here, (in the city of New York), where he alleges that the witnesses whom he wishes to introduce reside; and whereas it is due to the fair and full administration of justice that the said collector should have a full opportunity to rebut the charges thus made against him; and whereas several witnesses are now under examination before this committee, the testimony of whom is not yet closed; and whereas, from the fact that several witnesses have been under examination at the same time the testimony of several of whom is not now before the committee, either in manuscript or in print, (a portion of the manuscript being in the hands of the printer), the committee have not at this time the means of ascertaining the effect to be given to that testimony, or the nature thereof; and individual members of the committee are consequently unable (until a better opportunity shall be afforded to examine said testimony) to determine how much farther the examination of those witnesses should proceed, or what other witnesses ought to be examined in this case, in order to a full understanding thereof; and whereas we are satisfied that a full investigation of the facts connected with the defalcations charged upon him, be better examined into here than elsewhere; therefore

Resolved, That this committee will not fix upon a time for closing the testimony in New York until the testimony is at an end; and that the fixing the time for adjourning to Washington, by a resolution passed before the testimony is ended, will be calculated to deprive the said collector of the right (which every man when charged has) of showing that those charges are unfounded, and of protecting his character from aspersion; will prevent the individuals of the committee from examining and cross-examining such witnesses as they may believe ought to be examined; will set a precedent entirely new and arbitrary in the administration of justice, dangerous to the rights and privileges of persons who may be charged with misconduct; will be deciding a question, the propriety of which the committee cannot possibly know; and will be well calculated to destroy in the public mind all con-vidence in the results to which this committee may arrive.

Resolved, That hereafter the time which the committee will be in session, shall be from ten o'clock A. M. till half past four o'clock P. M. and from seven o'clock P. M. till half past ten P. M.

The amendment was rejected, and the resolution adopted.

The determination therein expressed was carried into effect; and the committee was adjourned at ten o'clock at night, while one of the undersigned was in the act of examining the witness, David S. Lyon, and another in the act of submitting a proposition for subpoenas for Hey's witnesses.

In consequence of these proceedings against Mr. Hoyt, the collector, but a very limited examination was made into the defalcations of Price, the district attorney; few witnesses were examined, and few facts of any importance were elicited not already known. The undersigned, however, regret a more thorough investigation was not made; they are under the conviction, from the general complexion of the testimony during the whole investigation, that Price acted a very important part in these frauds and peculations.

On the return of the committee to Washington, they resumed their arduous duties. Many witnesses were examined, and documents referred to, all of which are incorporated in the journal, and part of it adverted to in this report.

The subjects of inquiry were similar to those in New York, both as to the extent and causes of the defalcations; and also the causes why the same were not known at an earlier date to the accounting officers at Washington. In pursuing the latter inquiry, it was necessary to go into an investigation of the peculiar duties required to be performed under existing laws, practice, or usage, by the secretary of the treasury, the first auditor, and the comptroller. The undersigned will not increase the volume of this report by including in it all the evidence on this subject in detail, but beg leave to refer to the journal. They deem it proper, however, for a full understanding of the duties belonging exclusively to these different officers of the government, in relation to the auditing and settling of accounts, more particularly those appertaining to the customs, to call the attention of the house and the country to the following documents, and the questions and answers of witnesses examined upon the occasion, and in reference to this subject.

The evidence of Mr. Young, chief clerk in the treasury department.

Question 1. Will you state how the department of the secretary of the treasury is organized, legally and practically, in respect to settling the accounts of collectors and receivers?

Answer. The power of adjusting and settling the accounts of collectors and receivers, in respect to the revenue from duties and lands, is by law vested in the accounting officers of the treasury. Collectors' accounts are adjusted by the first auditor, subject to the revision of the first comptroller; accounts of receivers, by the commissioner of the general land office, also subject to be revised by the first comptroller. The secretary of the treasury has no power as to the settlement and adjustment of these accounts further than to make allowances for the expenses of collection in cases where there is no express legislation fixing allowance for such expenses.

That of Mr. Woodbury, secretary of the treasury, to the following:

Question 11. Am I to understand that you have never considered it your duty, and that you have never discharged your duty of superintending the reports of the first auditor and the comptroller; and that you did not know, and had no means of knowing, whether their reports were correct, or whether they had faithfully done their duty in adjusting and settling accounts?—is in these words:

Answer. The reports of the first auditor on accounts settled are by law and usage, made to the first comptroller, and not to the secretary of the treasury; and the reports of the first comptroller on accounts settled, when the balances are considered suspicious or proper for suit, are made directly to the solicitor of the treasury, and formerly to the law agent. Neither in those settlements nor those reports does the secretary of the treasury interfere; and it has often been decided by the attorney general that no officer of the government has a right to control or reverse the decisions of the accounting officers in making those settlements and reports.

Extract of a letter dated office of the attorney general of the United States, October 20th, 1832, signed William Wirt.

"In the original organization of the treasury department, (vol. 2 Laws U. S. p. 45), the duties of the officers are designated specifically. There was one auditor and one comptroller. The duty of the auditor is declared to be to receive all public accounts, and, after examination, to certify the balance, and transmit the accounts, with the vouchers and certificate, to the comptroller for his decision thereon; with this proviso, that, if any person be dissatisfied therewith, he may, within six months, appeal to the comptroller against such settlement. Here the right of appeal stops; there is no proviso for an appeal to the president. With regard to the comptroller, it directs that it shall be his duty to superintend the adjustment and preservation of all public accounts, to examine all accounts settled by the auditor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the register; no right of appeal from his decision to the president."

Extract of a letter, dated attorney general's office, April 5th, 1832, signed R. B. Taney.

"None of the acts of congress prescribing the mode of settling accounts and ascertaining balances, look to a revision of the accounts by the president, except, perhaps, some laws passed for the relief of particular individuals, in which the power is expressly given. The general laws upon that subject seem to regard the decision of the comptroller as final, and require the executive branch of the government to act upon it accordingly."

The reasons why the defalcations were not sooner detected by the auditor and the comptroller, and whom the duty of auditing and settling the accounts especially belonged, are given in their evidence; and the general conclusion derived from it is, that it arose from the fraudulent manner in which Swartwout rendered his accounts, as fully stated and explained by the evidence, both in New York and Washington, as contained in the journal, and to which we beg leave more particularly to refer.

But little opportunity was afforded to go into the consideration of the conduct of land receivers and other officers included in the resolutions of the house. The only evidence on this subject was the communication of the secretary of the treasury, already published, and some additional letters from said officers addressed to the department; no part of which having been placed on the journal as evidence in the usual form, the undersigned are unable to come to any definite conclusion upon this portion of the subject of investigation.

During the whole investigation, and after a careful examination of the evidence since its termination, the undersigned can see no just cause to cast censure upon the head of the treasury department for any want of diligence or attention in the performance of the duties of his high and responsible station. This untoward and unfortunate affair, by which the country has sustained so much loss, could not have been prevented or controlled by any efforts of his. The evidence is strong and convincing that the auditing and settling these accounts and detecting defalcations do not appertain to his department, or constitute any of the duties imposed upon him; they belong to separate and distinct bureaus over which he has no control, and so determined by the legal advisers of the government. We find, in fact, that the duties of his department are abundantly furnished by the documents that he made every effort and used every instrument that the power of the department over which he presides enabled him to use, for the recovery of the money; and that, since the occurrence, he has adopted and enforced such regulations for the safe-keeping of the public money, as his limited power and the want of legislative action have enabled him to exercise. The duties of his station are not only various, but laborious; they required talent, patience and industry; these he has devoted to the public service in the administration of the high functions devolved upon him as secretary of the treasury. It may be said with confidence and truth, his fidelity to his trust is unquestioned and unquestionable—his purity known and acknowledged. As a public man, experience must have taught him, in high and violent party times, to be wary and pure as a chaste ass, he would not escape calumny.

That the country has sustained great pecuniary loss, no man can doubt; that the national character has suffered deep humiliation and disgrace, no man ever hesitated to admit. But losses like these are incidents to all governments; no one is free from them. The annals of our own afford numerous instances of peculation, committed at every period of its short existence, under all and every administration, and all and every fiscal system which has been adopted and carried into practice—no matter who has been the fiscal agent—the government has sustained loss; it must be so until man becomes honest. But, for our very misfortunes, we may derive benefits; these incidents, like storms, purify the stagnant atmosphere: they may check for a moment, but cannot stop the onward march of the state to her high destinies. The lessons of experience will not be forgotten, and remedies must and will be applied to guard and protect the public purse.

These remedies are, in the opinion of the undersigned—

1st. Persons to be appointed under an act of congress, whose duty it shall be, periodically, or at any time, under the direction of the treasury department, to personally inspect the books and papers of all officers intrusted with the public money.

2d. To have all officers of the customs who, in the remotest degree, may be connected with the fiscal concerns, or intrusted with the public money, derive their appointment, not from the collector, but from the nomination of the president and confirmation by the senate, or directly from the head of the treasury department.

3d. That all collectors, receivers, and disbursers of the public money be required to make their returns to the treasury department under oath.

4th. Making the embezzlement, by any officer of the public money, a high penal offence.

5th. Making it a penal offence in any officer connecting, at, knowing, or being privy to, any embezzlement of the public money, and not giving immediate notice to the treasury department.

No calm and dispassionate man can read the evidence taken by the committee in the progress of this investigation, but will come to the conclusion that the cashier and assistant cashier and the deputies of the custom house being indebted to Swartwout for their offices, and subject to be removed by him, was one of the great causes of the peculation, and of its concealment.

That the labors of the committee in this investigation will produce some good, is probable; that it would have produced greater, and given more satisfaction to the public mind had it been conducted on more enlarged principles, we have no doubt. Be that how it may, we have endeavored to discharge our duty to the house and to the country.

There is one occurrence, however, that took place in the investigation at Washington, of a remarkable character, and deserves notice. Mr. Woodbury, the secretary of the treasury, was called, and sworn as a witness. The first question propounded to him was in these words:

Question 1. Have you seen, read, or heard read or described, or been informed of any portion of the evidence taken before this committee?

Answer. I have not seen, read, or heard read any of it; nor has it been described to me; nor have I been informed in respect to it, except what gentlemen in conversation may have suggested was probably the character of some of the evidence; but, whether correctly or not, I have no means of judging.

If it be right that a man on his trial should be informed of the charges made against him, why ask the question? We know not what was the object in propounding it. Every man will draw his own conclusions.

We deemed it at the time a most extraordinary question to be subjoined to Mr. Woodbury in his then peculiar position. We believe it unprecedented in the annals of criminal jurisprudence.

We take this opportunity frankly to avow to the house and the people, had there been any evidence taken in New York tending to implicate the honor and reputation of Mr. Woodbury, or any other American citizen, and it had not been made known to him by the committee, we should, under the most solemn conviction of duty, of what is due to private honor and public virtue, and that sense of justice, to violate which would be to betray the best interests of the people, have communicated the fact. No human power could have induced us to remain silent.

There is a zeal in politics as strong, though not so holy as in religion, that excites the passions, and leads us into error. It reverses the precept, and makes us do unto others what it will not permit them to do unto us. Fair and honorable conflict of parties invigorates the body politic, and benefits the state; but, when party spirit assumes the character of persecution, it is a demon that perverts the understanding and corrupts the heart.

The respect we have to the house, and our devotion to the people and the principles of liberty, have imposed on us the duty of giving this simple narrative, not only of our acts, but the manner and form in which they have been executed. In politics, it has been said, names mean things. It may be said with equal truth, in all political movements, forms mean substance. The people have a right to know not only what is done, but how it is done. The greatest guaranty of freedom is publicity.

All which is respectfully submitted:

The Osage river. A steamer on her recent voyage up the Osage river on an experimental trip. It is stated that with a slight improvement, this river can be made a good steamboat navigation as far up as the western border of the state of Missouri, and thus open an avenue into the heart of a very fine section of country.

The number of vessels of all descriptions, in the port of New Orleans, the 4th inst. was according to Levy's Price Current two hundred and twenty, viz—one hundred ships, twenty-three barques, forty-four brigs and fifty-three schooners, being agreeably to comparative statement, more than were there in the same month for the last six years.

The receipts at the sailor's fair in Boston, week before last, were about $8,000—expenses full half that sum.

Naval. The following statement of the navies of the world, at the close of last year, may probably be relied on. It is given by Sir John Barrow, and was unquestionably prepared with care. At that time England had either about or in ordinary, 99 ships of the line, 93 frigates, and 53 steamships of war. France—49 ships of the line, 60 frigates, and 37 steamers. Russia—50 ships of the line, 35 frigates, and 8 steamers. United States of America—15 ships of the line, 23 frigates, sloops, &c., and 1 steamer. England—22 ships of the line, 10 frigates, and 3 steamers. Turkey—15 ships of the line, 19 frigates, and 3 steamers. Holland—8 ships of the line, 12 frigates and 4 steamers. Denmark—6 ships of the line. Sweden—10 ships of the line, 3 frigates, and 2 steamers. Spain—3 ships of the line, and 4 frigates. Naples—2 frigates and 1 steamer. Sardinia—6 frigates and 2 steamers. Additionally, the Holland has 101 gun boats, 40 in commission; Denmark has 6 gun boats; Sweden has 212 gun boats, and 5 bomb; Norway has 85 gun boats and 2 bombs, besides 30 gun boats building, each to carry two 60 pounders. Another fatal steamboat explosion. The last Mount Vernon (Ia.) Courier, says: The steamboat Avalanche, on Monday morning last, while descending the river, about four miles below this town, collapsed a fact killing three individuals and scalding two others so shockingly that no hopes are entertained of their recovery. If we are informed correctly, all the men killed or wounded were firemen or deck hands. After remaining at the landing two-thirds of the day to bury the dead, she was taken in tow by another boat and proceeded on her voyage.

The Chicago American says, when Daniel Webster was in Chicago some time since, a man, Mr. B., was an eccentric well known citizen, on being introduced to the distinguished statesman, addressed him as follows: "I have read your spelling book and dictionary Mr. Webster, but I never before had the pleasure of your acquaintance."

Exploring expedition. Extracts from a letter to the secretary of the Navy, from lieutenant Wilkes commanding the exploring expedition on board the U. S. brig Porpoise, Capt. Peary, Feb. 26, 1878.

"I have the honor to inform you that I parted company with the squadron at Orange harbor yesterday; the Vincennes, under charge of lieutenant Craven, being snugly moored in that harbor, having transferred myself to this vessel in company with the Sea Gull for the execution of our orders. The Peacock and Tytoz Fish schooner, with capt. Hadson, left at the same time, and the Relief would leave to-day for the straits of Magellan, with a large party of the scientific corps.

"Our endeavors, and that of the Peacock, will be to get as far south as we can at this late season. Although I am aware we stand some chance of being shut up in the ice, I could not resist the temptation to attempt it. The Porpoise, lieutenant Ringold, is well provided with ten months' gas is also the Sea Gull, of every thing that can render us comfortable in the event of such an accident. We are all in fine health and spirits."

The New York American mentions a striking instance of the uncertain tenure of earthly goods in a case lately reported in the London papers. It was a prosecution for perjury, in the London court. It was given in evidence that the prosecutrix, lady Parker, becoming security for her sister, lady Lake, for the sum of £19,000, in consequence of legal proceedings for its recovery, became an inmate for the king's bench prison, where she officiated as cook to the more wealthy portion of the prisoners.

Manufactures in Newport, R. I. Since it has been found that the cotton manufacturing business can be prosecuted in many success and profit by means of steam power, the citizens of Newport have turned their attention to it. Three mills have been directed and put in operation in that place, and have done much to increase its business and prosperity. There last establishment there, is that which belongs to the "Coddington manufacturing company," and which is said to be superior in many respects, to any other in the state.

This mill contains 8,000 spindles and 200 power looms; a part only of which are in operation, but all of which will shortly be; and from experiment it is calculated that the amount of fuel required, will not exceed 3,500 lbs. of anthracite coal per day.

The U. S. sloop of war Vandalia, arrived at Pensacola on the 30th inst. She brings news that the American consul at Lagaira de Terminos, although dead, was murdered as reported. The Vandalia on going to Vera Cruz, ran foul of a French iron-bow vessel, and did her some injury, and in coming out of the harbor next day was so unfortunate as to run into the French admiral's tender. It was reported that admiral Baudin and the greater portion of his squadron would spend the hurricane months at Pensacola.

And with the increase during the past year, it may be put down at 32,000. The assessed value of the real estate and improvements, as taxed in 1835, was upwards of $18,000,000, and, from the lists now taking, it is expected to exceed $20,000,000.

The Mobile (Ala.) Journal states: "Within the last week two of the greatest voyages ever known to have been made was from New York to this port. The ship Mary Francis, Westfield, and the brig Wakulla, Rutledge, left New York together on the afternoon of the 29th ult. and arrived at Mobile together in nine days and less than a half. It is remarkable that after leaving Sandy Hook, although they must have sailed nearly parallel, and at about the same rate, they never saw each other again until they came to anchor even so close together as to be within gun range of the bar." They must have made two hundred and fifty miles a day, for every day—a rate which it would puzzle even the Great Western, with her steam up, to surpass."

Lake trade. The Cleveland Herald of the 9th inst. says—

In our harbor, this morning, there were four large steamboats, one from Chicago, one from Buffalo, and two from Detroit; two brigs, fifty-three schooners, and one schooner. Besides these, there were canal boats uncounted, of no number, and many landing along the docks, giving to the river a very bustling and animated appearance.

FROM MEXICO. The schooner Lone, at New Orleans from Tampico, brings late intelligence from Mexico. A slip from the Louisiana office contains the following letter from Tampico, under date of 4th May:

"The expedition projected by the federalists was not intended for Vera Cruz, as they wished us to believe, but for Puebla or Mexico. For some days we have had no news of their (Urrea and Mejia) progress; the last information received, announces that they would be in Mexico within fifteen days. In the meantime, we are not very comfortable here. Bustamante and Arista, who have remained a long time at Victoria, seem at length disposed to take possession of Tampico. Although their movements are not well known, it appears certain that their advanced posts are at Horcasitas, Tancasnequi and Presos. Their movements, however, are slow, and it is easy to perceive that they have no confidence in their troops, and expect a strong resistance, which Tampico is not in a condition to make, both on account of the small number of troops, and the inefficient manner in which they are commanded. Pezalla, the commander-in-chief, has been dangerously ill, and is next yet out of danger, it is said, however, that his health is improving. The line of defence is nearly completed, 1,000 good troops, ably commanded, would be able to repel 3,000 men, but troops are wanting, and still more, good officers.

"To judge from a circular addressed by the minister of foreign affairs, to the different foreign consuls and ministers at Mexico, of which I send you herewith a copy, we need not apprehend the same excesses on the part of the government troops, which we had cause to apprehend from those of Canaliza, at the first attack. Outside the bar is a French brig of war, which will probably remain until the arrival of these gentlemen.

"This is all the political information I can give you.

"All business is entirely paralyzed at Tampico." May 3. The government party under Gen. Bustamante, it is said, had taken to their march from Victoria for this place, in which case we may look for them in 10 or 15 days, the force here is not strong and there is no saying what may be the result.

Tampico, May 4. I hand you an enclosed copy of a decree of the government against importations at Tampico, dated Mexico, 22d April, 1839. You will be good enough to have the same published. It is yet unknown what answers the different consuls have given to this decree, which was sent to the different foreign ministers and consuls to Mexico. The whole is nothing more than a declaration in favor of the excesses which the troops may be authorised to commit, in order to encourage them to make an attack upon this place, of which they have a great dread. This is a further proof of the necessity of our vessels of war being off this port for our protection.

Palace of the national government. The Mexican government cannot behold without much displeasure the continual arrival of merchant vessels at Tampico, considering that the captains cannot be ignorant that according to the laws now in force this port is closed to foreign commerce, not only on account of the notoriety and date of this law, but because the Mexican consuls in all countries have refused to legalize by their signatures the documents which the tariff requires for the legal importation of all kinds of merchandise in every port of the republic. The government has also learned with great disgust, that a great portion of this merchandise is of the class prohibited by the tariff; and that others have been admitted by the revolted authorities at a very great reduction of the ordinary duties, which is a power exclusively vested in the national congress.

On this account, and as it cannot be doubted that these grave excesses have favored the cause of the revolution in that section of the country, by furnishing resources to all classes of persons engaged in it; the undersigned minister of foreign affairs has received orders from his excellency, the president and interim of the republic to address your excellency to declare that the national government disavows from this moment, both as to the origin and its effects, the aforesaid diminution of duties, and that he will not assent in any manner whatever to any introduction of merchandise or productions prohibited by law, and finally that if contrary to what he has expressly and repeatedly recommended to the general of the republic, if in the taking of Tampico by assault, some of those excesses were to occur, which are almost inevitable, and which are to a certain extent authorized by the laws of war, that in such a disagreeable event he would not be responsible for the injury which might result to the property which had been thus clandestinely introduced to the injury of the government itself.

The president, however, flatters himself that this last mentioned conjuncture will not arrive, owing to the precautionary measures which he has adopted for that purpose; but he deems, nevertheless, this declaration necessary, in order to save in the national responsibility in the case above referred to.

The undersigned, in communicating this, &c. renews, &c. M. E. GOROSTIZA.
Mexico, April 22, 1839.

LATER FROM TEXAS. Arrival of the French fleet at Galveston. The steam packet Columbia arrived at New Orleans on the 14th, in 36 hours from Galveston. By slips from the New Orleans Bee and Bulletin we have received the following items of intelligence.

The French fleet arrived at Galveston on the 6th inst. The Gazette says: "The French frigate Neriad, 64 guns, the steam ship Phaeton, and the Cruisador, an 18 gun brig, arrived on Tuesday, and are now (Thursday evening) lying off this port. They are a part of the blockading squadron from Vera Cruz, and brought up admiral Bandin, who is now at Houston, having landed at Velasco, and gone to the capital by land. Salutes have been exchanged between these vessels, and the Texian steam ship Zavala, the fort and the navy yard. The Zavala and the steam packet New York have been along side the Phaeton and exchanged friendly salutations with her officers. The president among others, has been on board."

The Galvestonian contains various particulars of the arrival of the rare visitants. The Neriad in entering the port got aground, and was towed off by the Zavala. The commander of the Phaeton had been on board the Texian steam ship, and expressed himself highly pleased with the vessel and her arrangements. Formal visits had also been exchanged between the officers of the Neriad and the Zavala.

The Houston Telegraph of the 8th instant says, "Admiral Bandin arrived in this city yesterday, and was received by the officers of government with the attention and respect due his high rank and character. This aged veteran attracts great attention wherever he appears, from the singularity of his personal appearance. His right arm is lopped off; he has a deep scar on his head—his gray hair, and furrowed brow, indicate full well that he has shared in the toils and dangers of the iron days of Napoleon."

The May term of the district court of the first judicial district, E. W. Cullen presiding, commenced its session in Galveston on the 6th, and adjourned on the 11th. There were 81 civil cases and 16 criminal cases on the docket. About half of the cases were disposed of. The custom house bonds about which much conjecture existed, were not called up; it was thought they would be dismissed and commenced anew.

A meeting of the bar was held after the adjournment of the court, and resolutions highly commendatory of judge Cullen, adopted. The grand jury also adopted similar resolutions, and likewise expressed very decided approval of the course of the district attorney, F. W. Ogden, esq.

The Galvestonian represents the business of the place to be flourishing, and improvements rapidly progressing. The first shipment of lumber from Galveston was made on Thursday, the 2d instant, by the schooner Augusta, of Augusta, Me. capt. Dickerson, from New York. The cargo consisted of white oak staves. Capt. D. thinks the capabilities and prospects of this trade quite promising, and that vessels from the eastern ports may do better in it than by returning with freight for New Orleans,

Business at Houston was quite lively, according to a letter writer, owing to the demands from the interior. The crops look well and the prospects were very flattering. A splendid line of post coaches, weekly, to Austin, the new seat of government, were to be started from Houston.

From Houston papers of the 7th, and Galveston of the 8th instant, we gather the following:

The first sale of lots in the new seat of government takes place in August. The president, it is said, will, under no circumstances, convene congress at Houston.

The crops, especially cotton, are said to be unusually promising this season. Much larger quantities are in cultivation than at any previous season.

Two men have been imprisoned at Houston for negro stealing.

Gen. Douglass and several citizens of Nacogdoches have agreed to meet the chiefs of the hostile Indians on the 1st of May, for the purpose of arranging articles of peace.

The Houston Intelligencer of the 2d contains a highly interesting statistical view of the finances of Texas, of which we furnish an abstract. The whole amount of paper money issued by the government since its formation, is $1,098,453; about $198,453 has been withdrawn from circulation, leaving a balance of $900,000; funded debt of the government, redeemable after 1842, $667,500; military and other scrip, $245,000; other claims against government, $75,000; expenditure of the civil list, $400,000; whole amount of debts due or bearing interest, $2,299,800.

The resources to meet this debt are estimated as follows: Import duties for the present year, $54,000 dollars; amounts for land dues, $504,400; supposed amount of direct taxes $250,000; sale of lots in the city of Austin, $500,000; sale of lots in Galveston, $250,000; sale of lots in Calhoun, $500,000; total, $3,018,000.

A new literary paper, the first ever published in Texas, has been started in the town of Richmond. It bears the title of "The Richmond Telescope," and is devoted to literature, agriculture, commerce, &c. &c.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA. By the ship Azalia, capt. Fisk, the N. Y. Journal of Commerce have received Rio Janeiro papers to April 9th.

The Brazilian minister of war arrived at Rio Grande on the 21st of March, and proceeded soon after to Port Alegre. He took with him from Rio Janeiro, 400 men. A like number under Torres, had sailed for the same destination a short time previous, and 320 more were to sail in a few days.—Making a total of 1,120 men, sent or about to be sent to reinforce the government troops in that distracted province. The entire province was in possession of the insurgents, except Port Alegre and the town of Rio Grande. A decree had been issued by the governor in regard to the slaves who, under promise of liberty, had been induced to take up arms in favor of the insurgents. "While he guards, as was proper, the interests of the masters, he adopts the only method of disarming the slaves, by holding out similar promises to those who submit, and severe and immediate punishment to those who do not."

The editor of the Journal de Commercio has some very liberal remarks towards men who differ from him in matters of religion. They appear to have been elicited by insinuations of another paper, called El Despertador, that the Journal editor was hostile to the Catholic religion. In reply, he says:

"We are Catholics; if we were not, we would say so with equal frankness; for Protestantism, which prevails in a great part of civilized Europe, is not a crime. We are Catholics, without loading the Lutheran community with reproachful epithets, as does the Despatcher, for we live in the nineteenth century, and know the import of religious liberty, as proclaimed in the constitution of every free people. We are Catholics, without turning our backs in the public streets, with face turned towards the churches, in a ridiculous hypocrisy.

"In civilized nations the age of religious intolerance is past, never to return, although it is but a few years since Don Miguel and his ferocious satellites would have lighted up anew in Portugal the flames of the inquisition. But the vile reign of tyranny was short; and the triumph of religious liberty is now in this country as complete as that of political liberty."

Montevideo and Buenos Ayres. Accounts from Montevideo are to the 27th of March. Affairs in that quarter remained in slutu quo.

The Journal of April 6th contains a long address of president Rivera to the people of the Oriental republic, calling upon them to rally around the standard of the country, and march against their oppressors. [Entre Rios and Buenos]

Rio Janeiro, April 8. As to the contest between Rosas, governor of Buenos Ayres, and Fructuoso, president of the Oriental republic, (of which Montevideo is the capital), we have no news except that war had been actually declared between the two countries. We have seen also the manifesto of the government of Corrientes, (one of the provinces of the Argentine republic), declaring war against Rosas and Echague, (the latter being governor of the province of Entre Rios). The motives which induced Corrientes to arms, may be thus stated: the governments of Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios had attempted to excite disorders among its people, and produce anarchy, as they had already done in other provinces. Rosas had also in the direction of the affairs of the federation, jeopardized the property of the federal provinces, and it was time his tyranny should be arrested.

Rio Janeiro, April 5. Much sensation has been caused by the news brought by the United States brig of war Dolphin, which arrived day before yesterday from Montevideo, (since arrived at New York), that the French admiral had ordered the seizure of two American vessels, which were taking in cargo at Loberia Caica, a small port on the coast of Patagonia, under pretence that they had violated the blockade which he had established of the port of Buenos Ayres and the shore of the Rio de la Plata.

As the letters from Montevideo differ concerning this affair, we have endeavored to ascertain the facts; and, from a person on whom we can rely, have learned the following particulars, the truth of which we will vouch for:

"The American brig America and Eliza Davidson, sailed from Montevideo with complete cargoes for Loberia Caica, on the coast of Patagonia, a port belonging to the republic of Buenos Ayres, but not included within the limits of the blockade proclaimed by the French admiral, of the port of Buenos Ayres and the shore of the Rio Plata.

"These vessels arrived at Loberia Caica, where they found no French vessel of war—discharged their cargoes, and began to load a cargo which had been sent them in wagons from Buenos Ayres. In the mean time the French corvette Pearl, which had been despatched by admiral Leblanc to capture the two American vessels, arrived at Loberia Caica, and seized them accordingly. She then took them into Montevideo, without first giving prizes to the French squadron, for having infringed a blockade that never existed, either in fact or on paper.

"The consignees of the two American vessels demanded of the French admiral their release, but he refused to comply, unless they would give him a bond to the amount of their value, that they would submit to the decision of the French court of admiralty in the case—a proposition which the consignees at once rejected.

"The American commodore immediately on receiving information of this infringement upon the rights of neutrals, addressed a communication to the French admiral, protesting, in the strongest terms, against the proceedings, as not having been sanctioned by precedent, nor tolerated by the United States government, and demanding the immediate and unconditional release of the prizes. When the Dolphin sailed from Montevideo, 26th March, the reply of the French admiral had not been received.

"The issue of this affair is awaited by the commercial community with much interest."

FROM THE WEST INDIES. By the schooner Mizeppa, from Kingston, the editors of the New York Commercial Advertiser have a file of the Jamaica Despatch to the 27th of April. It gives a lamentable account of matters and things in the island, but affords no specific items of intelligence that could interest our readers. The staple of the matter contained in the papers is abuse of sir Lionel Smith, lord Glenelg and the Baptists, with dolorous complaints of the ruin, which it affirms, is rapidly falling upon the planters.

If the Despatch may be taken as authority, it would seem that the day cannot be far distant when the colored inhabitants will be the "party in power," in Jamaica, and the island become another Hayti. The negroes are said to be rapidly acquiring property in the soil; and the prosperity of the planters is represented to be entirely at their mercy.

FROM FLORIDA. Our latest accounts from Florida, we are sorry to say, are any thing but consoling to the patriot and philanthropist. In the Pensacola Gazette of the 11th instant, we find the following paragraph:

"The Seminole war. No hopes seem to be any longer entertained that the embassy of general Macomb to the Seminoles will end in any thing beneficial. Lieut. Reynolds, who passed through this place last week, on his way from Tampa Bay, brings intelligence that the chief on whose good offices general Macomb chiefly relied, has not only refused to treat, but has betaken himself and all his people to the woods. The truth is, they consider the whites to have been badly whipped, and it is nearly time we should take the same view of the matter. The language they now use is, 'let us alone and we will not molest you—remain at your posts or your homes and we will not attack you—but if you make war on us, we will fight as long as our ammunition lasts and when this is gone we will take to the bow and arrow.'"

From another quarter of Florida the last mail brought us the following distressing intelligence:

From the Appalachicola Gazette.

More Indian Murders. We received by the mail boat Commerce, this evening, the following information: A party of 15 or 20 Indians, recognised to be Creeks simultaneously attacked the settlements of Roberts, at Stefanungee, and John and Nathan Smith's, at Rico's Bluff. They burnt Robert's house, killed a little boy, and wounded Roberts himself, who with his wife, a man named Aldrich and four children escaped.

At Smith's settlement, it is supposed that Nathan Smith's three children, a Mrs. Richards and her five children, and a man named White, were murdered. Nathan Smith, with his wife, another woman, and two men escaped.—John Lamb was severely wounded, he recognized the Indians to be Chief. Sixteen of the fugitives, men, women and children, came down on the mail boat, and are completely destitute. Several of the Indians were taken on the banks of the river as the boat came through the narrows seven miles above Fort Gadsden.

The Tallahassee Star of the 8th inst. gives these melancholy particulars of new murders:

Latest Indian news. Once more we are compelled to darken our columns with the atrocities of the unrelenting and wakeful Seminole. All has been quiet for some time past, but it was only the fearful calm which precedes the storm.

Lieut. Hulbert was a native of New York, and a graduate of West Point. We sincerely mourn the loss of these valuable young officers of our army.

The following letter from captain Peyton we publish verbatim.

St. Marks, May 7, 1839.
Sir: I have this moment returned from Deadman's Bay, and have to communicate to you the melancholy intelligence of the murder of lieutenant Hulbert and private O'Driscoll, of the 5th infantry by the Seminoles.

The express rider between Fort Frank Brooke and Fort Andrews did not arrive in season, and lieutenant Hulbert, with ten men, went out from this place, on the 3d of May to ascertain the reason.—About half way between the two posts, the command was halted, and lieutenant Hulbert, of (F) company, went on in advance, intending to pass the night at Fort Brooke. They were both shot by a party of Indians at the fourteen mile creek, probably while watering their horses.—O'Driscoll's horse ran into Fort Frank Brooke slightly wounded, and gave the news there. Four balls were shot through lieutenant Hulbert but neither he nor the soldier was scalped. Both bodies were interred on the 4th ult. at Deadman's Bay. The express rider has not yet been found, and but little doubt is entertained of his death. Very respectfully your obt^d servant,

R. H. PEYTON.

Captain and assistant quartermaster.
Col. W. Davenport, first infantry, commanding.
From the news received from Tampa Bay, it would appear that the Indians are determined not to treat with a view to emigration. They have heard that the land which government had assigned them west of the Mississippi cannot be found on their arrival—that country is no longer theirs, and that they are naturally angry, and resolved to remain where they are at all hazards. The chief of the Tallahassee said at Tampa that, if the soldiers were sent alter them, they would fight until their powder and lead was gone, and then with bows and arrows. He would not agree to hold council with gen. Macomb, for he was certain the whites had two faces; he said he spoke the sentiments of all the Indians north of Tampa Bay, and that any Indian who attempted hereafter to come in to the whites would be killed. On the night of the 22d of April, about 100 hostiles went into Tampa, and took away some thirty friendly Indians, who were waiting to emigrate. During the night the Tallahassee chief held a long talk with a Spaniard, named Jeanne Mantes de Oca, who speaks the Indian language well, and communicated to him what we have narrated above.

From the Charleston Mercury.

From St. Augustine. By the schooner Stephen & Francis, capt. Magee, arrived yesterday, we have received the St. Augustine News of the 11th inst. from which we copy the following:

Army intelligence. From Fort King, of the 4th inst. we learn that no Indians had yet come in. A new talk has been carried out by 15 prisoners, "men, women, and children," covered with presents to the arch heretics, that they may come in and sign a treaty to "live in peace south of Peace Creek, and west of the Everglades. They are informed that posts will be extended from Tampa to Fort Mellon, and the whites are to keep north, and the Indians south." The prisoners are at liberty to return to their places. The general has demanded a court of inquiry in relation to the Missoni volunteers, and tendered his resignation of the command in Florida. He says he is willing to command a "district." Gen. Taylor started for Tampa, where he has certain information of some whites tampering with the Indians. The instructions of gen. Macomb is, that the Indians are to abide by the treaty of Payne's Landing."

From Fort Pierce, 1st May, letters inform us that 22 of capt. Bryant's company, 2d dragons, have joined col. Harney, armed with "Colt's rifle;" in the hands of such men, and with such an officer we may expect a good account, should one occur, of the enemy.

The names of the persons murdered by the Indians near Newnansville are Ferrine, Stout, and Ellis. Young Hagart was killed by his horse throwing him against a tree, when the Indians horribly mutilated his body with their knives. Thus have four more of our citizens been murdered whilst the white flag is waving throughout the country.

The accounts from Florida, by way of Carey's Ferry, are more favorable. A letter under date of the 17th May, in the Savannah Georgian says:

"Every thing is going on well and smoothly in the negotiation line; and in a very short time, I expect to be able to apprise you of the successful termination of gen. Macomb's mission. Col. Harney arrived from the south a few days ago, bringing with him a very important chief of the Mickasuckie tribe; he with fourteen others, came in to col. H. whilst on the southern coast, and says the Indians are anxious for peace and will gladly accede to the general's terms. Gen. Jones (Sam) says that if he come in, it will be after peace is made and every thing settled. Coacooche entertains and expresses the same opinion. Several Indians have also visited the general, at Fort King, and promised to bring in more. Murders committed by straggling parties of Indians may still be heard of, but as soon as the news of our wish to make peace is known to all, no danger even of this kind is to be apprehended."

THE FLORIDA RUMOR. The Globe of Tuesday, contradicts the sinister paragraph which has been going the rounds of the press (our own, as copied into the National Intelligencer among the rest) from the New Orleans Bee—to the effect that generals Macomb and Wool had arrived at New Orleans from Florida—that a treaty had been concluded with the Seminoles, one provision of which yielded to the Indians the possession of the disputed territory, &c. It says copying the paragraph:

"We find the above extract in this morning's National Intelligencer. It shows the weakness, ignorance, and malignity of the editors of the N. Orleans Bee and National Intelligencer. Gen. Wool and his aid-de-camp, young Alexander Macomb, have arrived in New Orleans from a tour of inspection to the western forts made by inspector gen. Wool. He has not visited Florida at all! Major gen. Macomb, who is entrusted with duties relating to Florida, was at Fort King by the last advices. It is to be hoped he will succeed in pacifying the Indians; but there is no intention on the part of the government to surrender any portion of Florida to the Indians as a permanent residence."

INDIAN FRONTIER. Dr. Wright, a gentleman from Rio Grand, who had been sent to reconnoitre the Indian frontier, by the republic of Texas, informs us that he left the republic last fall, in order to find out their strength, movements, designs, &c. He states that he found the Indians universally on the Mexican plains, hostile to all white Americans, and particularly to the Texans. The Comanches could count but six thousand warriors, including Kiawars, which count about a fifth of that number. Three thousand of the above were making preparations to assail and annoy the republic; and flattered themselves that with the assistance of the Mexicans they should be able to lay waste Texas—baving, he presumed, but little idea of the Texian population in the southeast. They are but poorly off for ammunition and guns, but rich in horses and expert with arrows.

Some two thousand Comanches and the Osages are to hold in June a council of war, at the Old Pawnee village, on Red river, some 80 miles above the Waco village, in order to go against the Potawatamies; and declared that they intended destroying every American from Missouri, who might fall in their way. We would therefore inform the traders from that quarter, as well as those from Arkansas, to avoid, if possible, so formidable a body. Little Rock, (Ark.) Times, May 6.

INDIAN MURDER. The Providence Journal of Monday reports at large the trial of Daniel Harry, in Washington county, for the murder of Christopher Ross, on the 26th of March—both Indians, of the Narragansett tribe. The murder was committed in the course of a frolic, some slight offence having been given by the deceased to Harry. He is said to be a collateral descendant of King Tom, the last sachem of the tribe. The 9th of August is appointed for his execution, a verdict of guilty having been rendered. His deportment at the close of the trial is thus described:

The prisoner is aged thirty-one years, short but well formed, with straight black hair, and enaciated by confinement. The expression of his countenance, though tranquil, is strong and decided. During the trial he betrayed (while in court) no emotion of guilt or fear—except by the large drops of sweat which constantly stood on his face. When the verdict was pronounced he preserved the same immovable calmness. But in the evening he exhibited a power of self-control scarcely credible.—While the judge addressed him, and when the words hanged by the neck until dead, were pronounced, not a muscle moved, no expression but that of patient suffering. This will appear the more remarkable, when it is known that he is a man of more than ordinary mind; and that a moment before taken from the jail he was weeping bitterly, while inquiring of a friend how he could bestow his Indian land upon his sister, an only relative. It was altogether an exhibition of fortitude not unworthy of his ancestors.

ARMY—OFFICIAL. General orders, No. 23. War Department, adjutant general's office, Washington, May 20, 1839. With a view to the better instruction of the troops and improvement of the discipline of the army, such portions of the regiments of dragoons, artillery and infantry as may be withdrawn from their stations without detriment to the other interests of the service, will be concentrated during the summer months at some convenient point best calculated for a camp of instruction.

The arduous and desultory service in which the troops have been so long engaged, the unavoidable dismemberment of the regiments, and separation of so many officers from duty in the line while employed on other service, could hardly fail greatly to impair the esprit de corps of the army, as well as its discipline and efficiency. These must be restored, and every proper effort speedily made to place the service on a foundation which will ensure its steady and uniform advancement.

The occasional concentration of companies of the same regiment, and the bringing together troops of different arms where all the duties of the officer and soldier of the several corps of the army may be strictly and systematically performed, from the school of the company to the evolutions of the line, are necessary steps to be taken to effect this desirable amelioration.

Major general Scott is charged with the formation and direction of the proposed camp of instruction, the inadequate command of which will be assigned to such officer as he may designate. In choosing a position for the camp, regard will be had to health, cheapness, and facility of transportation, both of troops and supplies.

The rules and regulations, and established systems for each arm of service, will be punctually observed, and strictly practised; and no other than the prescribed military dress will be worn.

All necessary supplies and transportation will be promptly furnished by the respective departments of the staff, and two officers of each branch of that service will be ordered without delay to report to major general Scott for duty at the camp of instruction. By order of the secretary of war.

R. JONES, adjutant general.

NATIONAL EXPENDITURES. Letter from the secretary of the treasury transmitting a statement of expenditure, exclusive of the public debt, for each year, from 1824 to 1837.

Treasury department, June 27, 1838.

Sir: In obedience to the resolution of the house of representatives of the 25th instant, I have the honor to "lay before the house a statement showing the amount of expenditure, exclusive of the public debt, for each year, from 1824, to 1838."

T. L. SMITH, register.

Treasury department, register's office, June 27, 1838. [The expenditures for the three first quarters of 1838, (according to the annual report of the secretary of the treasury, made to congress December, 1838), amounted to $23,427,218.] [Nat. Int.]

INCREASE OF POPULATION. History, we believe, furnishes nothing comparable to the growth of the towns along the shores of our American lakes; embracing an extent of 5,000 miles, which is more than the coast of all the Atlantic states, including the gulf of Mexico. It will be seen by the following table from the Cleveland Herald, that the population has quadrupled within 8 years, since 1830:

Towns.	Population.	1830.	1838.
Buffalo	8,653	20,000
Erie	1,329	3,500
Cleveland	1,076	8,400
Sandusky city	400	1,500
Lower Sandusky	351	1,500
Perrysburg	183	1,600
Maumee	250	2,000
Toledo	50	2,000
Detroit	2,422	6,500
Monroe	500	3,500
Chicago	100	5,000
Milwaukee	20	3,500
Michigan city	10	1,800
Waukegan	10	1,500
Newburyport	100	1,500
Navarro	10	1,500
Dunkirk	50	1,500
	15,383	66,000

There are some thirty towns on these shores, not named above, most of which commenced their existence since 1830, and which, if included, would of course show a greater ratio of increase. Thus it appears that our town population has more than quadrupled within 8 years. Business has increased in a still greater ratio. In 1829, the number of vessels which cleared at the port of Cleveland with cargoes was 327; in 1835 it was 3,025 being nearly ten times in number, and probably more than twenty times in tonnage. The value of exports in 1830 was $377,197, and in 1835, the value of those exports that arrived by the canal exceeded five millions of dollars. The value of imports in 1830, was estimated at less than one million, and in 1835 at over nine millions. It is probable, that Cleveland exported, in addition to that received by the canal, to the value of near a million. Thus that single port must have sent abroad, of the produce of Ohio, about six millions of dollars in value.

*This sum is subject to small variation on the settlement of the accounts of the treasurer.

CANAL TOLLS. The amount of tolls collected on all the canals for the month of April, and also for the first week in May for each of the last five years is as follows, viz:

	In April.	1st week in May.	Total.
1835,	$130,075	$58,814	$188,891
1836,	53,287	61,624	114,911
1837,	89,074	50,596	139,670
1838,	127,881	50,427	178,309
1839,	107,567	75,432	182,999

The amount of tolls received to the 7th of May is greater this year than last by the sum of $1,690—and greater than in 1837, by $3,329, although the canal opened in '37 and '39 on the same day. The tolls to the 7th of May in 1835 were $5,920 more than in 1829. In the former year the canal opened on the 15th of April, and the collections in that month were $22,560 greater than in April 1839. [Albany Argus.]

NORTHERN LAKES. We have been favored with a good portion of the report of Lieut. James T. Homans, United States engineer, who, in obedience to instructions received, proceeded in August last to survey and examine the northern lake boundary west of Detroit, under the provisions of the act of congress, approved 7th July last, respecting light-houses. Leaving Detroit on the 20th of the month in the vessel chartered for his use by the collector of that port, he followed the boundary designated through Detroit river, lake and river St. Clair, Lake Huron, Saganaw Bay, Straits of Michilimackinac, east and west side of lake Michigan, to Green Bay; from that place to St. Mary's river, entering it by Detour passage, most used by vessels; to Sault St. Marie, near foot of Lake Superior; thence to Detroit via Mackinaw; embracing in the route a distance, by estimate of 1,825 miles.

The Buffalo Journal, in alluding to this report says: "Reader, think of it! The engineer explores our own American Mediterranean, embracing a route of eighteen hundred and twenty-five miles in length, and yet leaves enough unemployed to wash the boundaries of whole empires!" All this is no exaggeration,—it is plain, unvarnished truth. Lieut. Homans found much that had been done, and something, already in partial progress to hasten and commend. In speaking of certain bars at the outlet of Black river, he earnestly hopes that the obstruction of commercial enterprise thereby (which he observes will apply also in South Black river, Pigeon river lake, and other fine harbors on the east side of Lake Michigan) may induce from congress some appropriation for opening the entrance to them. Our officer in this report expresses himself highly gratified with the manifestations of thorough and genuine enterprise displayed by the company now rapidly settling at Port Sheldon; among the tokens of which is mentioned a neat light-house, near the entrance of the harbor, regularly lighted throughout the season. It has been truly useful to lake navigators, more especially those destined to Grand river, thirteen miles north;—there being no other light in operation on the two hundred and fifty miles of lake coast north of St. Joseph;—a coast destined, with all the intermediate and surrounding regions, teeming with increase and fertility, to pour its influence into the lap of this company, and the city which their pioneering enterprise and far-reaching forecast will in a very few years have established, in plenteous prosperity. *[Phil. PENNSYLVANIA CANAL. The following report was made to the medical board which recently sat at Pittsburg, for the purpose of deciding on the most suitable place for the location of a national hospital:

Pittsburg, May 11, 1839.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your esteemed favor of the 10th inst. I now with pleasure proceed to furnish the board with all the correct statistical facts that I can procure at so short a notice, and in doing so, give intelligence procured from the best sources that may be relied on.

The number of boats cleared from Pittsburg eastward, since the opening of the canal navigation at Pittsburg on Monday the 25th of March last to the morning of the 9th inst. is 116, loaded with the products of the west, viz: flour, bacon, lard, tobacco, hemp, furs, skins, wool, feathers, wheat, corn, iron, nails, castings. Pittsburg manufactures, stone coal, &c. &c. Tonnage amounting to 19,139,259 pounds, and tolls amounting to $14,025 26 cts.

Number of boats that have arrived from Johnstown and intermediate ports, in the same time, is 713, loaded with foreign and domestic goods, viz: dry goods, hardware, queensware, groceries, liquors, drugs, marble, burr blocks, blooms, castings, salt, &c. &c. amount of tonnage, 30,166,173 pounds.

There are 96 boats regularly registered, plying on the canal from Pittsburg to Johnstown and back, and about 25 transient boats, making in the whole on the western division, about 121 boats.

Each boat, on an average, is manned by a captain, two steermen, a cook and two drivers, making on the whole number of boats, about 547 persons.

The following regular lines are comprised in the above list, and ply daily between Pittsburg and Johnstown, viz:

Penna. packet boat co.	} Little, Linford and Hays.
Express packet line. Pioneer or freight & packet line.
Western transportation co. or D. Leech and Co's line of freight & packet boats.	} Do.
Union transportation co. Bingham's do.
Pilot do.	} H. & P. Graff. Wm. Bingham. James Paul.
James O'Connor & Co's patent portable car body line.
Penna. & Ohio line.	} Taaffe & O'Connor.
Mechanics' line.
Despatch line.	} McDowell & Co. Samuel M. Kier. J. C. Reynolds.
Reliance line, freight packet.
Hollidaysburg line.	} Jno. McFaden.

Judging from all the facts in my possession, the business on the western division of the Pennsylvania canal has so far this spring increased full twenty-five per cent. and will doubtless continue in the same ratio as the rapid increase of the population and business of the vast western and southern regions of the United States. All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient serv't,

ABSALOM MORRIS,

Supervisor western division Penn. canal.

THE AMERICAN AND CANADIAN FRONTIERS. The late report of lord Durham on the affairs of Canada, thus contracts the appearance of the American and Canadian shores:

"On the American side, all its activity and bustle. The forest has been widely cleared; every year numerous settlements are formed, and thousands of farms are created out of the waste; the country is intersected by common roads; canals and rail roads are finished, or in the course of formation; the ways of communication and transport are crowded with people and enlivened by numerous carriages and large steamboats. The observer is surprised at the number of vessels they contain; while bridges, artificial landing places, and commodious wharves are formed in all directions as soon as required.

"Good houses, warehouses, mills, inns, villages, towns, and even great cities, are almost seen to spring up out of the desert. Every village has its school house and place of public worship. Every town has many of both, with its township buildings, its book stores, and probably one or two banks and newspapers; and the cities with their fine churches, their great hotels, their exchanges, court houses and municipal halls, of stone or marble, so new and fresh as to mark the recent existence of the forest where they now stand, would be admired in any part of the old world. On the British side of the line, with the exception of a few favored spots, where some approach to American prosperity is apparent, all seems waste and desolate. There is but one rail road in all British America, and that running between the St. Lawrence and Lake Champlain is only 15 miles long. The ancient city of Montreal, which is naturally the commercial capital of the Canadas, will not bear the least comparison in any respect with Buffalo, which is a creation of yesterday.

"But it is not in the difference between the larger towns on the two sides that we shall find the best evidence of our own inferiority. That painful and undeniable truth is most manifest in the country districts through which the line of national separation passes for 1,000 miles. There on the side of both the Canadas, and also of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, a widely scattered population, poor, and apparently unenterprising, though hardy and industrious, separated from each other by tracts of intervening forests, without towns or markets, almost without roads, living in mean houses, drawing little more than a rude subsistence from ill cultivated land, and seemingly incapable of improving their condition, present the most instructive contrast to their enterprising and thriving neighbors on the American side."

The "Winter Studies and Summer Rambles" of Mrs. Janison has a passage to the same effect:

"I hardly know how to convey to you an idea of the difference between the two shores; it will appear to you incredible as it is to me incomprehensible. Our shore is said to be the most fertile, and has been the longest settled; but to float between them, (as I did to-day in a little canoe made of a hollow tree, and paddled by a half-breed imp of a boy), to behold on one side a city with its towers and spires and animated population, with villas and handsome houses stretching along the shore, and 100 vessels or more, gigantic steamers, bridges, schooners crowding the port, loading and unloading; all the bustle, in short, of prosperity and commerce, and on the other side a little straggling hamlet, one schooner, one little wretched steambot, some windmills, Catholic chapel or two, a supine ignorant peasantry, all the symptoms of apathy, indolence, mistrust, hopelessness! Can any one help wondering at the difference, and ask whence it arises? There must be a cause for it surely—but what is it? Does it lie in the past or in present—in natural or accidental circumstances? In the institution of the government, or the character of the people? Is it remediable? is it a necessity? is it a mystery? What and whence is it? Can you tell or can you send some of our colonial officials across the Atlantic, to behold and solve the difficulty?"

[National Intelligencer.

TROUBLES IN THE EAST AGAIN. The Bangor Whig brings us a rumor of war from the disputed territory. A letter is published dated St. Croix, No. 10, May 14, from a gentleman at that place, who writes that McLaughlin has been at Fish river, which is about 60 miles from No. 10, with 40 men, and ordered off, by letter, captain Nye and his men, about 20 in number; they then went down the river, it is supposed for reinforcement. The letter adds, "We immediately sent one express to fort Fairfield for men, and one to colonel Jarvis, informing him of the facts, and started a boat load of men, ammunition and provisions, for the seat of war." The writer further adds, "we say Fish river country by the arrangement, before mentioned, we have sent a force there to secure the timber, take off trespassers, and exercise jurisdiction."

The following is an extract from the arrangement made between Harvey, Scott and Fairfield, to which the writer alludes:

"It is not the intention of the governor of Maine, without renewed instructions from the legislature of the state, to attempt to disturb, by arms, the said province in the possession of the Madawaska settlements, or to attempt to interrupt the usual communications between that province and her majesty's upper provinces; and that he is willing in the mean time, to leave the questions of possession and jurisdiction as they at present stand; that is, Great Britain holding, in fact, possession of a part of said territory, and the government of Maine denying her right to such possession, and the state of Maine, holding, in fact, possession of another portion of the same territory, to which her right is denied by Great Britain."

FAMINE IN NEWFOUNDLAND. The extracts below, from Newfoundland papers, exhibit a scarcely creditable state of distress in that province. The governor has authorized the commissioners of the poor to expend the sum of £200 from the treasury. £240 has been also given for this purpose by the Irish society.

Distress in the bay.—On Saturday and Monday last, our streets presented a melancholy appearance—about, we suppose, two hundred poor females came from the north shore, to seek relief from the benevolent Irish society of this town, which society had given fifty pounds for the poor, and these poor creatures had scarcely a garment to cover their nakedness. We have been informed by several gentlemen from Lower Island Cove, that on their way to this town, they called on several poor families, and found them in a sad state of starvation. Some families, they stated, had not eaten a morsel from Sunday morning until Wednesday evening, and others from Monday until Wednesday—and we are convinced, from the reports that are hourly coming in from that quarter, that this is not the only case in which starvation must put an end to their sufferings, unless relief is shortly given them.

[Carbonar Sentinel.

The reports which continue to reach us relative to the famine which prevails in the remote settlements of this bay, are of the most harrowing description. We have no hesitation in saying that within a circuit of twenty miles of Harbor Grace, there are hundreds of families who have not within their respective dwellings, an ounce of the common necessities of life—and who, for weeks past, have been subsisting upon a single meal a day, and this, too, in many instances, of the most wretched and nauseating character. [Harbor Grace Star.

MAINE FLOUR. The value of the agricultural resources of Maine, are by no means appreciated. Dr. Jackson however, has done much in his geological reports to enlighten the public in relation to this subject. He has called attention to the rich lands which are to be found in this state, well calculated for all agricultural purposes—to the fertile and productive soil in the valleys of the numerous rivers which intersect the country in all directions. The action of the legislature of 1838, in granting a bounty for the production of wheat has also tended directly to assist in developing the agricultural resources of this state and we are by no means certain that Maine will not be looked upon in the course of a few years, as the granary of New England.

It is generally known that large quantities of wheat were raised in various parts of Maine during the last year. It is proved beyond a doubt, that the soil and the climate are both well adapted to the culture of this most valuable species of grain, and we truly entertain the prospect that the present year are truly encouraging. The season should prove propitious, a larger quantity of wheat will doubtless be raised than the most sanguine friends of agriculture in that state predicted a few years ago would ever take place. It is not, however, generally known that the wheat raised in Maine is of excellent quality, and that the flour manufactured from this wheat, if the process be properly executed, is surpassed in excellence by none on this continent. A few barrels of flour made from wheat raised on the farm of F. A. Butman, in Dixmont, Penobscot co. Me. and manufactured in mills belonging to Mr. Butman, were lately brought to this city. We were so fortunate as to become the purchaser of one of these barrels—and if this is a fair specimen of "down east" flour, commend us to "down east" flour forever after, say we. The bread made from this flour excels in delicacy of color that made from any other quality of Maryland or Pennsylvania flour—it is probably more nutritious, and unless our organs of taste are sadly out of tune, it is superior in flavor to bread made from any other flour, of which it has ever been our lot to partake.

THE BEMIS CASE. We see, by the report of the proceedings of the legislature of Pennsylvania, that a bill has been passed by the lower house of that assembly, for the trial of Messrs. Bemis and others, of Hartford county, in this state, who stand indicted in York county, Pa. for bringing away certain of their slaves, whom they found in that county, without obtaining, as the laws of Pennsylvania require, the order of a judge for their removal.

It will be recollectd that this case occupied a considerable portion of the time of the legislature of our state, at its session of 1837, and that a resolution was adopted authorizing the governor to appoint a commissioner to visit Harrisburg, and to make known to the legislature of Pennsylvania, the desire of Maryland that the questions involved in the case should be taken up for decision to the supreme court of the United States. Jonathan Meredith, esq. of this city, was appointed the commissioner, and as he is now in Harrisburg, we suppose that the law, recently passed by the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, is intended to meet the wishes of Maryland.

The questions involved in this case are deeply important to the slave-holding states of the union, and it was this that caused the legislature of Maryland to adopt the course pursued. Among the questions are:

1st. The right of a citizen of a slave-holding state to pursue his fugitive slaves into a non-slave-holding state, and to bring them away without a resort to the judicial tribunals.

2d. The right of a master to the produce of his fugitive slave, born of her in a non-slave-holding state.

3d. The constitutionality of the laws of Pennsylvania on the subject of fugitive slaves.

SOMETHING SINGULAR!! We have to announce what will no doubt be new to most of our readers, that in Cincinnati—a city bordering the southern extremity of the state of Ohio—a state of which corn is a staple production,—within ten years ago was almost a drug, and it could be had in quantity a bit a bushel—yes, in this city, the article of corn has become so scarce, that it will bear importation.

from the far west! A mercantile friend informs us that thousands and thousands of bushels of shelled corn have been brought to Cincinnati within the last week or two, which were shipped from Illinois and even Iowa territory! We asked, can it be possible! It is even so! This corn has come down the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, up the Ohio river, landed at Cincinnati, sold at a fair profit, put on board our canal boats and sent into the interior of Ohio. We asked our informant, what use our interior could make of it! Why, sir, most of it will be manufactured into whiskey, in that shape it will be sent back to Cincinnati, and from thence it will find its way, much of it, to the very same points from whence it started.

Who would have believed, if told ten years ago, that corn brought some two thousand miles, from Iowa territory, could have sold at a profit in the great agricultural counties of Butler and Warren, in the state of Ohio?

Is there not reason to fear that our agricultural interests are too much neglected? Come, come, citizens of Ohio patronize and spur up your agricultural societies!

STATE OF THINGS IN MISSISSIPPI—AWFUL!—Copy of a letter addressed to one of our commission houses in New Orleans:

Brandon, 1st May, 1839.

Gentlemen: Yours of the 25th ult. received; and in reply I can say nothing calculated to afford you any satisfaction. The whole of the affairs of Mississippi is in the most confused and disorganized condition: The collectors of money are put at defiance, and laughed to scorn: Circuit judges are refusing to hold courts, and when they do hold them, they quash the bonds and executions that have been for the last year or two maturing: Sheriffs openly refuse to execute the process of the law, and the Brandon bank has joined in the general outrage, by procuring the sheriff of this county to receive its paper on executions, on its promise to redeem it at court; but our court is just passed—the sheriff's office is full of Brandon paper—and the bank now has the effrontery to say she has no means to redeem a dollar of it.

But to the subject. Most of the forthcoming bonds in this county were by the judge quashed; and when they were not quashed, Brandon money was taken by the sheriff where any collections at all were made. Some of the bonds assigned to you were quashed, and the securities to them released, and the debt to the principal twelve months longer to pay the debt; this in many cases will much endanger the collection of the money. Where I should have received thousands this court, I have not collected one dollar; nor do I intend to gratify this corrupt and abandoned bank by taking its foul issue from the sheriff's hands.

I know that these things are a grievous hardship on creditors, and especially such as have been as indulgent as you have been with —; but I know of no remedy until we can obtain officers of sufficient firmness and integrity to enforce the laws. I showed —, your letter on the subject of commissions, but could get from him no answer. I should like to hear from you as to these things. Very respectfully, yours, &c.

LANDS IN OHIO. A sale of lands, the property of the heirs of David Pierce, jr. was recently made in Gallipolis, Ohio. The lands sold, lie in the counties of Washington, Adams, Meigs, Mercer and Gallia. They amounted in the whole to 5,546 acres—being five shares of the Ohio company's purchase. These lands were appraised in September last under an order of court, the appraisement amounting to $14,069 66. They were sold by auction, part at Marietta, on the 25th April, and the remainder at Gallipolis, as before mentioned; and brought an aggregate of $22,051 12; being something more than fifty per cent. advance upon the appraisement prices. The Gallipolis Journal remarks, in noticing this sale: "But few of the above lands were considered as having been sold at a high price, and many of them were extremely low.—The terms of sale were one-half paid down, the other half in one year without interest." From all of which it would seem that Ohio lands are "looking up."

COMMODORE ELLIOTT. In consequence of the rumor that commodore Elliott had protested against the proceedings of the court of enquiry in his case, the following statement has been published by his friends:

The following is a copy of the paper presented by commodore Elliott to the court:

"The precept convening the court of enquiry in this case, authorises them to inquire into certain specific complaints and charges urged against captain Jesse D. Elliott, which are set forth, 'and also to inquire into the official conduct generally of the said captain Jesse D. Elliott, while commanding the United States naval forces in the Mediterranean sea in the years 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838.' The letter of the secretary of the navy, of the 22d April, 1839, extends this inquiry to his conduct while commanding the Constitution in Hampton Roads."

"With great respect for the authority from which the order organizing the court emanated, and a proper diffidence in his own judgment, captain Elliott states that this general form of enquiry is not in accordance with precedent or authority; but he distinctly waives the objection thereto, and desires that every ground of complaint may be fully inquired into. In order, however, to prepare for his defence, he requests a specification of the charges and complaints intended to be exhibited and preferred against him, under the general clause above quoted, as well as the names of the accusers (if any) and of the witnesses intended to be respectively examined upon said charges."

When the paper was presented the judge advocate stated that he could not give any specification of the charges. That it was a general enquiry into the official conduct of commodore Elliott, and that the official conduct of commodore Elliott, and every ground of complaint made by the witnesses in the course of examination. The court then said that if the judge advocate would comply with the request of commodore Elliott, it would be a great convenience to all concerned, and promote economy of both time and expense; but as the judge advocate could not, from the nature of the inquiry, comply with the request, the court would give commodore Elliott ample time to prepare for his defence. The president of the court wished commodore Elliott to file the first part of the above relative to the form of enquiry, in order that the attention of the navy department might be called to its peculiar character; but commodore Elliott stated that the nature of the paper might be better understood if but a part of it were published, declined, and at the suggestion of the court, with the concurrence of the judge advocate, the whole paper was withdrawn.

THE LIFE BOAT. We are pleased to learn that government has ordered one of Francis's patent life boats for the cutter Madison, of this port, and that it has arrived at the present week. The boat is about 30 feet in length. The manufacturer gives assurance that it may have a dead weight of 1,500 pounds of iron placed in her bottom, and as many men get in and about her as can—that all plugs may be taken out, leaving her bottom open, and then if all the engines in Portsmouth should play into the boat at once, they could not get her below the surface. We have before us an engraving and extended description of the boat, with certificates from the best informed naval and maritime men, which may be seen by those who feel desirous of attaching one of these important appendages, which no ship should be without. In how many cases valuable lives of our townsmen might have been preserved by a life boat at hand, it is not for us to decide; the cause of humanity, however, demands attention.

The following extract is from a report made by lieutenant Edmond de Chaille, of the French steam frigate Yeloc:

"During my visit at Washington, I was exceedingly interested in the examination of a life boat, invented by Mr. Joseph Francis, an American boatwright. The beautiful system of simplicity with which Mr. F. has constructed this boat, will enable her to navigate amid the most boisterous surges without the least danger of capsizing. She may even be broken in a partial degree, and yet retain her buoyant qualities.

"In case of shipwreck, she is eminently qualified to save the crew of the ship. She may, with great facility, be sent off from the shore, where the coast is lined with dangerous rocks or shoals, in aid of vessels in distress, and render them great assistance by carrying out lines or warps in severe tempestuous weather. In short, to serve in all respects as a perfect life boat, insubmersible.

"After several experiments, I plunged the boat into the water, so as to fill her entirely, and the moment she was let at liberty she instantly rose upon the surface from her own impulsion; the water which she contained making its escape rapidly from her sides. There are several openings in her which allow the water to run out, from which cause the boat always keeps her position above water, even though she should be injured by a shot or stove against a rock.

"Vainly did I endeavor to upset this boat by centreing her on one side until the water came in; the centre of gravity being so placed in this new construction, that the boat is always brought back to her natural position, the water constantly discharging itself with great facility.

"I am the more of opinion that this is a most excellent boat, and that it would be very advantageous to every vessel to have at least one boat of this construction, which is as simple as elegant.

"Upon the whole, I am induced to think, that this invention of Mr. Francis's is calculated to afford the most important services to navigators of every country, and to all mankind."

THE SAILORS' CAUSE. It is gratifying to witness the exertions now making among the humane and enlightened, in the seaports of the United States, for the amelioration of the condition of the poor sailor. There is no class of persons to whom humanity has done so little justice, and none for whom humanity has done so little. The neglect with which the seaman has been treated, so far as regards his mental and moral culture, is a disgrace to civilized Christian nations. We are glad to see, from recent proceedings, that New Orleans is resolved no longer to lie under this reproach. A society called the New Orleans Port society, auxiliary to the American Seamen's society, has been organized for some time in this city and in full operation. The celebration of its anniversary took place last Sabbath in the church on Lafayette square. The hon. J. W. Breedlove, the collector of our port, was called to the chair, and presided during the progress of the meeting. After some preliminary proceedings, the report was read by the chaplain and secretary of the society, Rev. Mr. Loring. From the report, we learn that the labors of this benevolent institution have accomplished much good during the last twelve months. A reading room has been opened, where sailors attend in considerable numbers. A boarding house has been established on the temperance principle, where the honest jack tar can find comfortable lodgings and good society; and thus avoid the besetting influences of the usual haunts of vice and dissipation. The happy effects of these efforts, are seen in the reformation of many, who were once the victims of intemperance and its kindred evils.

Reports were also read from other societies in the United States, showing beyond all question the practicality of ameliorating the condition of the seaman, and elevating him in the scale of civilization and moral dignity. In fact the result of the establishment of these societies has been every where, not only to afford the sailor a place of refuge from temptation; a home—but the means also of gaining admission into a good and respectable society, where various associations and influences operate to the reformation of his character. During the course of the exercises several addresses were delivered. Among the speakers none excited more interest than the honorable Mr. Buckingham, the celebrated oriental traveller. He opened his remarks by justly claiming to be heard in behalf of sailors—since he was of the fraternity—"cradled on the billows"—he had passed his youth among them—had made the sailor's life his profession—(the hon. gentleman, we understand, has held a distinguished rank in the royal navy). He bore testimony to the chivalry and virtues of their character. He commented on the merits they possess as the pioneers in discovery of new countries—as the bold spirits that opened the way and penetrated the way to a new world; that science and commerce, security from foreign invasion, the enjoyment of luxuries at home, and other countless benefits, are the products of their energy, skill and toil. The hon. gentleman's remarks, and the plans he proposed excited so great an interest that it was deemed proper and advisable to give another opportunity to the public of hearing them, and operating upon measures for the advancement of the cause. The meeting was therefore adjourned till to-morrow evening, at the same place, 71-2 P. M.

AMERICAN SAILORS IN THE ENGLISH NAVY. It is a fact well known to many of our officers, that a large portion of the seamen in the English navy are now composed of Americans; and this disposition to sail under the British flag is more in vogue than ever. As a recent among our tars at present that more than forty of the crew, who were discharged from the frigate United States in this port, have since re-shipped in Liverpool for the British service. We cannot account for this, except that the admiralty have offered the greatest encouragement to sailors entering their service. During the wars of the continent, when it became necessary to keep the whole navy of Great Britain at sea, no means was left untried to entrap sailors in the service, and every temptation was thrown in their way, to keep them quiet in their state of dependence. But the evil consequences arising from this system of coercion, have caused a great change in the mode of treatment; salutary laws, making it compulsory upon captains of vessels to give liberty to their men at stated periods, and doing away with corporal punishment, except by trial of drum-head court-martials (technically called) and various others, have had a wonderful effect in dissipating the unpopularity of that service.

We are of the opinion, too, without reference to the importance of many beneficial laws, made for the encouragement of seamen, that the English service holds out much the most lucrative situation. In our service a seaman receives twelve dollars monthly wages, with no small stores allowed, whereas, in the British service, a seaman's wages are £2 10s. with small stores, amounting to fourteen or fifteen dollars per month, and clothes furnished at a much less expense than in ours. This difference is owing to the bill for the payment of our seamen having passed congress as far back as 1798 being graduated by the standard for labor at that time; and since this, though the value of labor has so much increased, nothing has been done. It is to be hoped that this government will take this subject into consideration, and make some legislative provision for the protection of a class of men who, from their hardships and sufferings, are entitled to more sympathy than any other persons in the world.

HOUSE OF REFUGE DESTROYED. Between eight and nine o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the centre building of the house of refuge, and was not extinguished till that and the wing nearest the Bloomingdale road were totally destroyed, the walls only having been left standing. When we left the place at 12 o'clock the fire was nearly subdued, but the engines were still playing upon the ruins.

There were about two hundred boys confined in the buildings, two or three of whom, it is supposed, escaped during the confusion. The greater part of the remainder, we are informed by the superintendent, worked manfully to stay the progress of the fire, and it was mainly owing to their exertions that the property in the building was saved.

There is no other way to account for the origin of the fire, than to suppose that it was designedly communicated by some of the boys. There was an insurance upon the premises, but probably not sufficient to cover the pecuniary loss.

This is the second disastrous fire with which the refuge has been visited. The first destroyed a spacious new building, about three years ago, very soon after its erection, which had been designed for the female department. That edifice was not rebuilt, for the reason that the proprietors of the surrounding property were then concocting measures to force a removal of the institution to another locality. Their purpose was accomplished, and the present calamity will be the less severely felt by the board of managers, from the circumstance that the new buildings are almost ready for use.

The new locality is upon the margin of the East river, south of, and contiguous to, the Bellevue almshouse. In consideration of the removal, and the relinquishment of the buildings now partially destroyed, the corporation gave the board of managers the building on the East river known as "the fever hospital," built in 1824. Another spacious edifice has been erected on the premises, which we believe is nearly completed. The situation is very beautiful, and will be found in all respects more eligible than the present—albeit the managers will miss their shrubbery, their fruits and flowers, and their vineyard. [N. Y. Com. Advertiser of May 22.]

DEBT OF NEW YORK CITY. The official communication of the mayor of New York to the common council states that the funded debt of that city on the 1st instant, exclusive of the loans for the construction of the Croton aqueduct, and to indemnify certain persons for property blown up during the great fire, was $1,123,900. Including said loans, $3,948,953. Increase of debt during the year ending 1st May, $56,694, exclusive of fire and water loans. The city owns real estate to the estimated value of $15,663,913, producing an annual income of 166,192. A large proportion of the property is unproductive. The amount thus far expended upon the aqueduct is $2,326,976. About eleven and one-fifth miles of the work have been completed, being about a quarter of the whole distance.

The expenses of the almshouse department have amounted, during the year, to the enormous sum of $250,000, including $23,000 paid for salaries of officers, &c. In addition to the expense of their living. Amount expended for out-door poor, 28,364 dollars. The mayor urges the necessity of diminishing the expenditures of this department.

The expense of cleaning the streets amounted last year to about $150,000. Number of miles of street to be cleaned, 134. Formerly this department was a source of profit rather than expense to the city. The mayor suggests the expediency of leasing out parts or sections of the city for cleaning, at auction, annually.

The public schools of the city comprise 16,395 pupils: Amount expended $100,000.

The amount received for commutation of alien passengers, was last year only $11,887 50; in 1837, $67,523 50; in 1836, $37,338.

OLD SCHOOL PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY. The whole of the morning session was occupied with exercises connected with the 50th anniversary of the general assembly. The proceedings throughout were full of interest, and were listened to and participated in, with deep attention by a large number of persons.

In the afternoon, after the transaction of some business of minor importance, the second report from the committee on the state of the church, was taken up, and considered in detail. It is conciliatory in its character, and is intended to bring about an amicable adjustment of the difficulties between the two bodies, and to prevent further litigation.

As soon as we can obtain a correct copy, as finally acted upon, it shall appear in our columns.

NEW SCHOOL GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. Tuesday May 21st.—After the proceedings had been opened with solemn prayer, the meeting proceeded to the order of the day.

The assembly resolved itself into an intecoury meeting, when several memorials were presented and read on the subject of slavery.

An informal discussion took place in reference to the memorials, in which Mr. Ranken, Dr. Hill and other members took part.

No action took place on the subject.

After the usual recess, the assembly in afternoon session, nominated delegates to the corresponding societies of Massachusetts, Maine, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and other states.

A SKETCH FROM LIFE. An old fellow, whose name we veil under that of Hunkis, died in the adjacent town of Charlestown, last week, who had been a capital subject for Dickens, and might have sat to Scott for his immutable character of Trappois in the Fortunes of Nigel. He was a miserly, close-fisted old hunk, a real skinflint, who, it was supposed, by his neighbors, had scraped together, as such characters will, in one way and another, a considerable amount of money. This was not known, however. Some said that he had money concealed in the earth; others, judging from the slovenly manner in which he lived and dressed, that he had nothing but the few acres which he cultivated. He lived like the poorest, shutting his door upon every intruder—fill at last death knocked, and he was obliged to open.

During his sickness, he was wont to send daily for a succession of silver and gold, hid in the wall of his cellar, which he would count over with that feeling of painful delight, which inhabits the bosom of the miser alone. "Disease, however, wore down his frame rapidly, and at last, he was unequal to the task of going through his daily custom of counting the pieces in his purse, and could only as they were displayed before him, pat them softly with his hands, as a lady pats her favorite dog on the back. One day, during the last stages of his disease, he sent for a neighbor, and expressed a wish to impart a secret to him. Go down the cellar, (said he), and in the further corner you will find a tub. Raise it, and you will see a shingle, beneath which is a box." The individual followed the directions, and found a box of specie. "Now go to another corner" (said the miser), describing the place. Another box was found, embedded in the earth.

A day or two after, when he found he must leave all his earthly treasures, he desired to see raised up in his bed. His request was granted, when he immediately reached out his skinny hand beneath his pillow, and low—another box was found cunningly concealed containing about five hundred dollars in French gold pieces, which it is understood he took from one of the banks about the time of the suspension of specie payments. All these buried treasures were given in the keeping of his neighbor for the benefit of others. He said there was one other box, but that he didn't like to tell where it was; as he might want it himself. He however consented to write the place of interment on a piece of paper, so that the secret might not perish with him. He died soon after, and his hidden treasures—no inconsiderable sum—were counted over at the close of the funeral ceremonies.

This died, at an advanced age, one whose only aspiration, through a long life, seems to have been the hoarding of specie and burying it, where it could be of no earthly benefit to any one—a perfect miser—a lover of money, not for the blessings which it might impart and diffuse around him, but for its own sake—not for the name of possessing it—for he feigned, and was thought to be poor—but because the mere habit of acquisition had become a passion, and the bare consciousness of possession was a pleasure—a phantom of delight, which he could hug with rapture to his bosom. Well will it be for such if they have laid up treasures in heaven as well as on earth. But we will not sermonize—the lesson conveyed by the sketch is left with the reader.

POVERTY IN DUBLIN. A gentleman writing from Dublin to a London journal says: three thousand and four hundred beggars, in all their filth and rags, are now marching past my windows as I write; some of them carrying placards, with various statements of the condition of the mendicity institution—"eight hundred pounds in debt for food alone" is one of them—"we must beg or starve," another. Heading the procession are the benevolent gentlemen of the committee, and after them several floors filled with the children of the schools! The poor lasts will not come into operation until next year; in the mean time the immense number of wretches may perish, if not supported by the citizens. The poor law commissioners have no power to advance money, nor will the government.

The reason of marching such a procession through the streets is stated by the writer to be, that "since the poor laws bill passed, the public have ceased to give the usual voluntary contributions to the mendicity institution. Appeal after appeal has been made to them in vain, and the only alternative the managing committee have is to march them in procession through our most fashionable and crowded streets. Phila. North Amer.

A LEARNED BLACKSMITH. Mr. Elisha Burnett, the learned blacksmith, illustrates fully what a man can accomplish under almost any circumstances, if he possesses only application. Mr. B. has worked for many years as a blacksmith, and continues now to labor two-thirds of the day at the anvil, in Worcester. The other portion of time he devotes to his studies, and already he has acquired a knowledge of five different languages. Last year he addressed a letter to the president of the royal society of antiquaries in France, written in Celto Breton, one of the provinces in that kingdom, but now an obsolete language. The president of the academy replied to his letter, and the correspondence has been published in a volume just issued by the society in Paris, a copy of which has been sent to Mr. Burnett, of Worcester. He certainly has made great acquisitions as a linguist, and discovers most commendable application, if not mental power.

A RARE DOCUMENT. In looking over some old family papers which have been accumulating for more than a century, we came across the following original message from Gov. Tryon to the colonial legislature of North Carolina, then in session at Newbern. How it came into our possession, we know not, but it is an interesting memorial of by-gone days, and we therefore publish it. The hand writing is bold and free, and quite in keeping with the character of the communication:

[Raleigh (N. C.) Register.]

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the house of assembly.

Upon looking over the Votes of Your House, I find some Resolves upon Your Journals; Resolves, that, after the Assurance I had given You in my Speech, have sapped that Foundation of Confidence, and Gratitude; have torn up by the Roots every sanguine Hope I entertained, to render this Province further Service, if in Truth I have rendered it any; and made it my indispensable Duty, to put an end to this Session, as I shall therefore require Your Attendance on Monday next, when You will present to Me such Bills as may be then prepared.

Wm. TRYON.

Newbern, the 4th November, 1769.

THE WATER PINK. It is difficult in some case to draw the line between the animal and vegetable kingdoms.—The sensitive plant possesses qualities which entitle it to rank in both, but the most curious combination of vegetable and animal properties is met with in the water pink, and the animal grass which grows in port Mahon, in the Island of Minorca. They are thus described by Mr. Jones in his sketches of naval life:

As I sauntered along the shore of the Bahrer, my attention was drawn to a beautiful flower at the bottom, where the water was nearly a fathom in depth. It grew on a stock about three-eighths of an inch in diameter, and about ten inches in length, was, in shape like an inverted cone, about ten inches in diameter, and was variegated with brilliant colors, red, yellow and purple. It was a beautiful thing, and I wanted it so I determined to knock it off; hoping some chance might bring it to the shore, I threw and saw I struck it; when the water was cleared up, the stalk was there but I could not discover the flower.

After a vain search, I went on further, and came to another, near the shore, I thought I was sure of this, and got a stick to draw it to me, when as soon as I touched it—quash—the whole disappeared. It was all animal—flower and all. I have since procured several, and have preserved them. The stalk is formed by concentric coats of gristly matter, which is transparent when the outer one is removed. It is attached to the rocks below. This forms a tube, which is an animal about seven inches long, with two rows of feet in its whole length; at its upper end is the head, and rising from the latter the flower I have spoken of. This is formed by a vast number of fibres, each with an exceedingly fine and variegated fringe placed like that of a feather; they do not form a single cup, but several; and their roots are so ranged as to produce a spiral channel reaching to the animal's mouth. They have a strong sensitive power, and as soon as touched, are dragged by the animal into the stalk.

After a few minutes, it ascends again, and the flower spreads out as before; doubtless they are intended for taking food. A touch will spoil them, so delicate are they formed. I cut off the flower, and passed a paper under it in the water then by laying it on a board, and pouring water on it, spread it out as I wished it. They are of the ceraline species, and are called water pinks by the natives. I can take you, too, to parts of the harbor where the bottom is covered with tufts of grass, some green, some dark colored, some in plain tufts, and others with a star in the middle; this grass, too, is all animal, and if you touch it, will disappear in the ground. There is a large quantity of it just north of the Hospital island.

TWO DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The ship Hibernia, captain Cobb, arrived at New York on Thursday morning from Liverpool, whence she sailed on the 22d of April, two days after the Liverpool. The editors of the Commercial Advertiser have files of papers from London to Sunday the 21st, and Liverpool 2nd, both inclusive.

AFFAIRS OF IRELAND.

The grand debate on the Irish policy of ministers was brought to a close on the evening of the 19th, almost every member that ever spoke at all having taken part in it. The ministerial majority on the main question was 22, the vote being, for Sir Robert Peel's amendment 296, against it 318.

Mr. Duncombe's amendment was killed by a majority of 218—the vote being for the amendment 81, against it 299.

No other business of interest was transacted in the house of commons, except an arrangement that the bill for suspending the constitution of the island of Jamaica should have its second reading on the 22d, and that counsel should be heard at the bar upon it.

In the house of lords the names of lords Clarendon, Stradbroke and Portman were substituted for those of lords Lansdowne, Duncannon and Gosford, on the Irish committee of inquiry; the latter having declined serving.

Lord Abinger called the attention of the house to the progress of arming in Lancashire, stating that the magistracy were who took an active part in supporting the laws had apprehensions that their lives were in jeopardy.

A terrible scene occurred at Woolwich, at the infliction of his sentence upon a soldier who had been condemned to receive 150 lashes. A recruit had his feelings so harrowed by the scene that he went mad, shrieking dreadfully in his frenzy, and committing various acts of violence, so that it was with difficulty he was secured and taken to the hospital.

The London Sunday Times, of April 21, charges Mr. Freer (a comedian who has lately arrived in New York) with leaving his wife and family destitute in London; and also brings the same accusation against Mr. Burton now a popular actor in Philadelphia.

A female radical association has been established in Lancashire—the women doing all the speaking, although men are allowed to be present at the meetings.

The Chartists have commenced a regular system of drilling under the instructions of disbanded militia men; but using sticks instead of muskets.

The London Globe denies that it ever gave any authority for the reports circulated by some of the Tory papers, as if copied from its columns, announcing the approaching marriage of Lord Melbourne and the duchess of Kent.

If we may judge from the police reports in the London papers, the use of the Bowie knife is getting to be quite as fashionable in England as in Mississippi or Arkansas. No less than nine or ten cases of stabbing are reported in the journals before us.

A farther payment of 50 per cent. has been made by order of the queen, to the creditors of her father, the late duke of Kent. The funds provided for this payment are from the queen's privy purse.

The treaty so long in agitation, confirming the separation of Holland and Belgium, was signed on the 19th of April by the representatives of those kingdoms and of England, France, Austria, Russia, and Prussia.

There is no intelligence of interest from France except the fact that the opposition had been successful in electing three of the four vice presidents of the chamber of deputies. The four elected were Calmon, Teste, Etienne, opposition; and Cuningrède, ministerial.

No ministry had yet been formed, but marshal Soult was still negotiating for that purpose.

There is nothing new from Spain.

The following which we copy from Galignani's Messenger, is "important if true."

We have received the following from a correspondent at Cairo, dated the 26th ult. "The pasha of Egypt has declared to colonel Campbell his intention of abolishing slavery immediately in all the countries subject to his authority. This declaration has given universal satisfaction to the Europeans in this city. The pasha speaks with great exultation of the moral and political effects of his visit to Nubia and Abyssinia. He has left 700 workmen and miners to work his gold mines on the white Nile, which he expects will prove highly profitable.

London society for teaching the blind to read. The first annual meeting of the friends of this institution took place on the 19th of April, the marquis of Cholmondeley in the chair.—He was supported by the bishop of Chester, colonel Southerby, captain Clarke, rev. Messrs. Hughes, Beamish, &c. &c. There were upwards of 1,000 ladies and gentlemen present. A group of the little blind pupils was on the platform.

The report stated that the school was opened on the plan of the late ingenious Mr. Lucas, of Bristol, who had taught several children to read with great expertness, off embossed stenographic letters of his own invention. The school was now in operation in Gloucester street, Queen square, Bloomsbury. Since January, 1838, it had received 26 males and 27 females, of whom 12 could read with facility. There were now in the school 33 children. Some who could not pay, were taught for $10 for six months, the destitute were taught gratis. Other useful arts were also taught. Her majesty the queen and queen Adelaide were at the head of the manufacturers. The bishop of London was president. The receipts for the year had been £347, of which there was a balance £23. Several speeches were delivered in support of the society. Several of the children read well before the audience. A liberal collection was made; thanks were then voted the noble chairman, who is a warm friend to the school, and the meeting separated.

STILL LATER FROM ENGLAND.

By the packet ship England, captain Benjamin L. Waite, the editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received London papers to the 23d of April, and Liverpool to the 24th, both inclusive. The England sailed on the 24th.

The parliamentary proceedings on the 22d were of very limited interest. The Jamaica government bill had its second reading in the house of commons without discussion. Sir Robert Peel expressed his hope that the bill would not be treated as a party question, and avowed his determination to support the measure if, after hearing counsel against it there should appear to be a real necessity for its adoption. He thought, however that time should be allowed the colonial house of assembly to reconsider and reverse their decision.

Mr. Burge was then introduced and proceeded to address the house against the bill, as agent for a number of the inhabitants of Jamaica. He concluded at a late hour, and the farther discussion was postponed until the next day.

At the date of the latest advices from Paris—Sunday, April 21—the following list was in circulation, as likely to be gazetted on Monday:

Sont; president of war; Thiers, foreign affairs; Dupin, justice; Passy, interior; D'Argout, finances; Sauzet, instruction; Dufaure, commerce.

From the Liverpool Courier, April 24.

Trade. There was rather more business done in Rochdale piece market last week; but there is no improvement in prices. The wool market has been more than usually dull, and very few sales have been effected at any price.

Leeds markets continue very dull; there are very few buyers, and they are very difficult to please, and there is every appearance so far that we shall have a very dull trade this spring. Buyers are extremely cautious, and will not buy to any extent.

At Halifax market last week, the sales were considerable for all kinds of goods, and stocks moderate, with no variation in the value of any article. Wool in good sale at steady prices.

There was a slight falling off last week at Huddersfield in some descriptions of fancy goods; but Tweeds, doe-skins and other fancy woollens of new styles are still in great demand; and our coarse woollens are purchased freely for export. Light fancy goods, such as waistcoating, move freely at good prices. Wools of finer descriptions remain firm, while worse qualities are a shade higher, and rather scarce. There is a pretty good business doing in the warehouses; and, on the whole, a satisfactory business is doing.

During the last week an average amount of wool changed hands at Bradford, but the consumers still complain of the disproportion between the prices of the raw material and the manufactured goods. Prices of yarn remain firm, and a fair business is doing. We cannot quote any improvement in goods: from the poor demand and extreme low prices, manufacturers are placed in a very unenviable situation.

From the London Morning Herald, April 23.

The state of the money market, either on the stock exchange or in the commercial market, does not require much comment. Symptoms of eassness, have, however, presented themselves to-day, which have had a tendency to improve the quotations in the British and foreign funds. The former are decidedly firmer than they were at the close of last week, and consult left off to-day at the improved rate of 92 7-8 for money, and 93 a 93 1-2 for the account. The three-and-a-half per cent. reduced annuities are 99 1-2 a 99 1-8, and the new three-and-a-half per cents 100 5-8 a 100 7-8 for money. In banking shares, British North American are 14 premium.

London corn exchange, April 22.

Markets, &c. In consequence of the large supply of English wheat being could not be effected without giving way in price 2s. to 3s. per qr. on pickled samples, and 3s. to 4s. per qr. on middling and inferior parcels, but as much of this day's showing was of very superior quality, being both heavy and in fine condition, many of our leading millers appeared more disposed to get into stock, and a fair extent of business was transacted in home growth, while foreign met a slow sale, much such being offered at a decline of only 1s. to 2s. per qr. and the present arrivals are going into bond. Flour was without alteration in value, with limited sales.

Liverpool corn market, April 23.

Besides an import of 25,000 quarters of foreign wheat, and 15,375 bbls. American flour, there is this week an increase in the supplies generally. Of the foreign produce, the whole, except 3,420 quarters of wheat and 5,325 bbls. flour, has been liberated at the rate of 5s. 8d. per quarter. The import is now increased 108. 8d. and in a fortnight will probably reach 13s. 8d. per qr. Prices have been rather on the decline. The flour market has ruled dull; English and Irish manufacture is now offering at 45s. to 54s. per 280 lbs. United States sweet at 37s. to 38s. per bbl. of the latter, however, there is not much pressed for sale, many of the importers declining to accept present rates.

At to-day's market, which was numerously attended, a fair extent of business was transacted in wheat, at a decline of 4d. to 6d. on fine, and 2d. to 3d. per bushel on inferior descriptions. Flour was 1s. per sack cheaper.

Liverpool cotton market, April 22.

The demand to-day continues limited, the sales amounting only to 1,000 bales, taken by the trade at the previous rates of the week. The market continues flat, and the prices are rather lower to-day. The sales amount to about 2,000 bags—consisting of 150 Peruvian, at 9d. to 9 3-4d. 100 Maranh. 8 3-8d. to 9 1-4d. 450 Surat, 6 1-4d. to 7d. the remaining American, at 8 1-4d. to 10d. On Saturday, 800 bags were sold.

April 23. The sales to-day are 600 bales.

FRANCE.

The packet ship Poland has arrived at New York, from Havre, bringing Paris papers to the 31st March. We submit from the New York papers a summary of their contents.

On the 28th, marshal Soult had another interview with the king, in which he proposed, it is said, a new list of ministers, as follows: himself being minister of war and president of the council; foreign affairs, the Duc de Broglie; home minister, M. Passy; finance, M. Humann; of the navy, admiral Dupere; justice, M. Sauzet; commerce, M. Duchate; public instruction, either M. Teste or M. Cunin Gridaire. M. Guizot or M. Dupin, to be the president of the chamber of deputies.

The Duc de Broglie had consented, it was said, to come in under this arrangement, but only during the approaching session of the chambers.

One of the Paris papers says that in an interview with the king, on the 29th, M. Thiers expressed his willingness to accept a foreign mission, for the sake of removing the difficulties his presence occasioned in the way of forming a ministry, but that Messrs. Passy, Sauzet and Dufaure refused to join any ministry of which M. Thiers should not be a member, and that the arrangement proposed by marshal Soult therefore fell through.

The Moniteur Parisien formally contradicts the reports set on foot by some of the other papers, that military preparations had been made in Paris, in apprehension of popular commotions.

Three per cents, at 2 o'clock on the 30th, stood at 80c. 5c.

The fête of Longchamps was very much interrupted by rain.

There had been a young emute at the Prussian town of Cleves, the population of which is mostly Catholic. They wished to punish certain Protestant ministers for writing books unfavorable to the Catholic religion. The publishers shop was pillaged, and order was restored only on the arrival of troops from Wesel.

Intelligence had been received in Paris of signal punishment having been inflicted by the French frigate Heroine, upon the natives of Chatham island, for attacking the whaler Jean Bart. Two villages were destroyed.

The Belgian senate adjourned March 27, after concurring with the house in accepting the treaty as agreed upon by the five powers.

Haute market, March 30.

Cotton. So long as the ministerial crisis continues, commerce will be deprived of the necessary elements of prosperity. A complete calm prevails in the cotton market, the sales during the week amounting to only 200 or 300 bales per day. Some holders of American have submitted to a reduction of 1/4 a 2c. compared with last week's prices. Arrived during the week 124 bales, sales 1,724, stock on hand 69,000.

SPAIN.

A letter of the 25th inst. from Bayonne states, that a report had arrived on the 23d at Tolosa, from Cabrera, announcing that he had defeated the Christians in two actions, at Jesse and Alloya. Maroto had not yet quitted Estella, where he had been detained by serious illness. Typhus fever is said to be raging with destructive violence in several parts of Navarre.

EXTRACTS FROM THE HISTORY OF THE CANADIAN INSURRECTION.

BY THE HON. L. J. PAPINEAU.

The British government will be able perhaps for some time longer to continue its military occupation of the Canadas, but inasmuch as it has commenced a civil war against a people who had not provoked it—to whom it was not recommended—who wished it not when it broke out, that government has forfeited the right, and irrevocably lost the possibility of ruling those provinces.

Sixteen years ago I complained to Lord Bathurst, then colonial secretary, in accents of kindly felt grief, how heavy was the yoke, how humiliating the condition of our colonial servitude. He agreed with me in opinion, in somewhat the following terms. I give this conversation because it throws great light on the political views, on the secret apprehensions and hopes of England.

"I agree," said Lord Bathurst to me, "that for continental possessions, the population of which doubles in a few years, the system of government of which you complain can for those subject to it be only a period of stormy transition, of sickly change to be followed by bright days, an early organization of political existence and national independence. I even believe that the period of suffering will be short for you. French Catholics ruled by English Protestants, yours, it must be acknowledged, is a forced, unnatural position.

"You are too far from England properly to appreciate her, and too near the United States of America not to be dazzled by their deceitful prosperity. I ask you then for five and twenty years of patient resignation. Before the end of that time, however, I as a statesman foresee and foretell a violent separation of the different parts or the American confederation. England will then be prepared to grant to those colonies which will have remained faithful to her, both independence and institutions superior to those at present based on the federal compact.

"Democracy, disengaged from all counterpoise, would finally become impetuous and bring about a state of anarchy, whilst it would be the best government possible tempered with a hereditary magistracy, the perpetual existence of which would be guaranteed in all its splendor and force by means of hereditary peerages and entails. It is well understood that the British government would invest such honors in influential men such as you, if they would agree to lend themselves to such a wise arrangement.

"In giving your support to this plan, and in persuading your countrymen to receive it cordially, you would hasten for your country the era of happiness and power. Wealthy English families favorable to hereditary institutions, and rich families of the United States, at present disgusted in consequence of the feeble influence which the ascendancy of democracy has left them, would be attracted thither.

"You would, on the other hand, find in influential families as well within as out of the province, the material from which to constitute a strong government, which would contract with us an alliance offensive and defensive similar to that which binds Portugal to England. Thus you would have nothing more to fear from the encroachments of your ambitious neighbors. They are already too formidable, and capable, if possessed of the resources of Canada, though small, in addition to their own, of affecting British supremacy on the ocean.

"Now if ever England should descend to the rank of a third rate power, it would be a morture to humanity; for with institutions so perfect as her's, and a supremacy generally recognised, England is, on the continent, the main-stay of every oppressed people, on whose representations absolute governments have often been arrested in their tyrannical projects." * * *

Lord Bathurst promised reforms. None have been effected though the time is passed by.

The intinate friend of a great many of my brother representatives, honored by the esteem and confidence of all, inasmuch as they have for twenty years, often unanimously, always by large majorities, elevated me to the speakership of the house of assembly, I am intimately acquainted with all that has occurred in Canada up to the moment when the troubles broke out. I am acquainted with all the actions and opinions of twenty-five of my colleagues, and of many prominent citizens, some of whom have suffered death, others of whose lives, like me, had, at various times, been set on their heads, and been, like me, driven into exile without a trial, or closely confined, often unaccused, always without being confronted with their accusers; and afterwards liberated untried, although they urgently demanded verbally or in writing, a trial from the blood-stained dictator Colborne, or from the more hollow-hearted but not less vindictive dictator, Durham. For were they not all suffering from the same punishment? They were all guilty of the same crime. Their virtues were dear to their fellow citizens; odious to their foreign oppressors.

Now I defy the British government to contradict me, when I affirm that none of us had prepared, desired or even foreseen armed resistance. But that government had determined to rob the province of its revenue and of its representative system. It had determined to devote us, some to death, others to exile. * * *

no longer my business to be the accuser of the British government, that has been my duty for thirty years of my public life. That government itself has confessed its own guilt in the hundred and twenty folio pages which Lord Durham has just published. Systematical corruption, shameless peculations, antipathies against the people, revolting examples of irresponsibility in the public agents, plunder of the public domain; nothing is wanting in the picture of Canadian misery—a picture so hideous that its duplicate cannot be furnished except by the history of another British possession—

IRELAND. Yet the author has uniformly softened down his accusations against the power of which he is the organ, whose leagued agents in the colonies he would still preserve by means so pitiable that they destroy his reputation as a statesman.

Correct when it accuses those in power, false when it accuses the people, Lord Durham's report will serve also to prove that Canadian independence is an event in the interest alike of Old as of New France, and of importance to the whole human race. With this view I shall here give an analysis of that work, which it is moreover essential to be acquainted with in order to appreciate the morality of the facts which I intend to relate.

"During a long time," says the report, "the Canadians have been excluded from all participation of power; all the officers of trust and emolument have been vested exclusively in strangers of English origin.

"Till within a very few years this exclusion was accompanied by an insolence which was more revolting to a sensitive people than the monopoly of power and profit.

"The races had become enemies ere a tardy justice was extorted [by the Canadians]; and even then the government discovered a mode of distributing its patronage among the Canadians which was quite as offensive to that people as their previous exclusion.

"Ever ago, will the present generation of French Canadians yield a loyal submission to a British government, never again will the English population tolerate the authority of a house of assembly in which the French shall possess or even approximate to a majority." "The militia, on which depends the main defence of the province against external enemies, is completely disorganized. The attempting to arm or employ it would be merely among the enemies of the government.

"In 1832 the number of emigrants who landed at Quebec amounted to fifty-two thousand.—In 1838 it did not amount to five thousand. Insecurity begins to be felt by the loyal inhabitants in the seigniories, so that many of them are obliged to quit their occupations and seek refuge in the cities.

"No consideration can any longer overpower among the Canadians a feeling which absorbs all others—that of hatred against the English. To assuage their vengeance and enjoy a momentary triumph—they are ready to submit to any yoke—to aid any enemy. Their ancient antipathy against the Americans has terminated. An American invading army may rely on the co-operation of almost the entire French population of Lower Canada."

On the other hand, "every measure of clemency or even justice towards their opponents, they [the British] regard with jealousy, for they feel that being a minority, any return to the due course of constitutional government would again subject them to a French majority; and to this I am persuaded they would never peaceably submit.

"But the hostility of races (its) palpably insufficient to account for all the evils which have affected Lower Canada, inasmuch as nearly the same results have been exhibited among the homogenous population of the other provinces.—Lower Canada or the two Canadas have not alone exhibited repeated conflicts between the executive and the popular branches of the legislature. The representative body of Upper Canada was before the late election hostile to the policy of the government; the most serious discontents have only recently been calmed in Prince Edward's Island and New Brunswick; the government is still a minority in Nova Scotia; and the dissensions of Newfoundland are hardly less violent than those of the Canadas. It may fairly be said that the natural state of government in all these colonies is that of collision between the executive and the representative body.

"A state of things so different from the working of any successful experiment of representative government, appears to indicate a deviation from sound constitutional principles. . . . When we examine into the system of government in these colonies, it would almost seem as if the object of those by whom it was established, had been the combining of apparently popular institutions with an utter absence of all efficient control of the people, over their rulers. Representative assemblies were established on the basis of a very wide, and in some cases, almost universal suffrage; the annual meetings of the bodies were secured by positive enactment, and their attributes were locally nearly as extensive as those of the English house of commons. At the same time the crown almost entirely relied on its territorial resources . . . for carrying on the government without securing the assent of the representative body either to its policy, or to the persons by whom that policy was to be administered.

"In Lower Canada, from the moment the assembly evinced any inclination to make use of its powers, it found itself in collision with the executive, and the practical working of the assembly commanded by its principal leaders being thrown into prison. In the course of time, however, the government was induced, by its necessities, to accept the assembly's offer to raise an additional revenue by fresh taxes, and thus the latter acquired a certain control over the levying and appropriation of a portion of the public revenue in 1832."

The assembly after it had obtained the recognition of its rights was not more respected than before. "It could reject bills, grant or refuse supplies, but it could exercise no influence in the nomination of a single servant of the crown. Indeed instances are not wanting in which a mere hostility to the majority of the assembly elevated the most incompetent persons to posts of honor and trust. Laws passed after repeated conflicts, had to be carried into effect by those who had most strenuously opposed them.

"A governor arriving in a country in which he almost invariably has had no previous acquaintance, is compelled to throw himself almost entirely upon those whom he finds in power. He is generally brought thereby into immediate collision with the other parties in the country, and thereby thrown into more complete dependence upon the official party and its friends. . . . Fortified by family connections and the common interests felt by all who held, and all who desired subordinate offices, that (official) party was thus erected into a solid and permanent power, controlled by no responsibility, subject to no serious change, exercising over the whole government of the province an authority utterly independent of the people and its representatives, and possessing the only means of influencing either the government at home, or the colonial representative of the crown.

"The opposition of the assembly to the government was the unavoidable result of this system. . . . When nothing else could attain its end of altering the policy or the composition of the colonial government, it had recourse to that ultima ratio of representative power to which the more prudent forbearance of the crown has never driven the house of commons in England, and endeavored to disable the whole machine of government by a general refusal of supplies.

"The legislative council" (the second branch of the legislature is thus named) "must certainly be admitted to have been so composed as to give it no weight with the people or with the representative body, on which it was meant to be a check. The majority was always composed of members of the party which conducted the executive government, and was practically hardly any thing but a veto in the hands of the public functionaries.

"There is in it (the province) literally no power which originates and conducts the executive government. The governor, it is said, represents the sovereign; but he is in fact a mere subordinate officer, receiving his orders from the secretary of state and responsible to him for his conduct. . . . It has been the tendency of the local government to settle every thing by reference to the colonial department in Downing street, where it was next to impossible to have any sufficient information; and the colony has, in every crisis of danger, and almost every detail of local government, felt the mischief of having its executive authority exercised on the other side of the Atlantic. . . . The repeated changes (of ministry) caused by political events at home having no connection with colonial affairs, have left to most of the various representatives of the colonial department in parliament, too little time to acquire even an elementary knowledge of the condition of those numerous and heterogeneous committees for which they have both to administer and to legislate. . . . Since 1827 there have not been in the eight or ten colonial ministers, and the policy of each successive statesman has been more or less marked by a difference from that of his predecessor. . . . The most important business of government was carried on not in open discussions or public acts, but in a secret correspondence between the governor and the secretary of state. Whenever this mystery was dispelled it was long after the worst effects had been produced by doubts and misapprehension.

"The first want of a people is an efficient administration of justice. . . . Now it is a lamentable fact, which must not be concealed, that there does not exist in the minds of the people of this province, the slightest confidence in the administration of criminal justice.

"As for justices of the peace, the institution has become unpopular among the Canadians, owing to their general belief that the appointments had been made with a party or national bias.

"I am grieved to be obliged to remark that the British government has, since its possession of this province, done, or even attempted, nothing for the promotion of general education. . . . It has applied the Jesuits' estates, part of the property destined for purposes of education, to supply a species of fund for secret service, and for a number of years it has maintained an obstinate struggle with the assembly in order to continue this misappropriation."

Speaking of the colonies in which the population is unmixt and altogether English, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which formerly constituted French Acadia, and Prince Edward's Island, originally the Island of Saint John, the report continues:

"Their varied and ample resources are turned to little account. Their scanty population exhibits, in most portions of them, an aspect of poverty, backwardness and stagnation; and wherever a better state of things is visible the improvement is generally to be ascribed to the influx of American settlers or capitalists. Nova Scotia exhibits the melancholy spectacle of half the tenements abandoned, and land everywhere falling into decay. Lands that were every where forty or forty years ago at 5 shillings an acre are now offered for sale at 3s. . . . The people of Prince Edward's are permitting Americans to take out of their hands all their valuable fisheries from sheer want of capital. . . . These provinces, among the longest settled on the North American continent, contain nearly 30,000,000 acres, and a population estimated at the highest, at no more than 265,000 souls." [This population amounts only to 270,000.]

"What a contrast is afforded along the whole line of continuous frontier!

"On the American side all is activity and bustle, increasing wealth and progressive civilization.—Numerous harbors, containing numerous fleets, good houses, warehouses, mills, inns, villages, towns, and even great cities are almost seen to spring out of the desert.

"On the British side of the line . . . all seems waste and desolate.

"That painful but undeniable truth is most manifest in the country districts through which the wole line of national separation passes for 4,000 miles.—The difference in the price of land amounts in not a few parts of this frontier to as much as a thousand per cent. and in some cases even more. The average difference between Upper Canada and the states of New York and Michigan is notoriously several hundred per cent. The price of wild land in Vermont and New Hampshire, close to the line, is five dollars per acre, and in the adjoining British townships [of Lower Canada] only one dollar.

"Emigrants from Great Britain, instead of remaining in the colonies, fly in numbers to the states, and the entire population of Upper Canada, which should now have been 500,000" is in consequence "not over 400,000 souls." The emigrants to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick act in the same way.—"They generally proceed to the United States, as there is not sufficient encouragement for them in these provinces." Many of the old colonists follow the same example.

"Such are the lamentable results of the political and social evils which have so long harassed the Canadas; and at this moment we are obliged to adopt immediate measures against dangers so alarming as are rebellion, foreign invasion and depopulation, in consequence of the desertion en masse of a people reduced to despair."

Here we have British government portrayed by itself. Such is the flattering sketch of the condition to which those colonies have been reduced by an arrogant aristocracy which sets itself up as a model of wisdom and knowledge for nations to study and imitate, in order to learn how to govern themselves.

He who signed the above quoted report had the hardihood publicly to tell delegations in Canada—"it will not be a hundred years, nor three hundred years—nay, nor a thousand years that shall witness the separation of these provinces from the metropolis. They are one of the richest jewels in the crown, to which they must be an eternal dependence, and it is only to accomplish that object that I have consented to come hither, clothed with ample powers to secure it." If lord Durham believed not what he said, was there ever more shameless charlatanism?

The detailed history of lord Durham's mission would expose a degree of egotistical vanity almost incredible. His suite was composed exclusively of individuals full of vice and depravity, but who were not sparing of flattery; whilst he indecently repulsed those honest men who, on the faith of parliamentary eulogiums, approached to speak to him on any other subject than himself, or to bring him down from those giddy heights, where he was engaged in complacent reflections, on his own merits, to a land of tears and sorrows.

It is a singular selection as impudent as it was depraved did lord Durham, sent ostensibly on a mission of peace and conciliation, prove traitor to his engagements, or was he only a cheat entrusted with the announcement of a plan begun the preceding year, probably by the imperial government, assuredly by that of the province, to drive the people to desperation in order to justify past excesses, or to afford a pretext for future ones? Be this as it may, the dictator so closely allied himself, even before his departure from England, through the intervention of his nephew, Mr. Edward Ellice, who acted on the occasion as go-between, with the old anti-Canadian faction in London, that immediately on his landing he put himself in communication with their agents, those English merchants at Quebec and Montreal, who had always proclaimed undying hatred to the people of Canada and their representatives. It was they who, since 1808, had concocted the tyrannical plan of government [a union of the provinces] of which lord Durham alone assumes the disgraceful paternity. In 1822 they were on the point of surprising parliament out of a vote of approbation in favor of it, which was prevented only by the unforeseen opposition of the virtuous Sir James Blackintosh.

On this last mentioned occasion the systematic deoatization of the British government developed itself more stupidly and more unblushingly than ever.

One of its agents, the under secretary of the colonies, exclaimed in the house of commons—"Make haste, I beg of you, and adopt this bill before those interested become acquainted with it, for if you do not, I predict that you will be importuned by their complaints and opposition. . . . We are informed that the great majority of the people are successfully opposed by a majority of the people of the Canadas. Selected as bearer of the protests of my fellow citizens, I found, I must confess, on the part of a Tory ministry, conservative and absolutists as it professed to be, a kind reception and honorable deference.—The union of the Canadas of which I speak is now more odious, more universally reprobated than it was then. Yet lord Durham, "the people's peer," imposed upon by the intriguers who deceived lord Bathurst, supports it cordially, and will, according to all appearances, palm it on the whig ministry. This he will not find difficult, for this ministry, whilst professing liberality and reform, has in all its conduct toward the British colonies, audaciously violated the most sacred laws of humanity.

A young woman of twenty years of age reigns in England; and it is under such auspices that hundreds of persons have been condemned to death by the two Canadas, by exceptional tribunals,—by courts martial! To obtain the approbation of their sovereign, I must believe that ministers have done violence to those feelings of pity natural to her sex and her age—I must remember that monarchy in England is only an instrument in the hands of nobles; a brilliant bauble with which jugglers dazzle on stated days, the eyes of the crowd.

To the disorders of which lord Durham has unfolded the endless picture—to the disorders more numerous and serious which he has not even mentioned, what claim does he pretend to oppose? He has pointed out the benefits which liberty has produced among independent Americans—the evils which despotism has produced among English Americans. He has demonstrated the impossibility of the continuance of British sway in Canada, and he concludes—to maintain the same state of things. What fatal inconsistency!

An historical account, brief and impartial, of the events which have passed in my country during the last two years, will carry to all minds the conviction that it is not British statutes which will regulate the future fate of Canada—but that that fate is written in the declaration of the rights of man, and in the political constitutions which our good, wise and happy neighbors, the independent people of the United States, have framed for themselves. These know that their revolution is not yet completely terminated. In the opinion of her best men, that revolution shall not have been completed until the day when the union will have no longer any other bonds than a power which, since the treaty of 1783, has not ceased, even in times of absolute peace, to intrude in order to bring about a dismemberment of the confederation—a restless power which has excited Indian wars which it perfidiously fomented by the distribution of arms and supplies to the warlike tribes, and maintained itself in the violent occupation of certain portions of territory, notwithstanding by the terms of treaties, these should have been, long before this day, restored to the Americans.—In fine, an ambitious power which no longer holds possession in the Canadas, in the legitimate view of commerce and colonization, but as a military post which is preparing to pounce on the American confederation, in order to subvert it through its division and ruin.

LOUIS PAINÉAU.

CIVIL ENGINEERING IN AMERICA.

BY CAPTAIN BASIL HALL, E. N.

From the United Service Journal, for February.

The navigation of the American lakes is a topic of the highest importance to naval men, for though their waters be fresh, and their depths fathomable they may be truly considered as seas; and in all that relates to the difficulties and dangers of navigation, they are deserving of the respect of seamen who have passed their lives on the ocean. And we shall accordingly advert, presently, to one or two circumstances of considerable importance, which may not be known to many persons whose duty it may become to serve in those regions.

It is interesting, however, to consider in the first place how these mighty lakes have been dove-tailed, as it were into the sea; on the east with the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and on the south by the Gulf of Mexico. By means of the canal which joins the Ohio with Lake Erie, the communication is opened between them and the Mississippi, and thence with the sea; while by means and the Erie canal, and Lake Erie is connected with Lake Ontario, and this again is joined to the river St. Lawrence below its rapids, by means of the Ottawa canal, that of the "Staff Corps," and the "La Chine;" and thus with the Atlantic, which may be said to begin at Quebec. Or if the purposes of commerce require a different route, Lake Erie may be quitted at Buffalo, on the American side, and a course pursued along the great Erie canal and down the Hudson to N. York.

"That the reader," says Mr. Stevenson, "may be able fully to understand the nature of lines of inland navigation, so enormous, I shall give in detail the route from N. York to N. Orleans, which are constantly made by persons travelling between those places:

From New York to Albany, by the river Hud-	150
son the distance is,
Albany to Buffalo, by the Erie canal,	363
Buffalo to Cleveland, on Lake Erie,	210
Cleveland to Portsmouth, by the Ohio canal,	309
Portsmouth to New Orleans, by the rivers Ohio and Mississippi,	1,970

Total distance, 2,702

This extraordinary inland journey is performed entirely by means of water communication; 672 miles of the journey are performed on canals, and the remaining 2,030 miles of the route is river and lake navigation.

It may be well to pause here and reflect upon the vast means which these lines of communication afford for condensing the military resources of the nation at any one point; and which we surpassed the innumerable later ones by which the mighty rivers alluded to are kept in communication with the interior of the country, north, south, east and west of them, and take into account the canals, roads and rail roads which link the whole system together, and cover the land with a net work of highways, we may form some estimate of the prodigious force which so energetic a people as the Americans might bring to bear against an invading army. It is not likely indeed, that the United States will ever be invaded, but it is not less our duty to contemplate the difficulties of such an enterprise, and likewise to contemplate, with even more anxiety, the consequences which might attend any very unanimous feeling of hostility on the part of the Americans directed against Canada. We do not speak of such petty, marauding and disgraceful incursions as have lately disturbed the tranquillity of the frontier, and which, assuredly, found no sympathy in other parts of the union; but of any vast and simultaneous impulse, extending from end to end of that immense confederacy.

Without meaning any thing invidious, we may be permitted to speculate professionally on the time when the states, now so firmly united by the bonds of a common interest, may be ranged in hostile array against one another; and we defy the most active imagination to place limits to the extent and variety of military and naval contingencies which not merely may, but must, have place in a country so fertile in all the resources by which armies may be raised, maintained and put in motion.

It is the fashion to describe America as an empty country, with a virgin soil, and inexhaustible means of subsistence; but the truth is, that she is rapidly peopling up, and as the best soils are fully occupied, the inhabitants begin to jostle and rub shoulders at some places, very incommodiously; and although we may not, and probably shall none of us, live to see a break up in America, we think it by no means improbable that the present generation may see military demonstrations, and jealous movements of great professional interest; and it is on this account, as well as many others that we recommend to our professional brethren of both services, a more attentive consideration of the internal military resources of the United States than has hitherto been given to them. We allude now exclusively to the physical resources of that country, for it is not our present purpose as to consider those complicated political relations (such as the slavery question) which in the opinion of many of America's best friends threaten to set the nations composing their huge and incongruous confederation by the ears. Our object, however, is chiefly to draw attention to the wonderful capabilities which America presents for every kind of locomotion; and as speed and certainty in such matters are the points of most interest to us in professional point of view, we shall endeavor to show how well worthy of the attention of the united service the investigation is.

To begin with the great Canada lakes; Mr. Stevenson says, and we can bear witness to the justness of the observation, "that every idea connected with a fresh water lake must be laid aside in considering the different subjects connected with these vast inland sheets of water, which, in fact, in their general appearance, and in the phenomena which influence their navigation, bear a much closer resemblance to the shallow salted bays and sounds in which the harbors of the eastern coast of North America are situated, although those estuaries have a direct and short communication with the Atlantic ocean."

The line of coast by the lakes is about 4,000 statute miles in extent, and they have all water deep enough throughout their whole extent for the purposes of navigation. It was not, however, till the year 1818, that the navigation of the lakes became so extensive and important as to render the erection of light houses necessary; since then they have been gradually increasing, and there are now about five-and-twenty, besides about thirty beacons and buoys. Various harbors, too, have been formed, and it is a curious and instructive fact, that in consequence of the exposed nature of the lake coasts, the Americans have been obliged to execute these works in a much more expensive and substantial manner than those which they have erected on the shores of the great ocean itself; so that a neat close resemblance to the solid stone piers of the lakes, and the wooden wharves of the seaboard, as they call it, exactly the reverse of what we should expect. At Buffalo, for instance, there are compactly built stone piers, which cost about £40,000. At Dunkirk, on lake Erie, a breakwater has been formed, by sinking a strong wooden frame work, filled with stones. The frame or crib was erected, with the usual ingenuity and active resource for which Jonathan is so well distinguished, during the winter of the ice, over the site which it was intended to occupy. The ice was then broken, and the cribs, being filled with stones, sunk to their resting place in the bottom of the lake. Presque Isle bay, in which the town of Erie stands, is in like manner formed into a splendid anchorage for vessels of the largest size, by two covering breakwaters, measuring, Mr. Stevenson tells us, "respectively 3,000 and 4,000 feet in length, projecting from the shore, and leaving a space between their outward extremities of 300 feet in breadth, for the ingress and egress of vessels." At Oswego, on lake Ontario, a piece of solid masonry has been built, at the cost of £20,000. All these, and several others in the Lake Michigan, have been constructed at the expense and under the direction of the United States' government. On the English side of the lakes also, the British government have executed works of considerable importance, particularly at Kingston, which is the great naval arsenal, and lies just at the point where the St. Lawrence flows out of the lake.

The size of the vessels navigating the lakes is regulated in a great measure by the dimensions of the canals, and especially of the locks upon them; and hence, by the way, the wisdom of the framers of the Welland canal, which unites lakes Erie and Ontario on the Canada side, and steps round the falls of Niagara. These engineers, taking warning from their opposite brethren, who made the locks of the great canal of stone, made theirs of wood, and of much larger dimensions, though at a smaller cost. Independently of the advantages which this superior size gives them at present, they may at any time, and at a small expense, augment the dimensions, whenever the increasing demands of commerce, or the rapidly increasing size of the lake steamboats, require such change. We have no doubt whatever, from what we have seen and heard on the spot, that had the great Erie or New York canal been fitted in the first instance with wooden instead of stone locks, it would long ere this have been converted into a ship canal, instead of being confined as it now is, to the use of boats.

For the same reasons that the harbors and piers of the lakes are built of substantial masonry to resist the fury of the winds and waves, the steamboats which ply upon them have far more the character of sea boats than any of their steamboats employed anywhere else in the union. On first looking at the lakes, especially in fine summer weather, it is difficult to believe that these distinctions are necessary; but the sight of a lake gale, one of which we have witnessed, impresses the mind with a vast respect for their powers, when raised into action by the violent storms of those regions. We have dwelled rather longer on this particular than we had intended to do, from the importance which is attached to it in an engineering point of view, and from the curious analogies which Mr. Stevenson suggests between the phenomena of the lakes, and those which are found in such land-locked bodies of water as the Irish sea, where the waves are so short and sudden in their movements as to prove very destructive to whatever obstacle is opposed to their fury. We recommend, therefore, the part of Mr. Stevenson's work to the attention of our engineering friends, especially that part of the chapter on lake navigation which relates to the winter season.

The river navigation of America has no parallel in Europe, and to the shame of Europe this may be said. The Thames, the Mersey, and the Clyde, to be sure, are pretty well covered with steam vessels, and in proportion to their capabilities, these rivers may probably be fully as well served with means of conveyance as the mighty streams of the western world. But what shall we say to the shabby manner in which the Seine, the Rhine, the Rhone and the Danube, to say nothing of the Tazus, and the Ebro, and many other great rivers of the continent, are furnished with the marvellous means of swift and economical conveyance? It may be said, indeed, and with some truth, that in most of the countries of the old world, through which the rivers in question find their course, the industry of man has already provided convenient roads, along which the inhabitants have been accustomed for centuries to travel, and which they find so fully sufficient for all their locomotive wants, that they are not stimulated to seek for any other. In America the case is quite different; the roads are few in number, and execrable in quality; and as it would cost fifty times more money to cut tolerable roads through their forests, than to establish excellent conveyances on their rivers, the attention of the new settlers has been vehemently directed, in the first instance, to the improvement of river navigation. The invention of steamboats came at a good moment for cooperating with this disposition, and as fuel from the forests was almost every where abundant, and in abundance, the impulse which the new discovery received was immense. Not only the great rivers, such as the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio in the west, and the Hudson, Delaware and Chesapeake bays in the east, but a vast multitude of minor streams—minor we mean in comparison to those above mentioned, but gigantic in comparison to those of this country—became the highways of the respective states through which they passed, and by the agency of steam kept up a constant communication between the outposts and the remotest recesses of the interior.

Indeed we have never beheld, in any part of the globe, a more striking sight than is presented at New Orleans, that wonderfulemporium, which may well be called a sea-port, though it lies one hundred miles from the ocean, and is far above the level of the sea tide. There are at day long vessels arriving from every part of the world, with their sails furled, and towed, two or three at a time, in the train of a diminutive steamboat, urged into rapid motion by an engine of high pressure; while every evening about sunset, dozens of goods ships, laden with the return produce of the interior, depart in like manner, under the secure convoy of the same marvellous power. The interior products alluded to, are brought down partly in steamboats and partly on large rafts, called arks, piled high with cargo, which are drifted down the stream from immense distances, never to return. The hardy boatswomen, who navigate these primitive vessels, having disposed of their wares, and broken up their arks, take shipping immediately on board some one of the vessels which are starting every year for the upper countries, and in a few days find themselves landed at their own doors, ready to re-embark and re-descend the river—in one eternal round of active profit, sure of a market, sure of their returns—secure in their property, and as free in their thoughts and persons as the wild birds of the forest were before them! In old times, these arks dropped down the rivers with just the same facility as at present; but the time and trouble expended in conveying the return goods to the interior were enormous, and even the return of the traders themselves was an affair of laborious months, instead of being, as it is now, one of a few luxurious days.

All this is already pretty well known to most of our readers; but we strongly recommend to our professional brethren to take a military glance at the American rivers, and in connection with them those stupendous canals which have been made either to overcome natural obstacles, such as falls and rapids, which have been cent across those countries, in order to open communications heretofore not dreamed of by the wildest visionary. In a military point of view, the works of this description which are most worthy of immediate attention are those by which the difficulties on the navigation of the St. Lawrence are evaded, and those by which communication between the lower and the upper provinces of Canada are securely kept up by a line of canals, removed at an unassailable distance from the frontier. Besides these, (which though useful for the purposes of commerce, are, in their essence, purely military works), the Upper Canadians are beginning a gigantic work, close to the St. Lawrence. It is intended for the purpose of overcoming the celebrated Longue Saut rapid, and is to be 100 feet wide throughout all its length. The slack-water navigation, as it is technically called, on the Rideau, or grand military canal is well worthy of study. It is formed by damming up the waters of the Rideau river, and several of the lakes connected with it, and so increasing their depth as to fit them for steamers of a large size. The whole length of this most important national work, is 135 miles, 70 of which consist of the slack-water navigation just alluded to.

The severe and protracted winters of Canada, it must always be recollected, put a stop to the navigation and trade of the St. Lawrence, and of all the more northern canals, for four months and a half annually. The same misfortune attends the Erie canal; but from this evil the southern states are exempted. Early from this cause, and partly from the rocky outcrops of its bed, and its tendency to spread itself into lakes straits and flats and shallows, the river St. Lawrence is far less available than the Mississippi, which is always free, always navigable, always uniform in its width, and by prudent management, as readily ascended as descended at all the seasons. It is not precisely so with the Ohio, which, though it is not frozen up to the same extent as the St. Lawrence, is seriously embarrassed with shoals during the dry season; and at one place, Louisville, in Kentucky, has its course so seriously interrupted by rapids, when the water is low, that the inhabitants of that city have been obliged to cut a canal around this obstacle, and a most stupendous and beautiful work it is, being rather more than two miles in length, and excavated in rock nearly throughout its whole extent. It is 68 feet in breadth and 16 feet in depth, affording a passage for all steamboats under 150 feet in length. The average difference of level in the Ohio is at the dry and at the rainy season, is upwards of 30 feet; and such is the rapidity of the stream at certain seasons over the rapids, that even the most powerful steamboats are obliged at times to send an anchor ahead, and having brought the warp to their capstan, to drag themselves through by main force. Such things do not happen on the deep and majestic Mississippi, though we do remember once on that river to have hung for nearly half an hour, without advancing an inch, though the steam was urged to a very high point of pressure. But this was far above the Delta, about 1,200 miles or so from the mouth, and at a spot where, from the approach of the rocky banks, the velocity of the stream became considerably greater than usual.

We are particularly anxious to call the attention of professional men to those inherent distinctions between the great rivers of America, because we are too apt to class them in the imagination as identical in their phenomena; whereas scarcely any two of them which we have examined are so much alike as not to require a different kind of treatment; and nothing, we conceive, can be more instructive to us than to study the manner in which the Americans have overcome the difficulties of their positions. We may instance the method of steering in the Ohio steamboats. It was found that for the purpose of traffic, in the low-water season of the river, it was necessary to work with flat bottomed boats, drawing so little water that they passed along the shoals with only a couple of inches to spare between them and the mud. There was no harm in this, of course, so long as they did not actually touch; but it was found that the usual rudder, however large it was made, would not act at all, owing to the extent of "dead water" which, under such circumstances, the vessel drew after her. The ingenious Americans soon remedied this serious inconvenience by fixing a rudder on each quarter; and by utilizing their two extremities by a bar, the ends of which moved freely on a pivot on the tops of the rudders, and extending the filler over the stern till it united itself with the centre of this bar, they were enabled to steer with perfect ease in the shallowest water. The manner of this action will be obvious to a sailor, who considers that when the helm under such circumstances is put "a-port," and the rudder on the larboard quarter falls into the "dead water," the rudder on the starboard quarter being turned outwards, has its surface opposed not merely to the stream of the river, but to the current caused by the paddle-wheel on that side, and its effect is immediate on turning her head to board.

So many devices of this kind are to be met with in America, that we know not any country where the science of prompt, and effectual resources is to be so well taught. Our seamen, indeed, from having the variable elements to contend with, under all the complications of hydrography and warlike contingencies, are trained from their earliest years to the practice of considering that there is a way over, or around, or through, every difficulty; but as our military men have not the same constant calls made on their ingenuity, though they are imbued with the self same spirit, they have not the same means of exercising their zeal and schooling their capacity, so as to be always ready for the occasion. Accordingly, we should venture to recommend a course of American travelling to our young soldiers, fully assured that the petty inconveniences of the journey would be far overbalanced by the habits they might acquire of considering nothing impossible if attended with energy. Our naval officers, too, by travelling in America, would learn to despise less that fresh water navigation, of which they can now know scarcely any thing, but with which, in the event of war in those countries, or in fact in any country, they might be called upon to work on the great scale. And, we can assure them, that there is a variety and complexity in the navigation of the American rivers, which, though they bear but a small ratio to those of the ocean, are nevertheless, very embarrassing to strangers; and an ignorance of them might prove highly detrimental to the service in the event of expeditions to the interior—a contingency which, if it should ever go to war with America, must be calculated upon.

In treating of the steam navigation of the United States, as compared with that of England, Mr. Stevenson, in the beginning of his fourth chapter, makes some valuable remarks on the distinctions which the nature of things has established between the two cases. "By far the greater number of the American steamboats," he very justly remarks, "ply on the smooth surfaces of rivers, sheltered bays, or arms of the sea, exposed neither to waves nor to winds; whereas most of the steamboats in this country go to sea, where they encounter as bad weather and as high waves as ordinary sailing vessels. The consequence is, that in America a much more slender build and a more delicate mould, give the requisite strength to their vessels; and thus a much greater speed, which essentially depends on these two qualities, is generally obtained. In America, the rig is raised above the deck of the vessels, admit of powerful engines, with an enormous length of stroke being employed to propel them; but this arrangement," he adds, "would be wholly inapplicable to the vessels navigating our coasts, at least to the extent to which it has been carried in America." What follows is still more important; and we extract the passage the more readily from our not having seen the remark so strongly put before:

"But perhaps the strongest proof that the American vessels are very differently circumstanced from those of Europe, and therefore admit of a construction more favorable for the attainment of great speed, is the fact that they are not, generally, as in Europe, navigated by persons possessed of a knowledge of seamanship. In this country, steam navigation proper is chiefly carried on by British steamers, being exposed to the open sea in all weathers, and furnished with mast and sails, and must be worked by persons who, in the event of any accident happening to the machinery, are capable of sailing the vessel, and who must, therefore, be experienced seamen. The case is very different in America, where, with the exception of the vessels navigating the lakes, and one or two of those which ply on the eastern coast, there is not a steamer in the country which has either masts or sails, or is commanded by a professional seaman."

PRIVATE EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.
Rio Janeiro, March 9, 1839. Nothing has been heard here from the national exploring expedition since their departure from this port. The brig Medina, capt. Elijah Hallett, arrived here on the 7th inst. direct from South Georgia, in a passage of 17 days, being one of three vessels fitted out by Mr.

Burrows of your city to survey the southern frozen ocean, and the result confers great honor on the American flag. Mr. B. sailed from this port in the Medina during the month of June last, and at the Falkland islands was joined by two others of his vessels, the brig Oceola, captain L. S. Hallett, and schooner Mary Jane, captain Parsons. With this little fleet, three in number, he made sail from those islands for the frozen seas, and five days after fell in with a field of icebergs, twenty-five miles in length, and 300 feet high, the whole presenting the same uniform and level appearance as a sheet of new mason ice.

They found large bays and good harbors around the icebergs, but no anchorage except by fastening to the ice. The outer edge of the ice was on all sides perpendicular cliffs about 300 feet high, and so similar to the appearance of many shores, particularly the chalky cliffs of England, that it would only be known as ice from the thermometer, or by approaching very near. At this place the Oceola, captain R. S. Hallett was separated from the other vessels, and did not again join them until they reached South Georgia. The Medina and Mary Jane the next day after this re-discovered the Aurora islands, six in number, and Mr. Burrows took five different drawings of them. This discovery is most gratifying and astonishing. The islands were discovered and described about 80 years since by the ship San Miguel, and since that have been stuck on the charts, and said not to exist. About 40 years ago the Spanish government dispatched the sloop of war Atrevida to survey these islands, and the officers of this ship actually surveyed icebergs and placed them on the charts as the Aurora islands. Soon after this, several of the most distinguished navigators, among the number, capt. Waddell of the British navy, cruised over the ground in all directions, and unanimously agreed that they did not exist. They have been accordingly expunged from the latest English and American charts, but must be again restored through the enterprise of the Yankee spirit. The islands are six in number, about 200 feet high, running north and south for the distance, say 2-1/2 miles, without any ship passage between them. They are in latitude 52° 22' Longitude 44° 18' W. and 26 miles north of the Sag Rocks, which doubtless form a part of the same ridge of mountains. I have not been able to send you a drawing of their appearance. These islands lying in the track that the vessels are often driven to when bound round Cape Horn, makes the replacing them on the charts a valuable acquisition to those who navigate those seas; and it is now believed that the Spanish 74, which sailed for the Pacific ocean, with about 800 souls, and never heard from, was wrecked on these islands. I have been anxious, as an American, to learn all the inducements that led Mr. B. to undertake this desperate and dangerous adventure. From the best information I can derive, I believe he was induced from the most laudable of motives, hoping to rescue his friends and countrymen from a frozen world. It appears that a few years since his neighbor and townsman in Connecticut, capt. Johnson, after consulting with Mr. B. and communicating to him his views, sailed from the port of New York, bound into the Antarctic seas. Capt. Johnson was heard from in a high latitude, going south, since which no information has been had of him. Mr. B. knowing the course he intended to take, thought there was a possibility of rescuing his friend, and, like capt. Back in search of capt. Ross reached into the icy world, apparently regardless of the fate that awaited him. He did not find any positive knowledge of capt. Johnson, but he found eight wrecked vessels, and a house built from a wreck fitted for a winter's residence; he also found several graves, and one body not interred. For about six months, no labor, toil, nor suffering was spared, and it was by the aid of the natives that capt. Johnson and his crew were saved. Capt. Johnson was heard from by Mr. B. encountered there, astonishing. He was shipwrecked on an iceberg, five miles from the coast, and by a miracle was rescued by another boat that was driven by an accident to the spot where he was. For three days he had, with his boat's crew been on this iceberg, being without food. His health, however, appears better than when he went south. We all wish him a happy return to his country, with the rich reward his toil and industry merit, and a long enjoyment with his friends in North America; and can only say, if the same zeal animates the national expedition, and all on board, that has this individual undertaking, a great triumph is in store for our country. I am, sir, with great respect, &c. &c. yours truly, J. G.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.

The history of this little island—a tree embosomed spot in the Pacific—is an interesting episode in the world's great epic. There is poetry too associated with its name, for the events connected with its settlement form the subject of lord Byron's "Island." Some particulars relative to the present state of things in this island, have met our notice in the last number of the Sailor's Magazine, the whole story, which in boyish days had seized with romantic interest on the fancy, now came into mind, and, in the present dearth of news, we know not how better to fill a portion of a column than by recapitulating some of the leading incidents which make up the history.

In 1759 the crew of the British ship Bounty, having mutinied in the South Pacific ocean, capt. Bligh with eighteen others who adhered to him were set adrift at sea. The mutineers, under an officer named Christian, having no possession of the ship, directed their course towards Otaheite. Here they landed, and seizing upon a number of natives of both sexes, they sailed away to an uninhabited island, (Pitcairn's), where they settled; and to put away all thoughts of ever returning to England, Christian prevailed upon his followers to destroy the ship. The lawless habits of the sailors brought ruin upon the infant settlement. The native Otaheitanes, except the women who were taken by the seamen as wives, being treated with great barbarity, they formed a conspiracy and killed all the Englishmen on the island, except four, who contrived to escape. The native women, who it seems had become attached to their English husbands, revenged this massacre by murdering in one night every Otaheitan man on the island. Of the four Englishmen who remained, two were worthless characters and did not live long. The two survivors became reformed men and exerted themselves to make a little colony happy and prosperous. Their names were John Adams and George Young. Under their joint administration the settlement continued flourishing until the year 1800, when Young died, and Adams was left alone, at the head of his infant community. In 1810 the colony was first discovered by captain Folger in the ship Topaz, of Boston. It was visited afterwards occasionally by several ships, both American and British.

In 1825 the colony consisted of sixty-six persons, and the account given by cap. Beechey, who touched there, represented a scene of innocent and tranquil happiness unknown since the days of Arcadian simplicity. Adams was the patriarch of his people, a grey headed, cheerful old man. The young men, all born in the island, were stated to be very athletic, and of the finest forms, their countenances open and pleasing, indicating much benevolence and goodness of heart; and the young women were objects of particular admiration; tall, robust and beautifully formed, their faces beaming with smiles and unruined good humor, but wearing an air of modesty and bashfulness; and all of them, both male and female, had marked English features. The greatest harmony prevailed among them. "But what was most gratifying," says a visitor, "was the simple and unadorned manner in which they returned thanks to the Almighty for the manifold blessings they enjoyed." Dr. Blatchely, now of the state of Illinois, but formerly of the Sandwich mission, who stopped at Pitcairn's island in 1827, says of this colony that "a purer state of morals among the same number of people, without the institutions of the gospel, probably never existed." Adams died in 1829, and whether it was from feelings of depression at his loss, or from the supposition that the island was too small for the increasing colony, being a little spot, six miles long and three wide, or from some other cause, the colonists abandoned their happy home, and went to Otaheite. Here, however, they were soon dissatisfied, and longed again for their little gem in the ocean, to which they soon returned, after having lost fifteen of their number by sickness, and what is still more to be deplored, suffering some corruption of morals by their intercourse with the Otaheitanes. On the return of the colony to Pitcairn's island, the English government sent them a respectable gentleman, Mr. Joshua Hill, to reside among them as their magistrate and teacher.

We regret to learn by a letter from Mr. Hill, written last year and just published in the Sailor's Magazine, that the condition of the colony has not improved. The chief cause of their declension is ascribed to the presence of three runaway English sailors, worthless and dissolute characters, who have thrust themselves into the bosom of the little community and though sent away from the island, thence, they have contrived to retrace themselves to the ruinous corruption of the poor, simple minded inhabitants. Mr. Hill has left the island, and has sailed to the British government a full account of its present condition, in the hope that a proper authority will be exercised in driving away the abandoned wretches who have poisoned the innocent enjoyments of an interesting community, and that thus the peace and happiness of former times may be again restored.

We omitted to state in the proper place that capt. Bligh and his associates, who were set adrift at sea, succeeded in reaching the island of Timor after a voyage of twelve hundred leagues in an open boat—a fact almost miraculous. Upon the captain's arrival in England, the admiralty despatched the frigate Pandora, capt. Edwards, to go in search of the mutineers.—capt. Edwards directed his course to Otaheite, but the objects of his quest had left that island, and it was supposed they were lost at sea. Nor was any thing known to the contrary until capt. Folger's visit to Pitcairn's Island in 1810.

NAVAL APPRENTICESHIP.

Extract from the act of congress providing for the enlistment of boys for the naval service of the United States, approved March 2d, 1837.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America, in congress assembled, That it shall be lawful to enlist boys for the navy, with the consent of their parents or guardians, not being under thirteen, nor over sixteen years, to serve until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years.

Regulations for the enlistment and employment of boys who may be entered to serve in the navy until they arrived at the age of twenty-one years.

In the enlistment of boys to serve until twenty-one years of age as authorised by the act of congress, approved on the second day of March, 1837, none are to be entered who shall be under thirteen or over sixteen years of age, and who, after careful examination and inquiry, shall not be deemed of sound constitution, good health, and free from all injuries, defects or disease which would be likely to render them unfit to perform the duties which are expected from them.

No boy is to be entered who shall have been convicted of any criminal or disgraceful offence, or who shall have been sent to any house of correction or refuge, or other place of punishment.

No advances are to be made by the recruiting officer to the boys who may enter, or to their parents or guardians; but such clothing and other articles as may be necessary to their comfort, will be furnished upon the orders of the commanders of the receiving vessels when they repair on board for duty.

Whenever it can be ascertained that a boy wishing to enter has a parent or guardian whose presence can be obtained, such parent or guardian must sign his or her name in the proper column of the shipping articles, as evidence of his or her assent to the enlistment.

When the parent or guardian cannot be present, and can be referred to, they must sign duplicate certificates of assent in the presence of, and to be certified by some justice of the peace, or other magistrate, according to a form which will be furnished, one of which certificates must be transmitted to the secretary of the navy with the monthly reports of the recruiting officer, and the other sent to the commander of the receiving vessel, to be transferred with the account of the boy from one vessel to another whenever he is transferred himself.

At the time of their enlistment they are to be rated as of the second or third class boys, according to their age, size and qualifications.

The pay of boys of the third class shall be five dollars a month, and the pay of boys of the second class shall be six dollars a month. First class boys to receive seven dollars.

When they cannot be attached to vessels in commission, they shall serve on board some one of the three large receiving vessels.

They are to be supplied under the immediate direction of the commander of the vessel, with such articles of clothing and other necessaries as may contribute to their health and comfort; but after the first supply, the amount which may be due to them, is on no account to be exceeded; on the contrary, it is desirable that they should have as large an amount due to them as possible at the expiration of their service.

They are not to be allowed to draw the spirit part of their ration, nor to receive tobacco, but on the contrary, they are to be encouraged, and required if possible to abstain from the use of both.

Whenever their rate of pay will allow it, they may allot to a parent, such amount as shall not reduce the amount left for their own use below six dollars a month, nor more than one-half their pay, when the half shall exceed six dollars a month.

They shall receive no part of their pay for their personal use until their discharge, excepting for clothing and necessaries as herein before provided, and occasional small advances in money, under direction of their commander, for the purchase of articles conducive to health, and for small expenses when permitted to go on shore on liberty; care must be observed, however, that this indulgence is not abused.

Every commander of a vessel in which any of these boys may serve, shall cause them to be well instructed in reading, writing and arithmetic, and to be employed on all such duties which they may be competent to perform, as may give them a thorough knowledge of seamanship, and best qualify them to perform the duties of seamen and petty officers.

They are never to be required or permitted to attend as waiters or servants to the officers whenever there are other persons present who can properly perform these services.

As an inducement for exertion and a reward for good conduct, all persons enlisted under this provision shall be eligible to promotion in the same manner as other persons of the ship's company, as vacancies may occur, and their qualifications and conduct may merit, but all such promotion of boys shall be gradual and regular from third to second, and from second to first class boys, landmen, ordnance hands, seamen and petty officers; and on the other hand, they shall also be subject to a reduction of rating, like all other persons for neglect or misconduct.

If they shall serve the term of their enlistment in a manner satisfactory to their respective commanders, they shall, upon their discharge, receive a certificate stating the length of such service, and time served in each rating, and the opinion which is then entertained of their conduct, qualifications and merits.

Should they subsequently wish to re-enter the service, and produce to the recruiting officer a certificate of good conduct while serving under their first enlistment, such officer shall, if men are required, and there shall be no objection on the score of health or other qualifications, give a preference to them over persons who have not previously served in the navy.

Should any of them give decided evidences of the talents and conduct which might, by proper attention and cultivation, make them valuable boat swains, gunners, or masters for the navy, they are to be specially reported to the secretary of the navy, and the commander of the vessel shall give all proper facilities to advance their instruction.

At the expiration of their service, or at their regular discharge, they shall receive the amount which may then be due them.

These regulations to be subject at all times to such alterations and modifications as the secretary of the navy for the time being may deem necessary or expedient, and it is to be understood that the form no part of the agreement between the United States and the other parties, all of which are contained in the shipping articles.

ARKANSAS BONDS.

From the New York Evening Post.

New York, May 22, 1839. Sir: I have but a word to say in reply to the New York Express of this morning. If I could, for the soul of me, call into action the least feeling of respect for a publication which has, from the day of its foundation, been engaged in a crusade against the credit and honor of the country, and which, impotent as it is, has had some credit for its impudence and mendacity, I possibly might prevail on myself to lay before its editors a concise and correct history of the matter of the Arkansas bonds, negotiated by the hon. Am. brose Sevier with col. Richard M. Johnson. In that transaction there was not any thing to which the most fastidious moralist, the most astute and practical financier could object, and I hold myself ready to make good what I assert, at any time, at all times, in any places, and in all places.

The transaction is precisely one of those operations which daily take place in Wall street, between the banks and brokers, and, if you please, between the immaculate branch of the Bank of the United States and your citizens. There was nothing wrong in it; and, let me add, that the gentlemen engaged in it, the hon. Mr. Sevier, and the hon. Mr. Fulton and the vice president of the U. States, are incapable of any act of dishonor. The Express knows nothing about the affair; and yet, on the authority of Remond M. Whitney, an individual whom it has often published as a swindler, a liar, a rascal, and a thief, when publishing the infamous harangues of Henry A. Wise, and Bailie Peyton, it impudently and insolently steps forward, and because the United States senators from Arkansas, under the authority of the state, sold bonds to colonel Richard M. Johnson charges them with defalcation, and with swindling

And, now, because I, who am a stranger in a strange city, in the discharge of an act of charity, attempt to defend two of the most worthy citizens of my state, the Express puts on its official look, wipes its eyes, and winningly exclaims that I am guilty of the monstrous crime of "abusing the press."

"A dog in forehead—but in heart a deer."

The whole object and end of the attack in the Express on Messrs. Fulton and Sewer, evidently is to injure the credit of the Arkansas bonds in the New York market. To effect this object, the Express has undoubtedly been employed by some Wall street broker, and for its reward will probably obtain a loan at some one of the banks. Well, let it go on. The Express, from the day of its foundation, has professed to be the especial guardian and conscience keeper of the merchants; and is it to be supposed that the merchants of New York can sanction its course of infamy? Is it the interest of the merchants of New York to destroy the credit of the merchants of the west and southwest?

Are they disposed to sanction an outrage on the character of the state of Arkansas, to gratify a morbid and rabid partisan spirit? Are they disposed to sustain presses, the object of which is to desolate and destroy, to gratify the malice or propitiate the envy of political demagogues and knaves? It is unnecessary to reply to the interrogatory.

By-the-by, as I have never troubled the Evening Post again, let me add one word in conclusion. For the last six years the merchants of New York have suffered themselves to be diddled and swindled by presses in this city. Prior to the year 1832, they had taken but little interest in the mere political squabbles of the day. They had contented themselves with attending to their own business; were prosperous and happy, and, as they always will be, were honorable and high minded. But when a loan of $52,000 cast a flood of light on the world, and produced sudden conviction and conversion in the minds of the conductors of the New York Courier and Enquirer, they were directly appealed to—all prejudices and passions were artfully assailed, and by a series of passionate addresses they were made to believe that their own alone depended the happiness and glory of the world. This done, they were called on for cash, to satisfy the lawings of the greedy scyphants. The cash they paid, and cash they continue to pay, to sustain such papers as the Courier and Enquirer, the Express, and the Times—papers that each day labor to produce their ruin. For the last six years, the merchants of New York have paid all the costs of the city elections—have been practically and theoretically and scientifically swindled by newspaper demagogues and vauvpyres; and it is to be hoped that they will not submit to the wrong any longer.

The Express asserts that it has since doubt of my legitimacy, and does not know me. It is most true it does not. I never can know me; nor can any dastard, who for the low purpose of accelerating the prospects of an abandoned party, attempts the assassination of honorable and high minded men, senators of a young and flourishing state, ever have the honor of the personal acquaintance of

JOHN SMITH, jr. of Arkansas.

THE GOVERNEUR CASE.

From the New York Courier and Enquirer.

During the progress of the trial recently terminated, of the United States vs. S. L. Gouverneur, late postmaster of the city of New York, we have had occasion to advert to the circumstances of the prosecution, and to the facts developed in the testimony. The letter which we published below, from Mr. Gouverneur, addressed to the president of the United States, will read with more than ordinary interest. It fully sustains all the allegations which we have made in the premises. We will admit that we were surprised at the verdict of the jury. We do not understand the process by which they found Mr. Gouverneur indebted to the government; and we are confident that if the allowance had been made to him, which were justly due for extra official services, the government would have been found his debtor.

In this matter, however, there were doubtless formidable difficulties. The negotiations of Mr. Barry, which general Jackson countenanced and authorised, were, probably, beyond the pale of the law or the constitution. The services of Mr. Gouverneur in sustaining the credit of the administration, perhaps, did not furnish the basis of a strictly legal claim against the department. But they certainly did bind him to the kind consideration of the government. They entitled him to hope that the government would not avail itself of his misfortune to crush him, but that it would have been satisfied with such proofs of his accounts as would have been satisfactory between individuals; and that at any rate it would not use its position to stigmatise him as a dishonest debtor and defaulter.

Mr. Kendall claimed of Mr. Gouverneur a balance of $160,000. Mr. Gouverneur refused to pay the monstrous demand; but made a voluntary offer to Mr. Kendall to furnish the department with all the evidence in his possession, and to submit the matters in difference to arbitrators selected by the department, to a rule of court in any court of the United States to an amicable suit, or to a committee of either house of congress. This was in April, 1836.—Mr. Kendall declined, and insisted on the payment by Mr. Gouverneur of $160,000! This Mr. Gouverneur refused. The action was brought. Before trial Mr. Kendall's demand was reduced to something like $100,000. During the progress of the trial the district attorney was compelled to abandon $25,000. The case was put to the jury as an action of account between individuals; in which the defendant was held to account strictly for every dollar that ever came into his hands for the use of the department, and the jury after thirty hours patient investigation, gave a verdict of $20,000 for Mr. Kendall! It will be seen by the letter of Mr. Gouverneur, that this amount will be forthwith paid to the government, or secured in the event of an appeal.

And yet, in this state of things, the administration has cruelly represented Mr. Gouverneur as a defaulter. It has harassed him with a wanton and wicked persecution—invasion the peace of his family—assailed his character—stigmatised him as a speculator and dishonest debtor—and Mr. Gouverneur, meanwhile, as will appear by his official letters, has been willing to pay the government every dollar that was justly its due, of that any trial would pronounce to be its due! Even during the progress of the present trial, before it was known whether Mr. Gouverneur owed a cent to the government, that common libeller, the Albany Argus has assailed him as "being largely a defaulter on the books of the department," and classed him with Price, Swartwout, and the hundred defaulters of the land office. "Gouverneur isa martyr," says the Argus. "He is reported as a large defaulter, and the government has commenced a suit for the recovery of the money; but that fact only the more strongly ensures to him the active and sympathizing favor of his federal associates." The Argus then proceeds to indulge in its ordinary coarseness and vulgar abuse, and ends with a witty allusion to "sub-treasurers with legs."

Whence this virulent persecution of Mr. Gouverneur? Why is he stigmatised as a "sub-treasurer"—an epithet which the Argus uses with great propriety, as about the most pregnant term of abuse which could select in the premises. The Argus considers sub-treasurer as synonymous with "defaulter"—and it is fully justified in his use of language, if we may be permitted to cite the instances of Mr. Woodbury's sub-treasurers for an explanation of its meaning. Mr. Kendall demanded of Mr. Gouverneur $160,000. Mr. Gouverneur appealed to a jury of his country—and Mr. Kendall's claim was cut down $20,000! The balance Mr. Gouverneur is willing and ready to pay. Is he therefore a defaulter? He is therefore a "sub-treasurer"—which is so significantly and appropriately used by the Argus as a term of disgrace? No man who reads the following letter will hesitate in answering a question like this; and no man who reflects upon it, who fully estimates the original propositions of Mr. Gouverneur, and compares them with the course of the government, can fail to be convinced that the government has been wantonly unjust and wickedly oppressive. We annex the following letter, which has been sent to us for publication, addressed by Mr. Gouverneur to the president of the United States.

To the President of the United States:

SIR: I respectfully request the personal favor of you to peruse the following extract of a letter, dated 16th April, 1836, addressed to Amos Kendall, esq. postmaster general of the United States.

"From my letter to you bearing date the 12th instant, I beg leave to make the following extracts, to which I particularly refer. "If any difficulties, derangement or delay, have occurred in the perfect understanding, and prompt adjustment of any account, in which the department is interested, the true cause is to be found in the inability of its own agents, from whatever source it may arise, to state with accuracy, their own accounts. For myself I simply add, that it is only necessary for them to show the existence of any error, or any account of mine, and as far as it may depend upon me, it shall be promptly corrected. Distinctly claiming a just privilege to scan with freedom, and fully to enquire into any charge which I may conceive, ought not to be made to me by my prejudice; I am not only aware of the obligation of meeting every fair claim, which may be urged against me, 'in the usual way, and the evidence on which it is founded being produced,' but prepared promptly to discharge it."

"Renewing to you the expression of these sentiments, which appear to me to concede every thing which can fairly be required of me, I have no hesitation to add the assurances of my sincere wish to meet you on terms of candor and mutual reciprocity, in such an adjustment, in any mode which you may think proper to adopt; and which may encourage a hope, that where every claim of justice on all occasions may be enforced to any extent; all payments made in good faith, and under the sanction of competent authority at the time, will be promptly allowed. To this end, sir, I respectfully propose to you,

"That I will go into the settlement of the accounts on an unreserved exhibition of every material, necessary to their full illustration. The principles of adjustment to be applicable to both parties, and first distinctly established."

"I will consent to the immediate entry of a rule in the United States court, of any state, or of the District of Columbia, under which a prompt settlement, and without the least delay, can be enforced."

"I will become a party to an amicable suit, pledging myself to make every proper concession, to prevent the waste of time, or delay an immediate decision."

"I will refer the account to the decision of a committee of either house of congress, and wait the passage of a bill rendering me any credits to which I may appear to be entitled."

"I will freely agree, that they be now referred to any three fair and impartial men, all to be selected by yourself, and by whose decision in the premises I will abide."

Such, sir, were my sentiments and declarations then nor have they at any moment since, undergone a particle of change. It was imperiously due to myself, my family, and other great interests which I could not abandon, that I should manfully resist the enormous pretensions of the post office department. It was equally due to every consideration involved in all, that if I was indebted a single dollar to that department, it should be promptly paid.

Impressed with these views, and deeply anxious that my position should be properly defined—that I might be seen, it was honest conviction of right, and not to evade the payment of any just and proper demand upon me, that I again addressed a letter to Amos Kendall, postmaster general of the United States, under date the 10th of December, 1838; part of which I respectfully desire to present to your view:

After complaining that the prosecution of the pending suit had been postponed, I say—

"I am perfectly willing and ready to file a bond and security for any amount, which can by possibility, appear due to the United States from me, if you will simply pledge the faith of the department promptly to pay any balance, which may be certified as due to me."

The postmaster general did not consider he had the legal authority to accept the proposition.

But, sir, strong considerations at all times urged upon me the convictions that it was in a court of justice alone the conflicting interests and claims between the department and myself could be satisfactorily adjusted, and a valid and permanent settlement finally effected. "Independently of any official obligations," I had, at the earnest solicitation of the then postmaster general, rendered as I conceived, and as both the then president and he, at that time, freely admitted, important and effective services to sustain the department from wreck, and the then administration from the inevitable consequences resulting from such an event. These services, under peculiar circumstances, and some of a confidential character, had involved me in large details furnished to Mr. Barry at the time ceased to exist, and of one of which in particular, I was under a solemn obligation of honor to the president, Mr. Barry and Mr. Hamilton, not to divulge. The testimony of Mr. Hamilton in the late investigation is pointed to this matter. It was my inability to furnish details to Mr. Kendall which he imperiously demanded, which has led to all the conflict which has ensued, and subjected me to all the doubt, difficulties and sacrifices, to which I have in a protracted litigation been subjected for the last three years.

To the question from the district attorney to Mr. Hamilton, whether I could not with propriety have done what Mr. Kendall required of me, he emphatically replied—"That I could not without a violation of honor and confidence towards general Jackson, Mr. Barry and himself." The district attorney took proper occasion to vindicate me from the charge of intentional wrong, and to express his sense of the services which I had rendered to an administration of which he was a member. The presiding judge took occasion to advert "to the high character given to the defendant by Mr. Barry in his letter to president Jackson. He was free to say that no imputation of fraud rested on the defendant, although a wonderful laxity seemed to have pervaded the department during the whole of these transactions. It is said to be a question of account, and as such was properly admitted to a jury of merchants:—If they found a balance due to the defendant, they should certify in his favor, for it would then be his right; and if not, they should find for the plaintiffs, and say for how much."

The accounts between the department and myself, of an official and unofficial character, and the subject of the late prosecution, involved an amount of about one million and a half dollars. After a patient and laborious investigation, and the application of such legal principles as the presiding judge thought proper to propound from the bench, to volume of testimony of 200 pages, the jury after a protracted session of thirty hours, have found an absolute verdict in favor of the United States, of about $20,000. The original demand of the department amounted to about $160,000, and was gradually reduced to the sum of $400,569 29, which the district attorney in this suit claimed at the hands of the jury.

Whatever may be my opinion, or that of others, in respect to this verdict, or that of the legal principles on which it was founded, it has been pronounced by an honest jury of my country; and I am bound, as a good citizen to submit to it, subject only to such relief, as I may justly claim from the laws of the land. But, sir, there is something due to the public, and that public you represent. It is the elevated position you occupy, which induces me to ask the personal favor of you to permit me, through you, to address myself to them.

Had the verdict of the jury swept every dollar from my family and myself, my honor would have been promptly redeemed. You will learn why that pleasure, which ought to animate the heart of one who presides over the destinies of many, that the event will not desolate our home, nor bring affliction "to our hearth."

I beg leave, in conclusion, to assure you, that the interests of the public are safe. I desire repose. Should I not feel myself bound, in accordance with the urgent views of my counsel, to appeal to a higher tribunal, the verdict of the jury will be promptly settled. Should such an appeal be instituted, the amount of that verdict or adequate security, for its payment, under any circumstances which may occur, will be deposited in the hands of the district attorney, so that, in no event, will the public sustain the slightest loss. With great respect, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
SAML. L. GOVERNEUR.

New York, May 17, 1839.

THE MECKLENBURG DECLARATION.

It is not hazarding too much to say, that there is no event of the revolution which has been, or can be, more fully or clearly authenticated, than the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence on the 20th May, 1775. We are aware, that when publicity was first given to this declaration in 1819, through the columns of this paper, its authenticity was doubted by some and openly denied by others. This incredulity, however, was gradually dissipated by the force of truth, until the death of Mr. Jefferson, and the publication of his works, in some measure revived it. Among the letters of that distinguished man, was one, ridiculing the claim set up by North Carolina—a letter which had been previously published in the papers, but not before in so imposing a form as to command the attention of posterity. Upon the appearance, however, of this letter in his printed works, the legislature of North Carolina thought it due to the character of the state, to asher to the world the MECKLENBURG DECLARATION, accompanied with such testimonials of its genuineness, as should forever silence all doubts upon the subject. And this they did, with such care for its general diffusion, that we are truly astonished to find any one, at this late day, interposing a doubt on the subject. But a writer in the June number of the "Southern Literary Messenger" attempts in discredit the fact, that the Mecklenburg declaration was made, and heralds his communication to the world under the imposing caption—"THE QUESTION SETTLED."

The writer in the Messenger, who signs himself "INVESTIGATOR" produces the following preamble and resolutions recently discovered by our antiquarian friend, PETER FORCE, esq. of Washington city, in a newspaper printed on the 12th of July, 1775. Where the paper was printed, he does not inform us. These resolutions, it will be seen, purport to come from a committee, and are as follows:

Charlotte town, Mecklenburg county, May 31, 1775.

This day the committee met, and passed the following resolves:

WHEREAS, by an address presented to his majesty, by both houses of parliament, in February last, the American colonies are declared to be in a state of actual rebellion, we conceive that all laws and commissions confirmed by, or derived from, the authority of the king or parliament, are annulled and vacated, and the former civil constitution of these colonies, for the present, wholly suspended. To provide in some degree for the exigencies of this country, in the present alarming period, we deem it proper and necessary to pass the following resolves, viz:

1. That all commissions, civil and military, heretofore granted by the crown, to be exercised in these colonies, are null and void, and the constitution of each particular colony, wholly suspended.

2. That the provincial congress of each province, under the direction of the great continental congress, is invested with all the legislative and executive powers within their respective provinces; and that no legislative and executive power does or can exist, at this time, in any of these colonies.

3. As all former laws are now wholly suspended in this province, and the congress have not yet provided others, we judge it necessary, for the better preservation of good order, to form certain rules and regulations for the internal government of this county, until laws shall be provided for us by congress.

4. That the inhabitants in this county do meet on a certain day appointed by this committee, and, having formed themselves into nine companies, viz: eight in the county and one in the town of Charlotte, do choose a colonel and other military officers, who shall hold and exercise their several powers by virtue of this choice, and independent of the crown of Great Britain and former constitution of this province.

"INVESTIGATOR" pretends that these resolutions were all that were adopted in Mecklenburg, but the evidence at hand completely rebuts his assertion. These resolutions were passed by a committee, on the 31st May—the declaration was made on the 20th May, eleven days before, not by a committee, but by a convention regularly chosen by the different militia companies of Mecklenburg, "whose deliberations were witnessed and applauded by a crowd of people, comprising perhaps half the men in the county." But to say nothing of this discrepancy, we can, in the shape of positive testimony, cite Pelion upon Ossa. In the first place, a copy of the declaration was found among the papers of the Mecklenburg clerk of the county, at New York, where also was found a memorandum that a copy had likewise been sent to general William R. Davie. This copy was subsequently found among the general's papers, corresponding verbatim et literatim, with that in possession of the clerk.

2d. Captain Jack testifies that he was the bearer of the declaration to our delegates in congress, then sitting at Philadelphia, who, from some cause or other, thought it premature to lay it before congress, but acknowledged its receipt in a letter complimentary to the zeal of the delegates. 3d. Three highly respectable citizens certify that they met captain Jack in Philadelphia in June 1775, who informed them that "he was the bearer of a declaration of independence made at Charlotte on the 20th of May." 4th. Honorable Francis Cummings, of Georgia, writes to Mr. Macon, that he was present when "independence was proclaimed from the court house stairs by colonel Thomas Polk, and I am perfectly sure it was before our national declaration."

5th. The patriot, J. Graham, gives from personal knowledge all the details of the affair, corresponding most wonderfully in all the essential particulars. 6th. The reverend H. Hunter gives not only a particular account of the manner in which the convention was organized, but even gives the names of most of the delegates—he being, at that time, 20 years and 14 days old. 7th. George Graham, William Hutchinson, Jonas Clark, and Robert Robinson, aged citizens of Mecklenburg, testify to all the facts stated and, in their own language, assert that "resolves were passed which went to declare the people of Mecklenburg, free and independent of the king and parliament of Great Britain," which were signed by all the delegates and openly proclaimed. 8th. John Simson, sen. in a most interesting letter, confirms all the circumstances detailed by previous witnesses, and gives a short anecdote to the point. Having asked an old neighbor, aged 51, if he knew any thing about this affair, the reply was "—Och, aye. TAM POLK declared independence tang before any body else." 9th. Isaac Alexander, Samuel Wilson, John Davidson, J. G. M. Ramsay, James

Johnson, Elijah Johnson and James Whitte all confirm these statements from their own personal knowledge. And yet, in the face of such evidence, where every link in the chain connects, an attempt is made to deprive North Carolina of her just and merited fame, on the strength of such a discovery as the above. But it may be asked, who birthed the resolutions of the 31st of May? We answer, the "committee of safety," appointed by the convention for the purpose of using every exertion "to spread the love of country and the fire of freedom throughout America." The resolutions speak for themselves: "This day, the committee met &c."—What committee? Why the committee appointed 11 days before!

No, North Carolina is not to be deprived, so to flimsy a pretext as this, of the honor of having, at a period of darkness and oppression, without concert with others, concert without assurance of support from any quarter, all fear of consequences lost in a sense of their country's wrong, nobly dared to assert that independence, which whoever might have thought, none had then spoken, and thus earned for her sons, throughout all time, the proud boast of having given birth to the FIRST Declaration of Independence.

CHARLES CARROLL.

BY LORD BROUGHAM.

We do a thing of very pernicious tendency if we confine the records of history to the most eminent personages who bear part in the event which it commemorates. There are often others whose sacrifices are much greater, whose perils are more extreme, and whose services are nearly as valuable as those of the more prominent actors, and who yet have, from chance or by the modesty of a retiring and unpretending nature, never stood forward to fill the foremost places or occupy the larger spaces in the eye of the world. To forget such men is an unpardonable neglect of public service, it is unjust to the world and the individuals. But the error is far greater of those who, in recording the annals of revolutions, confine their ideas of public merit to the feats of leaders against established tyranny or the triumphs of orators in behalf of freedom. Many a man in the ranks has done more, by his zeal and his self devotion than any chief to break the chains of a nation, and among such men Charles Carroll, the last survivor of the patriarchs of the American revolution, is entitled to the first place.

His family was settled in Maryland ever since the reign of James II, and had, during that period, been possessed of the same ample property, the largest in the union. It stood, therefore, at the head of the aristocracy of the country, was naturally in alliance with the government, could gain nothing, while it risked every thing by a change of policy; and, therefore, according to all the rules and the prejudices and the frailties which are commonly found guiding the conduct of men in a crisis of affairs, Charles Carroll might have been expected to take part against the revolt—certainly never to join in promoting it. Such, however, was not this patriotic person. He was among the foremost to sign the celebrated declaration of independence.—All who did so were believed to have devoted themselves and their families to the furies. As he set his hand to the instrument, the whisper ran round the hall of congress, "there go some millions of property." And there being many of the same name, when he heard it said, "nobody will know what Carroll it is," as no one signed more than his name, "you'll not get it"—there are several of the name, he will never know which is taken. "Not so," he replied, and instantly added his residence, "of Carroll."

He was not only a man of firm mind and steadily fixed principles, he was also a person of great accomplishments and excellent abilities. Educated in the study of the civil law at one of the French colleges, he had resided long enough in Europe to perfect his learning in all the ordinary branches of knowledge. On his return to America he sided with the people against the mother country, and was soon known and esteemed as among the ablest writers of the independent party. The confidence reposed in him caused him soon after to be joined with Franklin in the committee of three sent to obtain the concurrence of the Canadians in the revolt. He was a member of congress for the first two trying years when that body was only fourteen in number, and might rather be deemed a cabinet council for action than any thing like a deliberative senate. He then belonged, during the rest of the war, to the legislature of his native state (Maryland), until 1788, when he was elected one of the United States senate, and continued for three years to act in this capacity. The rest of his time, until he retired from public life in 1804, was passed as a senator of Maryland. In all these capacities he has left behind him a high reputation for integrity, eloquence and judgment.

It is usual with Americans to compare the last thirty years of his life to the Indian summer—sweet as it is tranquil, and partaking neither of the fierce heats of the earlier nor the chilling frosts of the latter season. His years were bright-crowned with happiness, and lengthened far beyond the usual period of human existence. He lived to see the people whom he had once known 900,000 in number, pass to twelve millions; a handful of dependent colonies, a nation of freemen; a dependent settlement assume its place among the first rate powers of the world; and he had the delight of feeling, that to this consummation he had contributed his ample share. As no one had run so large a risk by joining the revolt, so no one had adhered to the standard of freedom more firmly, in all its fortunes, whether waving in triumph or over disaster and defeat. He never despaired of the commonwealth, nor ever had lent his ear to factious councils; never had shrunk from any sacrifice, nor ever had pressed himself forward to the exclusion of men better fitted to serve the common cause. Thus it happened to him that no man was more universally respected and beloved; none had fewer enemies; and, notwithstanding the ample share in which the gifts of fortune were showered upon his house, no one grudged its prosperity.

It would, however, be a very erroneous view of his merits and of the place which he filled in the eye of his country, which should represent him as only respected for his patriotism and his virtues.—He had talents and acquisitions which enabled him effectually to help the cause he espoused. His knowledge was various, and his eloquence was of a high order. It was, like his character, mild and pleasing; like his deportment, correct and faultless; flowing smoothly, and executing far more than it seemed to aim at. Every subject he touched, and many were persuaded. His taste was peculiarly exquisite, for he was a scholar of extraordinary accomplishments; and few, if any, of the speakers in the new world came nearer the model of the more refined oratory practised in the parent state. Nature and ease, want of effort, gentleness united with sufficient strength, are noted as its inevitable characteristics, and, as it thus approached the tone of conversation, so long after he ceased to appear in public, his private society is represented as displaying much of his rhetorical powers, and has been compared, not unaptly, by a late writer, to the words of Nestor, which fell like vernal snows, as he spoke to the people. In conversations, whether of the senate or the multitude, such a speaker, by his calmness and wisdom joined, might well hope to have the weight, and to exert the control and mediatory authority of him, pietati gravis et meritis, who —regit dicis animos et pectora muelc.

In 1825, on the anniversary of the half century after the Declaration of Independence was signed, the day was kept over the whole union as a grand festival, and observed with extraordinary solemnity. As the clock struck the hour when that mighty instrument had been signed, another bell was heard to toll; it was the passing bell of John Adams, one of the two surviving presidents who had signed the Declaration. The other was Jefferson; and it was soon after learned, that at this same hour he, too, had expired in a remote quarter of the country.

There now remained only Carroll to survive his followers; and he had already reached extreme old age, but he lived, for seven years longer, and, in 1832, at the age of 93, the venerable patriarch was gathered to his fathers.

THE LATE LADY FLORA HASTINGS.

The following touching letter was written by lady Flora Hastings, and addressed to her uncle, and by him recently made public. Its publication caused considerable sensation.

From the lady Flora Elizabeth Hastings, to Hamilton Fitzgerald, esp.
Buckingham palace, March 8th, 1839.

MY DEAR UNCLE: KNOWING what a very good man that place Brandy is, I have now a letter that you have already heard a story with which I think London is ringing; but you shall at all events have from my own pen the account of the diabolical conspiracy from which it has pleased God to preserve the duchess of Kent and myself; for that it was intended to ruin the whole concern, though I was to be the first victim, I have no more doubt than that a certain foreign lady, whose hatred to the duchess is no secret, pulled the wires, though it has not been brought home to her yet.

I told you I was ill when I came to town, having been suffering for some weeks from bilious derangement, with its disagreeable accompaniments, pain in the side and swelling of the stomach. I placed myself immediately under the care of sir James Clark, who, being a physician to the duchess as well as to the queen, was the natural person to consult. Unfortunately, he either did not pay much attention to my ailments, or did not understand them, for, in spite of his medicines, the bile did not take its departure. However, by dint of walking and porter I gained a little strength; and, as I did so, the swelling subsided to a very remarkable degree. You may, therefore, guess my indignant surprise when, about a fortnight since, sir James Clark came to my room and announced to me the conviction of the ladies of the palace that I must be privately married—or at least ought to be so; a conviction into which I found completely talked over. In answer to all his exhortations to confession, "as the only means of saving my character;" I returned, as you may believe, an indignant but steady denial that there was any thing to confess. Upon which he told me that nothing but my submitting to a medical examination would ever satisfy them and remove the stigma from my name.

I found the subject had been brought before the queen's notice, and all this had been discussed and arranged, and denounced to me, without one word having been said to my own mistress, one suspicion hinted, or her sanction obtained for their proposing such a thing to me. From me, sir James went to the duchess, and announced conviction that I was in the family-way, and was followed by lady Portman, who conveyed a message from her majesty to her mother, to say that the queen would not permit me to appear till the examination had decided matters. Lady Portman, (who, and you will grieve to hear, lady Tavistock, are those whose names are mentioned as most active against me), took the opportunity of distinctly expressing her conviction of my guilt. My beloved mistress, who never for one moment doubted me, told them she knew me and my principles, and my family too well to listen to such a charge. However, she was overruled.

The next day, having obtained the duchess's very reluctant consent, for she could not bear the idea of my being exposed to such a humiliation, (but I felt it right to her, and to my family and myself, that a point blank refutation should be instantly given to the lie), I submitted myself to the most rigid examination, and I have the satisfaction of possessing a certificate signed by my accuser, sir James Clark, and also by sir Charles Clarke, stating as strongly as language can state it, that "there are no grounds for believing that pregnancy does exist, or ever has existed."

I wrote to my brother, who, though suffering from influenza, came up instantly. It would be too long to attempt to detail all his proceedings, but nothing could be more manly, spirited and judicious than his conduct. He examined and obtained from lord Melbourne a distinct disavowal of his participation in the plot, and would not leave town until he had obtained an avowal of the queen, at which, while distinctly disclaiming his belief of any wish on the part of her majesty to injure me, he very plainly but respectfully stated his opinions of those who had counselled her, and his resolution to find out the originator of the slander, and bring him or her to punishment.

I am quite sure that the queen does not understand what they betrayed her into. She has endeavored to show her regret by her civility to me, and expressed it handsomely with tears in her eyes. The duchess was present. A mother could not have been kinder, and she took up the insult as a personal one, directed as it was at a person attached to her service, and devoted to her. She immediately dismissed sir James Clark, and refused to see lady Portman, and would neither re-appear, nor suffer me to re-appear at the queen's table for many days. She has crowned her goodness by a most beautiful letter she has written to poor mama, whom the accounts, kept from her while there was a hope that matters might not become public, would reach to-day.

I am told there is but one feeling as respects me—sympathy for the insult offered to one whose very name should have been a protection to her, and that in many places the feeling is loudly expressed that a public reparation should have been offered me by the reversal of the slanders. This does not, however, appear to be the view of ministers, and as personally I wish for no revenge on those who have insulted me, I cannot say I much regret it, though I doubt whether they are quite judicious as respects the general feeling. As respects parliamentary majorities, they are, with regard to the ladies. And poor Clark, who has been the woman's tool, could hardly be sacrificed alone.

The duchess has stood by me gallantly, and I love her better than ever. She is the most generous-souled woman possible; and such a heart! This business made her very ill. It shattered me, too, very much and I am wretchedly thin; but under Dr. Chambers' good management, I am getting round, and hope soon to be well. Hastings says he has not yet done with the business, nor ever will while there is any thing left to say.

Good bye, my dear uncle, I blush to send you so revolting a tale, but I wished you to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—and you are welcome to tell it right and left. Your affectionate niece.

FLORA ELIZABETH HASTINGS.
To Hamilton Fitzgerald, esp. 17 Rue de Namur, Brussels.

DOMESTIC AFFECTON IN HIGH STATE.

From a publication now making in London, of the private correspondence of Wm. Pitt, the great lord Chatham, the following letters are taken, of which the remarks prefixed will explain the occasion.

On the 14th of January, 1765, the house met again after a short adjournment, and on the address being moved, Mr. Pitt made the most powerful and eloquent speech, in which, after denying the constitutional right of the mother country to tax her colonies for the support of her domestic expenditure, he concluded with recommending an immediate repeal of the act that had occasioned such complaints.—Many and vehement were the debates that ensued on this question. A bill was, however, ultimately carried for repealing the obnoxious measure, and on that occasion we have the following pleasing letters between Mr. Pitt and his wife:

Lady Chatham to Mr. Pitt.
"Hayes, post 9, Saturday, Feb. 22, 1776.

"Joy to you, my dear love. The joy of thousands is yours, under Heaven, who has crowned your endeavors with such happy success. May the Almighty give to mine and to the general prayers, that you may wake without any increased gout, or any cold that may threaten it, by-and-by! I will hope that Mr. Onslow may have been a true prophet, and that what you saw yesterday, and what Johnson tells me you heard, the gratitude of a rescued people, have cured you.

"I cannot tell you with what pleasure my eyes opened upon the news. All my feelings tell me that I hate oppression, and that I love zealously the honor of my dear husband. I must not be sorry that I do not see you to-day; it would be too great a hurry, and it is fit you should rejoice with those that triumphed under you.

"I hope that little Hester's cough is something better; much I cannot say, but as it has begun to yield, I trust we shall soon get the better of it. She and John are by no means indifferent to the news. Eager Mr. William I have not yet seen. A thousand thanks for your despatch of yesterday. The bounds are just discovered in Dock need, and have animated us into a charming noise; which would be inconvenient if I had time to add, than that I am your ever faithful and loving wife,

CHATHAM.

"You will keep Smith as long as you please, till it is convenient for you to see him. I do not understand the house divided at half past 12, and your note being at home till half past 2."

Mr. Pitt to lady Chatham.
February 22, past 4, 1776.

"Happy, indeed, was the scene of this glorious morning (for at past 1 we divided), when the sun of liberty shone once more benignly upon a country too long benighted. My dear love, not all the applauding joy which the heats of animated gratitude, saved from despair and bankruptcy, uttered in the lobby, could touch me in any degree like the tender and lively delight which breathes in your affectionate note.

"All together, my dearest life, makes me not ill to-day after the immense fatigue, or not feeling that I am so. Wonder not if I should find myself in a placid and sober fever, for tumultuous exultation you know I think not permitted to feeble mortal success; but my delight, heartfelt and solid as it is, must want its sweetest ingredient (if not its very essence) till I rejoice with my angel, and with her join in thanksgiving to protecting Heaven, for all not happy deliverance.

"Thank you for the sight of Smith: his honest joy and affection charm me. Loves to the sweet babes, patriotic or not; though I hope impetuous William is not behind in feelings of that kind. Send the sable horses, if you please, so as to be in town early to-morrow morning. I propose, and hope, to execute my journey to Hayes, by 11. Your ever loving husband,

W. PITT."

The pride of country and of woman's affection in the letter of lady Chatham, and the manly return made to such love by her husband, are fairly illustrated in those manifestly confidential letters.

CHRONICLE.

The Maine question. The Boston Advertiser says the recent negotiations for a resurvey of the line of 1753, will lead to no favorable result unless the line of the late Mr. Fox is maintained. It is not a part to abandon the old position set up, that is, to the bay of Fundy, into which the St. John's river enters, is very a part to the Atlantic ocean. If they do it will be very easy to run the line from the monument at the head of the St. John's to within a mile or two of the ridges and morasses which divide the sources of the tributaries of the St. Lawrence from those of the rivers which empty into the Atlantic.

Lynn, Mass. By a census just taken, the population of Lynn amounts to 9,033—being 449 less than in 1836. There are now 1,164 houses and 1,805 families in the town. The late poor pressure, and the numerous large failures, within two or three years, which drove many families out of the place, account for the decrease. The Record says, "It is believed the town is now regaining its amount of population, which will not exceed that of any former period." In 1830, the population was 9,483—in '35, 9,410—in '38, 9,457.

Holland. The draining of the celebrated lake of Harlem, so long contemplated, has at last been decided upon by the late general of Holland. The expense is estimated at eight millions of guilders, (about three millions of dollars). It is like adding a new province to the country.

South Africa. News as late as the 14th of February have been received by late arrivals. The Dutch emigrants have ended the war in the Natal country by the defeat of the native chief Dingano, and the capture of his capital, called Unkululane. The natives lost 3,000 men killed, the emigrants none.

Port Natal had been taken possession of by a British force, which would hold it until instructions should be received from England. Martial law had been proclaimed in the port and surrounding territory for the space of two miles. [N. Y. Post.]

The city of Albany has decided to become a contributor to the Albany and west Stockbridge rail road. The question was settled by the people of that city at the polls, and a majority of more than two thousand votes was given in favor of the project. The city of Albany will now subscribe for the stock of that rail road to the amount of between six and seven hundred thousand dollars.

A case was decided in the superior court on Monday, which may serve as a caution to men holding official situations, that rival carelessness or neglect may sometimes be attended with very serious consequences. Wm. P. Hallett, esq. was sued for the recovery of a judgment which had been obtained against a Mr. Charles Morris, and the amount of which had not been recovered, in consequence of Mr. Hallett's having overlooked, in examining the records of the supreme court, a previous judgment against Morris for $15,000, and $16,000. The amount for which Mr. H. now was sued was nearly $4,000, and before the case had been submitted to the jury, it was made out so clear that his counsel, in his behalf, consented to the payment of it with costs. [N. Y. Transcript.]

Steamboat Savannah. We regret to learn says the Savannah Georgian, of the 20th inst. that this fine boat broke her main shaft on Saturday evening, outside of Tybee, when in smooth water, carrying 19 inches of steam. She came up, however, yesterday, in tow of the Chatham.

The regular trips of the Savannah steam packet company, will not be interrupted by this accident, as the packet boat Wm. Gaston, capt. Ireland, is engaged to take her place.

Georgia. At a convention of the "state rights" party, assembled a few days ago, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to be run for the office of governor of this state at the ensuing election, Charles Dougherty received over two-thirds of the vote of the delegates, and was accordingly nominated as the candidate. Upon this nomination the Georgia Journal remarks as follows:

"The high standing of judge Dougherty in the community, his moral worth, sound political principles, superior abilities, and gentlemanly deportment, will effectively rally the party to his support in the approaching contest. We fear not the result."

Whig state convention in Connecticut. The whigs of Connecticut in state convention at Hartford on Wednesday last, (Noyes Barber, presiding), elected the following gentlemen to represent the whigs of the state in the national convention to be held at Harrisburg in December next:

Charles Davies, Wm. V. Boardman, Charles N. Rockwell, Charles Hanbury, Jos. S. Gladding, E. C. Bacon, Ebenezer Jackson, John S. Peters.

This is one member for each senator and representative of the state in congress, (and being exactly one member from each county in the state), and a substitute has been chosen by the convention, should either of these be chosen to decline serving.

Expeditious to Oregon. We learn from the Peoria (Illinois) Register of the 4th inst. that a party of twelve young men left that place on the 1st, bound for Oregon. Upon reaching the Columbia, the party will proceed to take possession, as American citizens of the most eligible points, and make settlements. These "claimers" are, as a pioneer phrase) to be held in common by the whole company, until the title is recognised by the United States. Should any of the party, however, previously become dissatisfied, he will be at liberty to give, but his interest in the possession thus claimed will be forfeited. The articles and expense of the outfit are as follows:

A good riding horse, say	$75 00
A rifle, carrying ball from 13 to 42 lb.	15 00
Brace of pistols	1 00
Hunting knife	5 00
8-12 lbs. powder, with lead in proportion	5 00
2 woollen blankets	5 00
A pack pony, to be purchased on frontier	25 00
For contingencies	25 00

The Tennessee Review gives an account of a remarkable tree growing in Williamson county, in that state. It is a peach tree well filled with fruit, almost size. Its trunk is which is double, triple, and in some instances quadruple, closely joined together. There are a few scattering ones on it, but the larger portion are double or triple. "This is the first year it has bore fruit, and the singular uniformity of union it exhibits, says the Review, beats any thing of the kind within our predominant knowledge.

Sailing of the Constitution. New York, May 21. The old Constitution frigate has left us. It is said that she was visited by about sixty thousand persons during the sixteen or eighteen days she was in the harbor, and that the majority of the visitors were ladies. She has a crew of about 500 men, and presents a specimen of naval architecture, and beautiful rig and neatness of arrangement, which has delighted every visitor. The Gedney channel—U. S. ship Constitution, May 20, 1859. Sir: Having just passed through the "Gedney channel," and viewed its advantages and reflected on the great purposes to which it is destined, I cannot but congratulate you on the happy discovery. A great naval station and dry dock is no longer a problem.—New York must possess both, if politicians are not blind to the true interests of the country. Respectfully, your obedient servant, ALEXANDER CLAXTON.

Lieutenant Gedney.—A gentleman just got out through this channel, with a neat tide, and 23 1-2 feet of water on the bar. We hope the suggestion of commodore Claxton will be attended to. [New York Express.]

Encampment. We learn from the Army and Navy Chronicle that, for the purpose of repairing the defect existing in the army in regard to brigade and regimental evolutions—a defect resulting both from the small number of soldiers composing the army, and from their necessarily scattering positions, it has been determined to form an encampment during the ensuing summer, and preliminary steps have been taken as to the location. After examining the various sites thought to be eligible, the race ground near Trenton, New Jersey, has been selected as possessing most advantages. Major Mackay, quartermaster, and lieutenant J. E. Johnston, of the topographical engineers, have been directed to lay out the grounds for encampment.

"It is probable that from one to three regiments will be collected at this encampment. The 4th regiment of artillery, just returned from Florida, will be the first on the ground." [Nat. Int.]

The banks in the city of New York and those of the interior of that state have renewed the arrangement formerly made by them, by which the notes of the latter institutions will be redeemed at the city banks. In speaking of this measure, the New York Courier says: "Next to good morals and good government is good currency—and we would wish that every state in our union was as well off in this respect as the state of New York.

Mr. Prieur, who recently sailed for England for the purpose of negotiating certain loans for the city of New Orleans, has written home that he finds it impossible to accomplish the object of his mission.

The following short sentence of advice by William Penn should be kept in mind by any young man who is thinking of coming to America: Never marry but for love, but as thou lovest what is lovely.

The crops. The Cumberland Alleganian, Harrisburg Reporter and Columbia Spy all contain highly favorable accounts of the condition of the growing crops.

We copy with much satisfaction the following article from the Frederick Examiner of Saturday:

The season. Every thing now betokens once of the most abundant harvests which have been known for many years in this country. We are, in fact, now in the valley of "old Frederick" fairly laugh again with joy, as the wheat fields wave their smiling tops beneath the passing breeze.

The wheat promises most beyond, and is now so far advanced, it is hoped, as to be beyond the casualties to which it is so often subject in its earlier stages, and it will probably be ripened so early as to secure it from the danger of rust, to which it is sometimes liable at a later period. The harvest, if this thought, will be at least from ten days to two weeks earlier than usual, as the wheat is already beginning to head. From the Middle-town valley, some heads have been shown to be more than a week ago. We are informed by a gentleman considered as qualified to form a correct opinion, that, in his estimation, the crop here will be at least one-fourth more this year, than it has been for the last twenty years. Truly have the farmers cause to give thanks to a kind Providence for the glorious prospect of a bountiful year. We are, and to rejoice in the rich return they are about to receive for their labors.

Important decision. The chancellor of the state of New York has recently decided that if it is a part of an agreement for the loan of money, that the borrower shall take uncurrent bills at a higher rate than their actual value in cash or current funds, the loan is usurious. That where a loan is secured by the transfer of stock, with a stipulation that the lender should have the privilege of taking a part thereof in full satisfaction of the loan—the parties, at the time of the agreement, anticipating a great increase in the value of the stock—the transaction is usurious. That whenever the lender stipulates even for the chance of an advantage beyond the legal interest, the contract is usurious, if he is entitled, by the agreement, to have the money repaid with the interest thereon, unpaid, to him at all events. [Chronicle.]

Robbery of the express mail. Slips from Nashville Tenn. of Saturday, 12th inst. furnish the intelligence of an agreement for the loan of the express mail. The Union thus describes the circumstance:

The N. Orleans packet of the 15th April, due at this city on the 2d of the same month was missing from the bag. The most searching inquiry was instituted for it by gen. Armstrong, who ascertained that the same came with regularity as far as Murfreesboro' Envelopes of mail packages were subsequently found near the rider's stand, about 20 miles from this city—and from these circumstances and collateral information gathered by Mr. Tucker, the postmaster at Murfreesboro', with Mr. H. C. Low, one of the pretors, who had been in the name of Wm. G. Union when they suspected of having committed the deed. They proceeded to his residence near Murfreesboro' yesterday, and charged him with the commission of the crime in a huff, and gave up to him a full confession of his guilt, and gave up to him a bill which he had rifled the mail.

He was committed to jail for trial, in September next.

The amount of bills of exchange, checks, &c., covered, is about $120,000; together with the amount placed in the hands of the district attorney at Nashville.

Department of state, May 27, 1839.

Information having been received at this department of the payment by the government of the Netherlands, into the hands of the bankers of the United States at London, to the credit of the secretary of the treasury, of the sum of sixty-two thousand six hundred and ninety-two dollars, in satisfaction of the claims preferred against it, in behalf of the owners and other persons interested, in the case of the ship Mary of Baltimore, capt. Phillips, and cargo, captured in 1809, by the French privateer Renommée, carried into Curacoa, and the proceeds appropriated to the use of that colony.

This is to give notice to all whom it may concern, that the person interested can apply at the treasury department, for the purpose of entering into the necessary arrangements, to enable them to receive their respective portions of the proceeds of said claim.

THE QUO WARRANTO CASE. The pleadings had and other proceedings before the supreme court of Pennsylvania, in the quo warranto case of judge Darlington, of Chester, and arrested before the decision was had, by the death of judge D. are not, it seems, to be labor lost. The Harrisburg Keystone has commenced the publication of a report of the case embracing the argument of counsel, pro and con. And although judgment was arrested, in the original case, by the death of judge Darlington, the whole matter, it is said, will be revived in the case of judge Collins, of Lancaster, whose commission being issued under similar circumstances, must possess the same measure of validity as that of judge Darlington; and the argument and "law of the case" brought to bear in the one case, must necessarily be applicable in the other.

The judges in question, "let go to take a better hold of their office," and the difficulties, as to the validity or invalidity of the new commissions, granted to them by the executive of the state, arise out of the various construction put upon certain sections of the amended constitution of Pennsylvania. If the intention of the framers had any thing to do with the construction of the fundamental law, it might be supposed that some advantage would be gained to that end, from the circumstance, that three of the four counsel who argued the case, pro and con, before the supreme court, were members of the convention which formed the "amended" constitution, which gives rise to the case. But the intention of the law must be gathered from the letter of the law.

CONNECTICUT WHIG CONVENTION. We copy the following from the Boston Courier of the 13th ult.

"On Wednesday next a whig convention is to be held at Hartford, to appoint delegates to a national whig convention which will assemble at Harrisburg in the state of Pennsylvania, in December next, for the purpose of nominating candidates for president and vice president of the United States. The state convention will be composed of delegates from the several towns, equal to the number of representatives which the towns are entitled to in the general assembly. The Hartford Courant thinks it would be inexpedient for the convention to express any partiality for any individual candidate lest it might embarrass the action of the convention when assembled at Harrisburg."

VIRGINIA ELECTION. To-day the great battle is fought in Virginia, between the loco focus and the loco-foco-Ritchie-conservatives on the one hand, and the whigs and the friends of Mr. Rives upon the other. There depend upon the result, a United States senator and a governor to be chosen by the legislature, and twenty-one members of congress.

The following is a table of the congressional candidates. Those in small capitals are state rights sub-treasury men, those in italics are conservatives, and those with an asterisk were members of the last congress.

21 Thos. S. Haymond, The Richmond Whig and the Richmond Enquirer, the respective organs of the two parties, have both expressed the most confident hopes of complete triumph.

The Whig counts on the election of ten whig and two conservative members of congress to three administration. It hopes for a gain of two or three in the senate, but not enough to overbalance the force of strong administration majority. In the house of delegates, it claims seventy-seven whig, eleven Rives conservative, and seven doubtful, leaving but thirty-nine certain for the administration. The Enquirer, on the other hand, expects fifteen tory members of congress; it calculates on no change in the senate; and puts down sixty-eight certain administration and nineteen doubtful of the house of delegates, leaving but forty-seven for the whigs and conservatives. A few days will tell the story.

LATEST FROM FLORIDA. Our attentive correspondent has furnished us with the following late news per steamboat Florida.

Garey's Ferry, May 17, 1839.

Dear sir:—Every thing is going on well and smoothly in the negotiation line, and in a very short time I expect to be able to apprise you of the successful termination of gen. Macomb's mission.—Col. Harney arrived from the south a few days ago, bringing with him a very important chief of the Micasukee tribe, he with fourteen others, came to colonel H. whilst on the southern coast, and says the Indians are anxious for peace, and will gladly accede to the general's terms. Gen. Jones (Sam) says that if he comes in, it will be after peace is made, and every thing settled. Coacoche entertains and expresses the same opinion. Several Indians have also visited the general, at Fort King, and promised to bring in more. Murders committed by straggling parties of Indians may still be heard of, but as soon as the news of our wish to make peace is known to all, no danger even of this kind is to be apprehended. [Savannah Georgian.]

The St. Augustine correspondent of the Charleston Courier, under date of the 24th May, writes as follows:—"two chiefs arrived last evening in the Isis, from Key Biscayne. They are on their way to Fort King in order to have an interview with gen. Macomb. Several Micasukes with a sub-chief have recently come in at the latter post, and it is probable that they will soon come to some arrangement, by which all difficulty will be settled. It is not certain that the Indians will consent to emigrate, but the most powerful means of inducing them to this, are evidently to hold out to them prospects of remaining in the territory. This course appears to be followed."

From the St. Augustine News, 18th inst.

Sam Jones (Apiaka) sent in a deputation of about 20 Indians to lieut. col. Harney, at Key Biscayne, in consequence of an interview with the runners sent into the enemy's camp by order of gen. Macomb.—Apiaka would have come in proper person, but sent a very polite apology to col. Harney, in explanation of his absence. Sam is a wag in his own way.—Chittee Enathla (spake lawyer) and Ochee Hajo (mad gnat,) are the representatives of the tribe Seminole proper, and accompanied col. Harney in the steamer Isis on their way to Fort King. They are of Sam Jones' party, and have been sent by him to communicate with the general-in-chief.

The following is the substance of an order issued to the commanders of districts, &c. respecting the enemy, under date of 9th instant, from head quarters at Fort King:

"Major general Macomb having invited the hostile Indians to visit him at Fort King, and they having already shown their willingness to do so, directs that all scouting and active hostile operations be suspended until further orders. If it be necessary to pass from one post to another, or to move about in the vicinity of a station, the officers and soldiers so engaged will be instructed to keep in the road, which the Indians will understand to be for a friendly purpose, and not to molest or destroy them."

The express rider between Fort Fanning and Fort White, was fired upon by Indians on the 9th inst. He escaped, with loss of horse and accoutrements.

From Fort King of the 9th inst. we learn that a Micasukee sub-chief came in at that post, accompanied by seven warriors, and had a long talk with gen. Macomb. He seemed delighted with the prospect of peace and said he would return in a few days with his whole camp, consisting of upwards of one hundred, and also that he would send runners in all directions to collect the "scattered tribes." The general treated them with great kindness. When they are all in, it is the general's intention to offer them a pecuniary inducement to leave the country—a bounty to each individual. They seemed to be greatly taken with the general's natural kindness of manner.

INDIAN MURDERS. The following note is endorsed on the express way-bill from Columbus, Georgia, under date of Wednesday last, the 15th inst. It is from the postmaster at that place:

The steamer Siren, arrived this evening from Apalachiola, brings information of a horrible massacre committed by a party of Indians, on Friday night last, on the Apalachiola river, about 50 miles below the Chattoahochee and Flint. Seven or eight individuals of both sexes were murdered and their bodies burned. The Siren stopped at the spot on Sunday, and the crew and passengers interred the remains of the murdered.

MEXICO. By the schooner Watchman, which sailed from Metamoros on the 7th inst. we learn that the government still retain possession of that place. It is garrisoned with only three hundred troops, the rest having marched to join Bustamante. Nothing certain was known of the movements of the federalists, excepting such accounts as have reached us by previous arrivals. The W. has on board $21,557 in specie. [N. O. Bulletin, 16th.]

The Mexican schooner Vera Cruzana, arrived here on Saturday evening, brings dates from Teapico to the 8th instant. From verbal information from the captain we learn, that Bustamante is yet encamped at about ten or fifteen leagues from the city, waiting for re-inforcements. The exact position of generals Mexia and Urea is not known; but it is believed they are in Puebla or its neighborhood, at the head of about 2,000 men. Tampico is well fortified, with a garrison between 500 and 1,000 men. The government forces are stated to muster near 3,000 men. [N. O. Com. Bul. May 20.]

CENTRAL AMERICA. Extract of a letter from Truxillo, April 29, 1859. The political horizon of this country is again cloudy and most gloomy. Civil war has again broken out and it is difficult to foresee where it may end. The states of Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Honduras having pronounced themselves independent of the federation, and for a reform of the whole political system, the hostile parties have already met twice in the state of St Salvador, and both been routed in the respective battles. Morazan is no longer president, his term having expired, but continues as generalissimo of the armies of the republic, and now at the head of the federal troops. Contributions have already begun—trade is very dull, and should it be likely that this state of things will continue much longer, we may be induced to leave the country together. [N. Y. Gaz.]

A NEW CONGRESS OF PANAMA. The annexed extracts from a late number of the "Diario del Gobierno," the government journal of Mexico, show that a congress, or amphipnetic council of plenipotentiaries, from all the republics of Spanish America, is still contemplated by the statesman of those countries. One of the questions to be submitted at the next session of the Mexican congress, is a treaty now pending for the meeting of the American assembly, or congress. Mr. Gorostiza, the secretary for foreign affairs, presented a memoir to the late congress of Mexico, upon this subject from which we extract.

"Venezuela, New Granada, Ecuador, Brazil, Chili, Peru and Bolivia.

Nothing important has occurred in our relations with these states. The difficulty of communicating with the first, and the fratricidal war in which the three last are engaged, have not allowed our minister in Lima to correspond with the former, or to fulfil in relation to the others, the truly American mission with which we were charged. If the governments in this fair section of the globe, shall unite and direct their efforts to the establishment of a system of external politics, founded on justice, and sustained by the union of all, then will they understand their mutual interests. Then, and not till then, will they secure from foreign nations the consideration which they so justly demand, and which, if perchance, they have not enjoyed, has resulted alone from seperation and disunion.

To effect this important object, the meeting of the general American congress, should be effected as early as practicable. This was a conception of the immortal Bolivar, and one of those sublime ideas which genius like his alone can conceive. This government will co-operate towards such a desirable end, and will, with earnestness, invite the other sister republic to unite in the proposed congress, through its representatives."

Senior Don Juan de Dios Canedo, minister of Mexico, at Lima, in a state despatch to the Peruvian secretary of foreign affairs, alludes to this subject.

"From the political convulsions which have agitated us, destroying the prosperity of our people, and the stability of our institutions, the intricate conviction arises, that the new states should hasten the installation of the great American assembly. The opinion is universal, that this is the only effective antidote to the general calamities of the continent. [Globe.]

WHEAT AND CORN CULTURE IN MAINE AND MASSACHUSETTS. In Maine, the aggregate is as follows:—Wheat, 1,107,849 bushels—bounty on wheat, $87,562 30—corn, 1,630,996 bushels in the ear—bounty on corn, $66,285 80. Whole bounty on wheat and corn $153,931 10. In Massachusetts, raised last year 97,195 bushels of wheat—Maine 1,000,654 bushels more than that state. The little county of Kennebec, in a point of territory—produced 125,923 bushels, being 28,735 bushels more than the whole state of Massachusetts.

The gross amount of wheat and corn would not be less than 2,000,000 bushels, which with 500,000 bushels of rye, buckwheat, barley, &c. afford four bushels of bread stuffs to every inhabitant of the state. If to all this we add the potatoes, ruta baga, and other roots that enter into the food of man, who will say that Maine cannot raise her own bread? Take now into the account the lumber, fish, lime, granite, hay, oats, beef, pork, horses, wool, mutton, cider, apple, &c., and see, which we produce and export in great quantities, and, saying nothing of the business and wealth produced by manufactures and commerce—is there any reason to think that the world will ever be more populous and the richest state in New England? She is coming to this condition most rapidly."

MICHIGAN WHEAT. The Cleveland Herald of Tuesday, 21st inst, says:—"Michigan is turning out not only a good quantity but a good quality of wheat. The big Neptune, captain Signs, brought down yesterday a full cargo from St. Josephs, destined for Buffalo. A gentleman has left a sample with us, which is pronounced better than any Ohio wheat brought to this place, and urges upon Ohio farmers the necessity of taking more pains with their seed, or the farmers of Michigan will take the lead. The sample is very superior—large, plump and bright berry."

TRADE OF THE NEW YORK CANALS. That some idea may be formed of the magnitude of this trade, we mention the following fact.

In the early part of this month a break occurred in the Erie canal, between Schenectady and Utica, which took nearly three days to repair. During this short time, a line of boats collected on the canal of over four miles in extent.

To show the foundation on which this immense trade rests, we mention the following items (official, 1855) of the value of the annual industry of the state of New York. [N. Y. Jour. Com.]

THE CANAL BREAKERS. All the breakers in the canal are now repaired, and the boats are passing with great rapidity. Not less than fifty arrived in Utica, from the east, on Tuesday; and an equal number passed down. It is estimated, by experienced boatmen, that, by Friday morning, every boat which has been detained, by the heavy break at Frankfort, will have passed on, and this, too, despite the humbuggish article of the Argus, about a "fortnight's" delay.

The break which occurred near the Frankfort break, on Sunday, although somewhat extensive, was, we understand, repaired in about twelve hours. It occurred at a point where the work of enlargement has been carried on during the winter; and where for the purpose of wheeing out the earth, the old embankment had been removed, and then rebuilt with large lumps of hard frozen earth.

It is this species of gross carelessness, and not the "mismanagement" of the whig superintendents, which has caused the break, of which so much complaint has been made. [Rochester Democrat.]

LUMBER TRADE. It is generally known that the lumber trade between Great Britain and her North American colonies is of great importance, but we are disposed to think that very few are aware of its extent. From a statistical table of the wrecks on shore and at sea, and the number of crews lost between the years 1834 and 1838 inclusive, it appears that of wrecks on shore there were 66; at sea 163; and of crews lost or never heard from, 73. Of how great importance and extent must be a commerce the current losses of which are so great, and of what value must the intercourse be, if in other departments of trade the losses bear any thing approaching to a comparison with this single branch. It must be borne in mind, however, that great as this trade certainly is, its advantages, with perhaps the exception of those of the lumber trade, do not accrue to the government of the mother country, the expenses of these colonial establishments being such as to overrun very far any receipts from them. If we are not mistaken, the estimate of cost and profit stands as three to seven, or in other words, whilst the receipts to the customs, &c. are £2,000,000, the outlays amount to £7,000,000. There are certainly advantages accruing, but they are incidental in their character, such as the nursery furnished for seamen, the depositary afforded for surplus population, and the field opened to individual enterprise. These are well worthy of consideration, and constitute an inducement for keeping up relations which in a mere money point of view are not worthy of being preserved. So far as the colonies are concerned, their dependent condition relieves them of burthens which should they ever attain the position of independent sovereignties, will be found very onerous. [Bull. Amer.]

IOWA. The commissioners appointed to locate, under the act of congress, a suitable place for the seat of government of Iowa, have chosen a spot in Johnson county. The location was made without reference to the law of congress, which confines the selection to a certain specified township within the surveyed portion of the territory. The Burlington Gazette says, the site selected is well suited to the purpose—beautifully situated on the eastern bank of the Iowa, two miles northwest of the town of Napoleon, and within one mile of the centre of the territory, north and south. In the immediate vicinity of the location several extensive strata of gray marble have been discovered, which can easily be made available in the erection of buildings suited to the "dignity and state" of this favored region. The surrounding country, in richness and beauty, is equal to any portion of the territory. A rich vein of lead has recently been discovered in the neighborhood. Timber is also plentiful, and of first rate quality; water privileges are also numerous. The seat of government is to be called the "city of Iowa."

A REGION OF SPRINGS. At the village of East Liberty, in Logan county, Ohio, there are numerous fountain wells and springs, a short description of which may, perhaps to the philosophic mind, be matter of amusement and interest. East Liberty has something of an elevated station, lying in the eastern part of that county, between the head waters of Millcreek and Darby, which streams empty into the Scioto at least forty miles apart, and here their sources are nearly together. As we before said, the site of the village is considerably elevated, yet it is on the very frontier of an extensive plain, and, to the south, west, east and northeast. The generally undulating, and in the vicinity of Mad river, it is considerably hilly. About four years since, a well was dug in the village by Mr. John Mathis, to the depth of thirty-three or thirty-four feet, when a large stream of water burst within a few feet from the bottom of the well; and such was the rapidity of its flow, that, in less than three minutes, it filled the well nearly to the top, as it approached the surface it rose gradually slower; but run over at the top and still continues to run in a large stream.

Subsequently, there have been six or seven other wells dug, in various parts of the town, and all of which rose and ran in the same manner of the first one described; and, indeed, every well dug in the vicinity is a fountain. The method of walling these wells is, to throw in stones to the top, and until they fill them nearly to the surface promiscuously, whence commence their wall. Thus we can have a delightful stream of cold water in every citizen's door-yard. But I will mention another phenomenon. In the early part of May last, about a quarter of a mile above the town, on the bank of the Otter

... a large spring spontaneously burst out in a place where there had before no water ran, except a mere ooze out of the bank. The spring sent up a muddy water for some days, but at length it became clear; and, during the present dry season, with undiminished fullness, sufficiently to supply the grist mill situated in the limits of the town. But, of late, the citizens began to find their wells diminished in force, but attributed it to the dry weather. This spring, however, was found to increase in fullness, and a larger stream than of late flow from it, notwithstanding the long and increasing drought. But, on building a dam, and raising the head of the spring about three feet, all the wells in town were found to raise simultaneously to flow with their usual vigor.

NEW YORK GENERAL BANKING LAW. The Albany Evening Journal publishes a list of the associations which have been formed under the general banking law, the amount of the securities which have been deposited with the comptroller, the amount and denomination of notes for which certificates have been given, and the number of circulating notes issued by the bank department. From this document it appears that up to the 30th of April last, forty-three banking associations, of which seven were in the city of N. York, have deposited $2,737,090 in state stocks and $351,336 31 in mortgages, making a total of $2,996,406 31 as security for the ultimate redemption of their notes. Of the stocks so pledged, 69,000 consist of 6 per cent. Missouri stock; 877,000 of 6 per cent. Arkansas, 25,000 of 5 per cent. New York; 110,000 of 5 per cent. Maine; 160,000 of 5 per cent. Alabama; 5,000 of 6 per cent. Michigan; 324,000 in 5 per cent. Indiana; 50,000 of 6 per cent. Kentucky; and 400 of 6 per cent. United States.

The bank department has delivered notes to these associations to the amount of 48,382 amounting in the aggregate to $1,590,818. Of this number 67,500 are one dollar notes, 162,840 were in two dollar notes, 21,614 were in three dollar notes, 174,300 five dollar notes, 21,610 in ten dollar notes, and 10 in one hundred dollar notes.

Besides this, orders have been given for notes to the amount of 4,251,111 dollars, of which 510,000 are to be of the denomination of one dollar, 334,048 of the denomination of two dollars, 50,000 of the denomination of three dollars, 359,200 of the denomination of five dollars, 63,300 of the denomination of ten dollars, 3,350 of the denomination of twenty dollars, 2,200 of fifty dollars, 2,350 of one hundred dollars, 60 of five hundred dollars, and 50 one thousand dollars.

Since the table from which the preceding statements are taken was prepared, several other associations have deposited their securities and received notes for circulation. Among these are the Bank of Commerce, New York; the Howard Trust and Banking company, of Troy; the Ballston Spa Bank, the Fort Plain bank, and the Bank of Verplanck.

BANK OF DARIEN. The Milford (Geo.) Central Union says: "The bills of this bank and branches are all received at par by the Central bank in payments of debts due to it. The amount recently redeemed of the bills of the Darien bank, at the mother bank and not the several branches, together with the amount paid into the Central bank, warrants the belief that a resumption of payments will shortly take place at this bank and its branches. The holders of the notes should not take any sacrifice on them."

MONEYED INSTITUTIONS OF ST. LOUIS. The legislature of Missouri has chartered several insurance companies with liberal privileges, and they are in course of operation under the most favorable auspices. Among these is the "Mutual Insurance company," of which Mr. H. S. Cox, former cashier of the branch Bank United States (St. Louis), has been appointed president, and Mr. T. O. Duncan, formerly of the same institution, cashier—and the Perpetual Insurance company, with a capital of three hundred thousand dollars, two-thirds of which we learn are owned by prominent men in Philadelphia and Boston. Both of these companies are authorized to make fire, marine and life insurance, to receive money on deposit, to deal in exchange, &c. and will be enabled to effect a great deal of good in a young city. When we consider that the legal rate of interest in Missouri is ten per cent. and that the insurance companies of St. Louis have, with all their heavy losses, paid from 30 to 40 per cent. per annum, it is not surprising that such stock is sought for by eastern capitalists. If the whole stock is loaned out on adequate security at ten per cent. and the insurance business yield in itself 20 per cent. no doubt can exist of the ultimate and immense value of such stock. So profitable has been such business, that in one case, we are informed, after the first instalment of $10 per share, two dividends of ten dollars each were made within 12 months, without any further instalment. Such has been the increase of St. Louis that its population is now, by census, eighteen thousand. In 1830 it was described in one of our gazettes as a "fourishing post-town." In 1834 it contained 8,000 inhabitants. In 1837 six hundred houses were erected, which were not sufficient to meet the demand, while the business of the city keeps upwards of one hundred steamboats in constant employ throughout the year.

DANIEL WEBSTER. The following correspondence passed between this distinguished statesman and two of the merchants in Boston prior to his departure for New York:

Boston, May 6th, 1839.

Hon. Daniel Webster:
Dear sir: Having heard of your intention to visit Europe, we beg you to accept the accompanying suit of clothes made from American cloth, manufactured by Messrs. W. & D. D. Farnum, Waterford, Mass. which we have no doubt you will be happy to wear as a specimen of American manufacture. Very respectfully, your obedient servants,
MILTON & SLOCOMB.

Summer street, May 7, 1839.

Gentlemen: I accept with pleasure the present of the suit which you have been polite enough to send me. Both in material and making, the articles appear to me to be very superior, and I shall be proud to show them as proofs of the progress of American manufacturing skill. Yours, with much regard,
DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE CARRIAGE WHEEL. A paper in the May number of the American Museum of Literature and the Arts has the following remarks on the wagon wheel:

"Next to agriculture, came the means of transportation. The fruits of the earth must not only be raised, but brought home. Conceive of the labor and loss of time to bring home each sheaf by itself, by human hands, and even of heasts of burden. The next thing to carry, is traction. But many things would be wasted and destroyed by that process. Something must be placed beneath them to prevent the injury. Still the surface of the ground was rough and difficult to pass over. A smooth bridge must be made to remedy its roughness, and level its inequalities. That bridge was found in the common wheel—an invention now never thought of as wonderful, but in fact, one of the most complete and perfect and useful for its purpose, that has sprung from the ingenuity of man. It is in fact, an interminable, portable bridge, with a highly polished surface, which the vehicle pulls up after it, and sets down before it as he goes, making the whole process of locomotion a most ready and extemporaneous affair. It is laid down and taken up with the greatest ease through wet and dry, over hills and dale, over stones and through the mud, and what is most wonderful of all it in fact shortens the distance, so far as friction is concerned, in precise proportion of the circumference of the wheel to the circumference of the axle-tree. Tongue cannot tell, imagination cannot conceive the benefits which this simple machine has conferred upon mankind. For its perpetual and universal use, it may be said to rank next to the plough, and as the vehicle of trade and travel, that effective stimulant of all improvement, it has played a most conspicuous part in the progress of mankind. Its inventor was one of the greatest benefactors of his race; and though his memory be lost in the night of ages—and no one can tell where his ashes are laid—how much better does he deserve to live in the recollections of the world, than Caesar or Napoleon, who trampled nations in the dust."

REMARKABLE PREDIGY. The Belfast (Ireland) Chronicle gives the following account of David McCreaney, living in the parish of Aughagallon, county of Antrim:

He was born without arms or legs, having only two short stumps in place of arms, and as to the legs, one is only a few inches long, with a diminutive, shapeless foot, without any joint intervening, so as to form a thigh and a leg. The other is almost as long as in a middle sized man, but greatly deformed. It is extraordinary what this decrepit man can perform, as there is scarcely any job in the farm yard he cannot do, viz: he can thrash, and has often done so the whole day before a hired man; he can harness and unharness a horse, clean a stable or cow house, tether a cow; tie up with the stumps, and throw on his shoulders a bundle of clover and grass 100 lbs. in weight; he can shave himself, holding the razor in his toes, also use the knife or fork in the same manner; he can dress and undress himself without any assistance, balance a cup or bowl on the flat of one of the stumps, drink out of it, and lay it down in safety; he can assist at the breakfast table, helping his mother to draw water, lifting the kettle of boiling water with his toes, and has occasionally helped himself to a cup out of the teapot in the same manner. These are only a few specimens of his bodily actions, which are far surpassed by his mental powers. It was unfortunate for himself that he never received any education; for, by the power of memory alone, there is scarcely any arithmetical question he cannot solve, and a great many mathematical ones, many specimens of which he can describe; and it is truly amazing and wonderful to hear him do so, owing to the astonishing stretch of memory required on some of those occasions.

POST OFFICE STATISTICS IN GREAT BRITAIN.—The number of letters annually transmitted throughout the kingdom is estimated at about 77,000,000; the gross receipts for postage in 1837, were £2,339,737 18s. 3d.; the total cost of management and transportation £298,632 8s. 2d. leaving a balance of £1,611,105 10s. 1d. as the revenue received by the government from that department. Besides the number of letters mentioned above, there is to be added 7,000,000 franked letters, and 44,500,000 newspapers, which are free of postage. A reduction of postage is recommended there as it is here. A committee who have investigated the affairs of the department propose a reduction.—The consequence of following the course recommended by them they say, would be to increase the number forwarded annually to 400,000,000.

DINNER TO VICTORIA. On the evening of the 24th, her majesty Victoria, for the first time since her accession to the throne, accepted of an entertainment from a subject. She dined in Berkeley square with the marquis and marchioness of Lansdowne. Her mother rode in the same carriage, and in the one that followed were Lady Hastings, &c. Only 24 covers were laid, and the company, of course, were almost exclusively of the highest rank, dukes, &c. among them the duke of Norfolk. In the evening there was a superb concert, and the magnificent suite of rooms filled with the choicest statuary and paintings, were all thrown open. About 350 attended, including the duke of Wellington, &c. The queen retired shortly after midnight.

MOCRA. Mocha, in Arabia, on the Red Sea coast, is situated in lat. 13° 20' N. 43° 17' E. and is under Turkish government. The city at a little distance, has an imposing appearance. Its white houses, with their turretted tops and mosques, with their spires shooting in the air, led me before I landed, to think quite favorably of it; soon after landing, however, and getting within its walls, I found my disappointment. The white houses do well to be seen only at a distance, for when near, the redness of their structure proves them to be as well suited for one part of their use as the other; that is for the stabling for horses and camels, as well as the accommodation of human beings. The streets are rather worse in point of dirt; they are the common receptacles of all kinds of dirt, not excepting the drainings of establishments from the upper stories, frequently proving unpleasant to the heads of persons passing under; and as they are never swept or cleaned, embankments of dirt are found on either side; they are unpaved and very narrow, but few being over twelve feet, and added to their other inconveniences, one, while walking through them, is every now and then jostled, either by a filthy cooly, probably with a dirty mat of dates upon his back, a loaded camel, or a jack-ass. If a person walks 50 yards without coming in contact with either of these, he does well; he yet, however, has to guard against stumbling over half starved dogs and decrepit and diseased beggars, that swarm the streets, and whose want of strength does not allow them to get out of the way—the latter are daily to be seen dying on the streets, presenting the most disgusting sight that can be conceived. There is a hospital in the city superintended at the expense of government, it is kept only for invalid Turks, and of course the Arabs or others are not allowed to enter; and the Mahomedan religion being strongly spiced with fatalism, neither Turks nor Arabs have much faith in the healing art of physicians; they are therefore but poorly supplied with them. FOREIGN NEWS.

The New York papers furnish us with the following items of news, in addition to what we published last week, by the ship England, capt. W. White, from Liverpool to the 24th ult. the day of her sailing.

ENGLAND AND IRELAND.

Ministers have been sustained by the house of commons in the government of Ireland. The following was the resolution proposed by lord J. Russell:

"That it is the opinion of this house that it is expedient to persevere in those principles which have guided the executive government in Ireland of late years, and which have produced the effectual administration of the laws, and the general improvement on the part of the United Kingdom."

Sir Robert Peel's amendment, which is of great length, went to defer a resolution of approval of the course of ministers respecting Ireland, until the resolution of inquiry into crime in that country, as adopted by the lords, had been carried out. It was lost by the following vote: for Peel's amendment 296, against it 318. A majority for ministers 22. Mr. J. Duncombe's proposed addition to lord J. Russell's resolution was then called for and ran thus:

"That it is also expedient to effect such further reforms in the representation of the people in parliament as would conduce to their contentment, and to the welfare of the country at large."

The result of the division was such as we had anticipated, although the tory advocates boldly asserted the majority for ministers would not exceed fifteen, promising to "eat all above that number without pickles."

This amendment was lost by a majority against it of 218.

The Maine question. The Liverpool Courier of the 24th says: a private letter, dated St. John, 31st of March, has been received by way of Derry, which states that "the border war is at an end, each party having agreed to withdraw their troops, and appoint a civil force to protect the timber on the disputed territory."

FRANCE.

The Chambers, April 18, elected its fourth vice president. The candidates were M. Etienne, one of the leaders of the coalition, and gen. Jacqueminot, a personal friend of the king, and one of the staunchest supporters of the ex-cabinet. Here was another direct contest between the court party, aided by the recreant doctrinaires and coalition. The result was

Number of votes	423
For M. Etienne,	212
Gen. Jacqueminot,	209

M. Etienne was then declared duly elected vice president, amid the acclamations of the left and left centre.

Three of the four vice presidents belong to the coalition; and if Passy be sincere in his repentance, the court is in a worse position than it ever was before.

From the London Times, April 23.

The Paris papers of the 21st have arrived by our usual express. They are divided in opinion respecting the reconstructions of the cabinet.

The "Journal des Deuats" states that the new ministry would appear on Monday in the "Moniteur," and that marshal Soult would be president of the council, with Messrs. Passy, Thiers, Dupin, Lafourcade, Sanzet, d'Argout, &c. for his colleagues. "It will be seen," says the Deuats, "that this cabinet is exclusively chosen from the ranks of the left centre."

ENGLAND AND ITALY.

The marriage of Prince Doria Pamphili; of the illustrious house of Daria, with lady Mary, daughter of earl Talbot, was performed with great ceremony at Rome, by the cardinal Giustiniani. The pair went then to St. Peter's to return thanks, and afterwards set out for Turin to visit the king, (a cousin of the prince), on their way to England.

The bishop of Petersburg is dangerously ill.

BELGIUM AND HOLLAND.

We have great satisfaction in announcing that the long protracted negotiations on the affairs of Belgium and Holland have at length been brought to a termination. The treaties between Holland and Belgium, and between those two powers and the five powers represented in conference, were signed on Friday afternoon, the 19th of April. The treaty is substantially the 24th article of that of 1831, and is mutually satisfactory to both parties.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

The rumor of the battle between the Carlists under the count of Moralia (Cabrera) and the Christians under Van Halen, alleged to have taken place near Montelban, in Lower Aragon, on the 9th April, turns out to be false.

Madrid papers to the 13th instant inclusive, with letters from Bayonne to the 16th, have been received in London. They announce the disgraceful flight of general Van Halen from before Sagura, occupied by Cabrera.

On the 7th, the Madrid mail was stopped by a band of mounted Carlists near Baylen, and the escort, consisting of six individuals, mercilessly murdered.

In La Mancha the Carlist butcher Palillos, has refused quarter to every Christiano falling into his hands. All that are taken are instantly shot.

Cabrera surprised the military hospital of Daroca on the night of the 10th, and carried away with him the sick and wounded, and the soldiers left for their defence.

It was said that Van Halen contemplated retreating from before Sagura, and that Don Carlos meditated a new attempt on Madrid.

TURKEY.

Letters to the 27th of March state, that the sultan had acceded to the desire of baron Roussin to send a plenipotentiary to Mehemet Ali, relative to the fulfilment of the treaty of Kutaiho; and also agreed to send another envoy to determine the form of feudal sovereignty for the pasha. The sultan was agreed to the proposition of the English French ambassadors, that in the event of the Turkish fleet leaving the Dardanelles, an Anglo French division of 6 ships of the line, 4 frigates, &c. should watch their movements, 5 ships of the line under admiral Stopford to go to Alexandria, and 3 under the French admiral, Lalande, to Tunis. The naval conflict (unless a Navarino one) between sultan and dey would be prevented.

EGYPT.

The Courrier Francais publishes an extract of a letter from Alexandria, dated the 3d instant, which states that only three or four battalions of troops remained in that city, and not half a dozen in Cairo having been sent into Syria, in the anticipation of hostilities with the army of the sultan.

We have received the following from a correspondent at Cairo, dated the 26th ult:—"The pasha of Egypt has declared to colonel Campbell his intentions to abolishing slavery immediately in all countries subject to his authority."

EAST INDIES.

Mr. Waghorn's portion of the overland mails for India reached London April 18th. The dates Calcutta, February 12; Madras, February 19; Bombay, February 23. The favorable account from the frontier which have been communicated by government are fully confirmed by this arrival. From Calcutta we are glad to learn, that the state of commercial affairs was more satisfactory. Produce was generally advancing, and staples in demand for European markets. The importation of bullion had also been abundant, and money plentiful. Early in the month indigo had been purchased freely at a slight advance, but buyers seem anxious for further advices from the home market. In the meantime holders were firm; the crop was estimated at 80,000 mds. and the purchases which had been made were chiefly on French account. Bull against shipments for England had been negotiated at 2s. 6d. 6 months sight, and ten months; against French shipments, payable in London, 2s. 2 1/2 sd. to 2s. 2 1/4 sd. and the United States at 2s. 2 1/2 sd. per company's rupee. The exchange on London was 2s. 2 1/2 sd. six months, and freights £4 10s. to £4 15s.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

By the packet ship Shakspeare, capt. Comwell, arrived at New York last evening, from Liverpool, brings dates from that place to the 27th of April, and from London to the day previous. The news brought by her is of no political moment.

The cotton market is represented as quiet, few sales having been made, some of which had been at slightly lower rates than those of the week before. One-eighth to a farthing is the decline quoted.

Accounts from Manchester are gloomy. The are rumors of a change of cabinet. Great anxiety prevails in ministerial circles, an anxiety felt, seems as much by the queen as by any one.

The Shakspeare brings 200 steerage passengers. London, April 25—half past one. Up to the present time we have no information of the arrival of the New York packet of the 1st inst.

Consols continue as in the early part of the morning, 92 3/4 money, and for the account 93 with little doing.

London, April 26. The reports recently current of an intention on the part of the Bank of England to raise the rate of discounts from this day, have not so far been confirmed. "The result of the usual weekly meeting to-day, but the notice anticipated did not make its appearance. The funds continue with little variation, and business in them inactive. Consols were 93, buyers for money; an 93 1/4, buyers for account. Bank stock, 196 1/2 to 197 India stock, 255 to 6. Exchequer bills 43s. to 45s premium.

The transactions in foreign securities were extremely unimportant.

Anxiety of the queen regarding the fate of her ministers. We are informed from a private source that such was the anxiety of her majesty to learn the fate of the motion in the house of commons of Friday night (or rather on Saturday morning), that the queen did not retire to rest until two hours past midnight. One of her majesty's pages of the presence was in waiting at the house to convey to the queen the result of the division, which reached Buckingham palace within five minutes after it had taken place. We believe that the duchess of Kent did not retire to her chamber until the arrival of the information, which was immediately communicated by her royal highness to her anxiously waiting daughter. [The Britania.]

The rumor which has been prevalent during the last fortnight in naval circles, of the intention of ministers to send a demonstration fleet to the Baltic, out to be correct. It is to consist of twenty-two to be commanded by Admiral Gage, and seen that information which has reached the foreign office of the aggressive disposition has recently been manifested by Russia, has this determination. [United Service Gazette of discovery. During the past week the yard at Chatham have presented a scene of a great battle, in consequence of the fitting out of iron steamships intended for scientific discoveries in the southern latitude, under the command of James C. Ross, R. N. A.

Several banks have been allowed to accumulate to an extent at the mouth of Cowes harbor, that but vessels of very small draught will soon be sent.

London, April 25, (evening). Accounts from the continent state, that Lord Posaony and the admiral Roussin have requested from their governments that the English and French squadrons in the Mediterranean should be considerably reduced, so that troops should be embarked on them, to act according as circumstances require, and to make a diversion against one or the other. The sultan has recalled to Constantinople the Seraskier Hassan pasha, to learn his own wish what state his army is in, he has hopes of attacking with success the army.

FRANCE.

The ministry had as yet been formed by the general M. Passy, the president of the chamber of deputies, who has assumed his former position as a member of the cabinet, very much to the surprise of the friends of his coalition. He persists in a desire to make Thiers minister of foreign affairs, which Marshal Soult is bitterly opposed. The papers contain the following account of the affairs:

Paris, 25th April, (evening). The conclusion of the debate in the French chamber of deputies on Tuesday up to the delivery of the mails for London, will be found in part of the Sun. Among the most remarkable speeches was one by M. Passy, the president of the chamber, who declared that since his election he had informed the king that too much had been wasted in useless negotiations, and a cabinet, including M. Thiers ought not to be appointed. His majesty acceded, and the affair came to nothing in consequence of the king's refusal to give the foreign department to Thiers.

Marshal offered M. Thiers the department of the interior, which the friends of M. Passy prevailed upon him to refuse, and in the end M. Passy very properly too. He thought M. Thiers had a right to the portfolio of affairs, and he would not consult his own honor and the welfare of France, in accepting any other.

This speech, from the new convert to the policy, elicited marks of general surprise upon the chamber. The friends of the minister the 14th of April looked as if they had been a voting for M. Passy, who now boldly asks old position as one of the leaders of the party. The marquis of Dalmeida in the name of the king, marshal Soult, assumed all the responsibilities of the rejection of the claims of M. Thiers, and was not to blame, as he had allowed the king to exercise his own discretion.

Paris, Tuesday, April 23. Half past the debate on the interpellations, as they are called in the chamber of deputies, on the subject of the ministerial crisis, being to some prejudice of a fall determination in the crown and danger the peace of Europe, the French were advanced. For the account the three sessions opened at 31f. 35c. improved to 31f. 50c. and at 31f. 40c. being 15 cents higher than yesterday. The five per cents. from 110f. 60c. rose to 110f. 50c. declined to 110f. 50c. and closed at 110f. 50c. a rise of 30 cents.

Theacker season has opened on the northern coast of France with great promise of success. A storm in the port of Pecamp a few days ago destroyed 60,000 fish.

The telegraph between St. Petersburg and London has just been completed. On the 12th first telegraphic despatch was received in announcing that the emperor had been serried, but was quite recovered. Yesterday, (April 17), about two o'clock a fire broke out in a baker's house at Stockholm, limited in less than an hour and a half 190 persons were prey to the flames, and 113 families were driven into misery. The fire was not extinguished when the accounts last.

[Antwerp paper.

Antwerp, Tuesday, April 23. The market continues in an exceedingly depressed state, both for goods and yarn, and prices yesterday were generally lower than on the preceding Tuesday. In yarn there was a decline of fully 2d. per lb.; in printing cloth, of about 1d. 3d. per piece; making a total reduction of about 1d. per lb. in yarn, and 9d. per piece in cloth, from the prices obtained about a month ago, whilst cotton commands about the same rates as at that time and as prices were then unremunerating, it may be readily conceived that great losses are now sustained on every thing sold, and more especially upon yarn. Of course, under such circumstances, the production is rapidly diminishing; many mills are working short time, others are stopping altogether; and we fear that the condition of the working classes is likely to be very seriously affected, unless some improvement should speedily take place. Huddersfield market April 23. There was a dull market in almost every description of goods, which cause a gloomy foreboding for the spring trade.

Blackburn. A more stagnant and unsatisfactory state of business can scarcely be imagined than the present; and many are now becoming impatient. Yarns and cloth are both lower in prices generally; and, in some of the better kinds of power loom prints are from 9d. to 1s. per piece.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The packet ship Louis Philippe, at New York, brings Paris papers of the 30th April, and Havre of 1st May. The ship Bowditch, also at New York, sailed from Liverpool on the 28th April.

The London Morning Herald says, "rumors of ministerial changes are rife in whig radical coteries, and are seriously discussed in conservative newspapers."

The apprehensions excited by a report that the Bank of England was about to increase the rate of discount, have entirely subsided.

London, April 26. Considerable alarm has been excited by the apprehension of an increase of the rate of discount by the Bank of England, because such a course would be deemed harsh and unceremonious at the present moment; however, it is asserted that the directors never seriously entertained the project, therefore it was not even discussed by them. The knowledge of this fact may go far to allay the fears of the timid. The banks in Lancashire and other distant provinces, which have hitherto depended on the London market for rediscounts will probably find some difficulty in obtaining accommodation to the same extent as before; but this must teach them to be more cautious in their advances, until circumstances alter; if they conduct their business with prudence, they will not suffer any great harm from a gentle check. Of late the London money market has been actually drained by the great demand for the currency.

BELGIUM.

A letter from Brussels states that the United States have renewed their claim on Belgium for an indemnification to American citizens for damage done to the property during the siege of Antwerp. The recent stay of Mr. Van Buren, jr. in Belgium, is believed to have been connected with negotiations relating to this affair, and it was expected to form the subject of long discussion in the chambers.

RUSSIA.

Extract of a letter from St. Petersburg of the 9th instant. "Every thing here breathes war; the emperor, it is said, will go to Kiew, even before the marriage of the duke de Luttenberg, to review the army of the south, and to deliver the command of it to marshal Paskevitch. General Witt is charged to negotiate with prince Metterich for the rupture of Austria with England in case of a war in the east; and it is said that the emperor has offered as an inducement to Austria, the incorporation of Servia, Bosnia and the Montenegrin country, with Hungary, taking for Russia, at the same time, Wallachia and Moldavia."

FRANCE.

Up to the 28th, the negotiations at Paris for the construction of a ministry, appeared to be on the eve of consummation; but as usual another explosion occurred, and the baseless fabric was scattered to the winds. After consultations of Soult and Broglie with the king, a meeting of the parties took place, when M. Dupin declined the proposition of taking the presidency as a mere nominal office, of hussier or high constable to the cabinet. As to Fassy, marshal Maison and M. Thiers, neither would agree for the other to fill the place. Marshal Soult was not in the programme of the new cabinet.

SARDINIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

The king of Sardinia has shown great wisdom in the liberal treaty he has just concluded with the U. States. Not only all our own products, excepting salt gunpowder and manufactured tobacco, are admitted, but the produce of other countries exported from America. Our cotton and tobacco will find a great market at Genoa, for its transit thence into the interior of Germany. It is a singular fact that the first commercial treaty made by Sardinia is with America—a land discovered by a Genoese.

The East India company are actively enlisting recruits in London, for their service in the Levant and in the east. The movements of the autocrat excite apprehensions.

A line of balloons, it is said, will shortly be established, by Mr. Green, between Cheltenham and London.

Market markets, April 30.—Cotton. Great flatness prevailed in our cotton market throughout the whole of last week. The intelligence from the interior as well as from England, and more particularly from Manchester, being of an unfavorable tenor. U. S. of ordinary sorts, which had hitherto been scarce and comparatively higher than good qualities, have now, owing to the recent arrivals, become plentiful, and sell at a decline of 1f. 1f. 50.

Yesterday, (Monday), the market opened with the same want of spirit, and even in a greater degree, the accounts brought by the English mail, being of a still more gloomy character. The sales of the week having been 2,899 bales, including 1,016 bales New Orleans, at 102f. a 113f.; 360 Mobile, 105f. a 117f.; and 335 upland, at 104f. a 111f. Import 847 bales.

May 2.—Cotton. The cotton market continues in the same torpid state, and prices are irregular, with a downward tendency, in the face of the firmness manifested by the principal holders. The falling off in our deliveries for the last four months, compared with the same period last year, amount to more than 50 per cent, and stocks show a considerable increase.

Liverpool cotton market, April 27. Without improvement in the demand or increase in the extent of sales, our market presents the same discouraging aspect we noticed last week; prices have been less steady with a more general tendency to give way. We reduce our quotations for all kinds 1-4 per lb.; in Egyptian sales are being made 13 to 2d. below the highest point, and in Sea Island at least 1d.—Speculators seem to have abandoned the market, as nothing has been done by them this week. Exports have taken 300 bales of American, and 70 Manrahams. The sales to-day are 1,200 bales of all kinds. The import this week is 21,739 bales, and the sales are 7,800.

CANTON.

Seventeen days later from Canton have been received by the bark Trenton, captain Hallet, at New York.

The Chinese authorities hold out on the opium restrictions, which create considerable disturbances. A commissioner has been appointed by the emperor to visit the sea ports, and report on the actual state of commerce.

Canton, January 26. A number of war boats have, it is said, been ordered to proceed to Hongkong to drive away the boats stationed there.

The foreign passage boats have received notice to come to Canton to receive the Hoppo's licence for plying between this and Macao; but we understand that several obstacles are still in the way of settling about them, the Hoppo insisting on compliances and guarantees both from the chamber of commerce and Cohong, which these bodies demand.

Owing to contention between the Hoppo and the Hong merchants, occasioned by the former's insisting on making a new Hong merchant of an individual known to be indebted to a large amount, chops for the lading and discharging of vessels were refused to be granted during two days, but the trade continues now without interruption. The Hoppo's eagerness to touch the fees from the new Hong, amounting to 30 or 40,000 taels, made him thus solicitous about it, and the Hong merchants refusing their guarantee the matter has for the present been allowed to drop.

INTERESTING FROM MEXICO.

From the Louisianaian.

We are indebted to the kindness of a friend for a copy of the following interesting letter from the city of Mexico. The writer expresses a warm, but just indignation at the wrongs inflicted upon our countrymen by the faithless and barbarous Mexicans—having been an eye witness of many of the outrages to which he alludes, his indignation is quite natural, although he expresses it in language which, to those at a distance, may seem intemperate.

"City of Mexico, 10th 23, 1839.
MY DEAR SIR:—Your letter of the 20th ult. with its inclosure, was received by the 10th inst., for which I return you my grateful acknowledgments. You inform me that judge Ellis has been ordered to hold himself in readiness to proceed to Mexico, and that I may expect him soon. This is joyful news, so far as my private wishes are concerned; but for our countrymen, whose grievances have been suffered too long to remain unredressed, I cannot but feel, in common with all Americans, acquainted with these things, extremely mortified, for if our own government expects that the claims of our fellow citizens upon this country will ever be liquidated by pacific means, it will be disappointed. Must we then believe that the delay of atonement for their manifold wrongs is to be interminable? Negotiation is a futile and absurd way of bringing the Mexicans to a sense of justice—experience has amply proved it to be so. Nothing but the strong arm of power will effect that object. Indulgence is attributed to timidity—fornearance is construed into inability to punish them. They deserve neither the one nor the other. So far from this system being of any avail to convince them of what they owe to justice and the rights of civilized nations, spoliation, rapine and murder have been repeated over and over again upon the property and lives of our countrymen, under the eyes and with the connivance of the authorities of Mexico. Do you think impunity can possibly have any other effect than to excite them to repeat these outrages? After so many fruitless attempts to obtain justice by negotiation, is it not farcical to send an embassy hither at this time?"

"Our government has so long turned a deaf ear to the complaints of our countrymen, that they are tired out, and deem it useless to renew them, and thus the Mexicans are led to think that we are abandoned to their tender mercies, that they have only to inflict what injuries they please, and we are bound to suffer without remonstrance. If we appeal to this government for protection, they tell us to apply to the judiciary, to whose department the subject really appertains, is composed of men who are totally irresponsible, and leagued with the unbridled robbers and assassins—who, by the by, are no worse than the villainous judges, whose duty it is to punish them. It is useless to expect a decision from these judges in the case of an outrage committed by their cut-throat countrymen upon a foreigner, however glaring the proofs may be, and we are obliged to submit in silence. Our own government is well apprised of these things—and that it looks on with as much apathy as if it were under no obligation to give protection to American citizens.

"But there are some Americans who are determined to make these things known to the nation, and to let their country see what indifference the rights of her sons in Mexico are regarded, and whether the blame attaches to the legislative or executive agents; whoever is in fault, he ought to be held up to public reprehension.

"The affairs of this capital go on as you might expect they would under president Santa Ana. The few liberal journals told too many truths of the past and the present for the sensitive nerves of that worthy, and on the 8th inst. his excellency issued a decree for their suppression—an outrage upon the liberty of the press, which was directly contrary to the fundamental laws of the country. Mr. Lebrun, the minister of the interior, refused to sanction this tyrannical decree, and he was forced to resign. Mr. Furubide, the "official mayor," subscribed the death warrant of the independent press. Mr. Yermende, the editor of the "Voto Nacional," had previously been thrust into the dungeons of the holy inquisition. The decree forbids, under the severest penalties, the expression of opinions derogatory to the church, state or military establishment. To detect and bring to light all violations of this most arbitrary enactment of the tyrant's will, a rigid system of espionage is set in motion, and woe to the hapless "heretic" whose lips are not kept sealed.

"His excellency has taken under his especial guardianship, the hacienda and all its arteries, and the minister of the treasury is not permitted to pay out of the alcaboas without his consent.

"I hear that congress is in a state of great excitement, in consequence of an order given by acting president Santa Ana, directing the military commanders of the department to seize, without ceremony, all the funds accruing from the revenue of those departments, thereby assuming absolute power for himself and his mandarins. The congress begins to think this measure an unconstitutional assumption of power. Printed sheets are thrown about the streets almost every night, in which Santa Ana and his adherents are described in the strongest language, as military despots and tyrants. It is reported that Santa Ana is with twenty leagues of Puebla, with one hundred and fifty mules loaded with arms and ammunition, twelve pieces of artillery, some of them large, and two thousand five hundred men. It is thought by some that he will make a dash upon the city, in which case he might capture it with much ease.

"An express arrived yesterday morning from Vera Cruz, with despatches from admiral Baudin, claiming from this government compensation for property lost by the burning of the custom house there, belonging to the French citizens. It is also said that he demanded satisfaction for the abuse heaped upon him and his government by the Diario del Gobierno, stating that as the president has power to stop other presses by which he himself is abused, he certainly has power to do the same thing by a press which is under his immediate direction and control."

TWO AMERICAN BRIGS SEIZED BY THE FRENCH SQUADRON IN RIO LA PLATA.

From the Salem Register, May 20.

We are indebted to Briggs' Bulletin for the following interesting intelligence received by the Susan, which arrived here this morning from Rio Janeiro, which place she left April 7th.

The American brigs, America and Eliza Davidson, sailed from Montevideo, with a full cargo for Lobosera Chica, a port in the Argentine republic, on the coast of Patagonia, and beyond the limits of the blockade declared by the French admiral of Buenos Ayres and the coast of the river La Plata. They arrived at Lobosera Chica without meeting any French vessels of war, discharged their cargoes and commenced taking in a freight which had been sent by land from Buenos Ayres. In the meantime, the French corvette Pezair, arrived at Lobosera, sent by admiral Leblanc to seize the brigs, which were seized accordingly, and carried as prizes to the French squadron at Montevideo, for having infringed a blockade which never existed in fact or on paper.

The consignees of the brigs demanded them of the French admiral, but he refused to give them up, unless they would give bonds for their value, and submit the case to the decision of the French court of admiralty, a proposition which the consignees rejected without hesitation. The commander of the American squadron, as soon as he heard of this infringement of the rights of neutral vessels, wrote to the French admiral, protesting in the strongest terms against the proceeding; which was unanswering by precedent, and would not be tolerated by the government of the United States—and demanded the immediate and unconditional surrender of the brigs.

This intelligence was conveyed to Rio by the American brig War Dolphin, which left Montevideo on the 21st March, at which time the French admiral had not replied to the American commodore. The Journal says that the news occasioned quite a sensation at Rio, and the commercial world were highly interested to learn the end of the matter.

[Mer. Jour.]

The above news has excited considerable attention here, it being understood that one of the brigs had been chartered by the agent of a house in this city. By request, we publish the following letter from lieutenant Mackenzie, to the merchant at Buenos Ayres, which shows the views taken by the then commanding officer on the station. Lieutenant M.'s power ceased, of course, on the arrival of a superior officer; but we understand, from good authority, that commodore Nicholson entertains precisely the same views as those expressed by lieutenant M. in regard to the illegality of the seizure, and we cannot doubt, that a prompt release of the vessels has already been effected through his instrumentality. The conduct of the U. S. officers on that station has been such as invariably to command the respect of all nations, and their presence has been of great advantage to the interests of our citizens in that quarter.

U. S. ship Fairfield, Buenos Ayres, 6th March, 1839.

SIR: In reply to your letter, this day received, referring to the application made to me by you, in Montevideo, on the 20th January last, as to the legality of sending an American vessel to the port of Lobosera Chica, on the coast of Patagonia, within the limits of the republic of Buenos Ayres, to discharge and take in cargoes, I have the honor to state, that I gave it as my opinion, that that port could not be considered within the limits of the blockade instituted by the French admiral on the 28th March last; which was confined to "the port of Buenos Ayres, and the coast of the river belonging to the Argentine republic." I also gave it as my opinion, that American vessels, going to Lobosera Chica, could not be molested by any French vessels of war appearing off that port, and that if a blockade should be instituted subsequent to their arrival, they would be entitled to a suitable delay to complete their cargoes before being ordered off. I informed you, at the same time, that if the American vessels which you proposed sending there, should be in any danger of molestation by French cruisers that might be sent to that port, I would proceed at once with the Fairfield to protect her; or if the nature of the port did not permit the approach of so large a vessel as the Fairfield, I would despatch the U. S. brig Dolphin to that service. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient, esp. Buenos Ayres.

ALEX. SLADELL MACKENZIE,

Lieut. U. S.

NORTHERN FRONTIER.

From the New York American.

The folly and wickedness of a few men on the side of the northern and eastern frontiers, are held up to fresh difficulties, which nothing but the most honest purposes of the regular officers in command in both services, to maintain the peace, and to enforce the laws of the two nations, could prevent from breaking out into open hostilities.

The annexed letter, which we find in last week's Commercial, details a new instance, in which violence was the source of a wrong and outrage on an American vessel, which, the moment the wrong forces appeared, were redressed and atoned for.

"Steamboat U. S. Lake Ontario, May 20, 1839.
"DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request, I proceed to state the circumstances attending the seizure of the American schooner G. S. Welch, the collector, col. Fraser, of the port of Brockville, and her subsequent delivery to her master as owner by the same officer.

"The schooner is owned at Oswego, and laden with about 90 tons of merchandise, consigned by itself to owners in Brockville, Morrisburg and Ogdensburg—the former a Canadian port, two latter American ports, on the river St. Lawrence.

"A part of the cargo consisted of a cannon and its carriage—the gun dismounted, the wheels removed from the carriage, and the whole placed on the deck of the vessel, and consigned regularly to the collector, by bills of lading to the captain of an artillery company at Ogdensburg.

"The schooner arrived at Brockville about on Friday, the 17th—and, as is usual in such cases, reported her cargo for Brockville to the collector, and received from the deputy collector, 'permit' to land the Brockville consignments, then to depart on her voyage.

"While discharging this cargo, she was seized by the collector, col. Fraser, and taken from possession of the master. The latter, however, suffered with his crew to remain on board, but not allowed to exercise control over any thing belonging to the schooner or cargo—not even so much as to work her pumps.

"The cannon was now taken from her deck, and a mob suffered to mount and parade it in front of the streets. They were also allowed to commence the lading of the vessel, to start boxes on her deck, and break open and pilfer of liquor or fruit, and to commit other acts of violence. It is true these depredations in amount were considerable, but the circumstances seem to show a neglect of duty on the part of the officer, col. Fraser.

"On hearing that the schooner was detained at Brockville, under circumstances as above detailed, colonel Worth, commanding the U. S. forces on this frontier, proceeded to Brockville in the States steamer Onida, with a small military force, where he arrived on the evening of the 18th, immediately addressed a communication to col. Fraser, requesting to be informed why the schooner was detained. In the absence of col. Fraser, it was ascertained by his deputy, only to assure col. Worth that the schooner would himself return on the following morning. No answer was received at 2 o'clock, P. M. of that date. On the 19th, colonel Worth crossed the river to the village in the Onida, and without coming ashore, sent a message again requesting information as to the cause of the detention of the schooner. The answer returned was, that the cannon had been taken into the town should be immediately returned on board, and the schooner suffered to depart.

"About the same time a body of regulars arrived from Kingston in the steamers Trent and Kingston, by which the guard at Brockville was strengthened, and under the direction of the gun was restored, and the vessel allowed to resume her course.

"A portion of the mob, however, were very violent in their opposition to the surrender of the cannon, and very abusive towards the officers engaged in attending to the delivery—so much so that the colonel, commanding the majesty's force, caused two or three of the ringleaders to be arrested and taken to the guard house.

"No cause was assigned for the seizure of the schooner, other than the fact of her having the piece of ordnance on board. And it also appeared that the collector was instigated, or perhaps driven to the commission of the act by the populace, whom the civil authorities had not the power to control. The more respectable portion of the people of rockville, however, were entirely opposed to the procedure, as entirely unwarrantable, and exerted themselves in every way to cause a speedy return of the vessel and property. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

HENRY FITZHUGH.

"J. E. Snell, esq. M. P. P." As regards the eastern frontier, some of our people have, it seems, been playing the fool. A captain, in charge of an armed posse, has, contrary to the spirit and letter, as we believe, of the arrangement between general Scott and sir J. Harvey—which contemplated that the American warden and his force should not extend their authority beyond a brook—made an excursion to the north of St. John's, and driven off, by force, a party of timber by the British warden, Mr. McLaughlin, seize certain timber cut in the disputed territory. The agent of Maine, Mr. McIntyre, was not present—or he would, we presume, have restrained his vexatious and unnecessary, not to say unlawful, demonstration of zeal on the part of capt. Nye. As it is, we must rely upon the honesty and liberal purpose of the authorities of the United States and of Maine, as subordinate to them, to carry out, in their true spirit and meaning, the arrangement which restored harmony to the north eastern border; until final negotiations between the governments of the two nations shall definitely settle the question.

MAINE BOUNDARY.

From the Portland Advertiser.

We copy the following "border news" from the Bangor Democrat. It will be seen that the "trouble" of troubles we published a few days since on the Bangor Whig, were not entirely without foundation, though they are not of so serious a nature as we were led to apprehend from the account so published. Mr. MacLaughlin, it appears, had set Fish river, and some of the logs there had been adrift, but by whom, it had not been ascertained. By the remarks of the Democrat, it seems that Mr. MacLaughlin had written a letter to our ad agent, expressing a wish to meet him there, for a purpose of protecting the timber.

BORDER NEWS.

We understand that the land agent recently received a letter from Mr. MacLaughlin, dated Frederick, in which he said he was on the point of starting with a posse of 30 men to visit the St. Francis of the Fish river, any saying he should be gratified to meet him there, the object of both as the same, to cure the timber cut by lawless people last winter. He further said that a few days fore, while at Madawaska, he had occasion to address a letter to the officer in command of the posse Fish river, and had received a very laconic answer. The following letters will explain the state of things that quarter. Whether the rafts were deserted by the trespassers on the approach of MacLaughlin and offered to run down the river, or were cut adrift by MacLaughlin and his posse to secure them, is not certain. There is no probability that he will attempt to cure in the same way the timber in Fish river, under the care of Nye.

Bangor, May 17th, 1839.

Sir: The inclosed letter, with a copy of a communication from Alvin Nye to MacLaughlin, was received this day.

Having reference to an expedition highly important, as the post at Fish river is at the termination of a road to the St. Johns to be opened this summer, which our state takes a deep interest, it is forwarded to you for your disposal as you may deem proper. It is to be hoped that Mr. MacLaughlin will not make his threatened visit, if he should, and of a hostile character, I have confidence in Alvin Nye, that a reception will be such as will afford small inducement for a repetition. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES JARVIS.

Fort Jarvis, Fish river, May 10, 1839.

Sir: Since my last communication of the 3d ult. several times have occurred which I deem proper to make known to you by a special messenger. On Tuesday the 7th inst. I received information at James MacLaughlin, esq. was at Madawaska with a party of fifty men and some Indians, on his way to this river to take the timber now in our boom and to drive me off. On the next day I received information in which I had the confidence, that Mr. MacLaughlin, with a party of thirty men and some Indians, armed with guns and bowie knives, had passed the mouth of Fish river, on their way to the Allagash, with the avowed intention of driving the lumber out of the jurisdiction of the state.

I considered my instructions required me to take every measure in my power to retain the lumber within the state. In discharge of this duty I took with me fifteen of my men on Thursday morning and descended the river to the mouth, and then ascended the St. John's about ten miles, where my previous information was fully confirmed, and I further learnt that Mr. MacLaughlin was on the Allagash turning the lumber into the stream.

I then addressed a note to Mr. MacLaughlin which I sent by two of my boatmen, hoping to receive a satisfactory explanation, but having no time to lose, I proceeded with my men to within about five miles of the Allagash, where we met rafts of timber, without men, coming down the river, occasionally running on to bars and rocks and breaking up. When within about two miles of the mouth of the Allagash, I met my messenger returning, who informed me that he had seen Mr. MacLaughlin, who would not write me, that he had used him roughly, and had told him that he might say to me that he would meet me on the Fish river. I continued on my way to the Allagash, where I met twelve of MacLaughlin's boats returning with their men and baggage. I proceeded up the river until I had got above all the timber which was running, and came to the conclusion that the whole of MacLaughlin's party had gone down the river. I then turned about and descended about nine miles, when I found the party which I had met encamped on the south side of the St. John's. I asked them what was their object, and where Mr. MacLaughlin was of this they would not inform me, but that their orders were to turn off a brow of timber which was then secure on the bank. I ordered them to leave the logs and timber and to move down the river, which order they obeyed. I followed about seven miles, where we encamped for the night.

The next morning I continued down the river to Fish river, which we ascended to our fort and found all in good order as we had left. For further particulars you are referred to the bearer. Your obedient servant,

ALVIN NYE, Ass't provis. land agent.

Charles Jarvis.

St. John's river, St. Francis's settlement, May 10th, 1839.

To James MacLaughlin, esq. provincial warden. Sir—Having received information of your having ascended the St. John's river with a party of men, with the avowed intention of driving the timber and logs now within the jurisdiction of the state of Maine, into the province of New Brunswick, I am under the disagreeable necessity of informing you that such an act will be in violation of the rights of the state.

I request you therefore to desist, as my instructions are such that I cannot admit of the timber being moved from this territory. Your obedient servant,

ALVIN NYE, as't P. L. agent.

MAINE AND GEORGIA.

From the Southern Recorder.

Executive department, Trenton, N. J. March 12th, 1839.

Sir: In compliance with the directions therein contained, I have the honor to enclose a copy of a joint resolution adopted at the present session by the legislature of this state—with a copy of the report of a committee on which the same is founded: And to remain with great respect, your obedient servant,

WM. PENNINGTON, Governor of New Jersey.

His excellency the governor of Georgia.

The joint committee to whom were referred the report and resolutions of the legislature of the state of Georgia, relative to the neglect or refusal of the governor of the state of Maine, to surrender upon the demand of the governor of Georgia certain citizens of the former state charged with the commission of a crime against the laws of the latter, have had the same under consideration and respectfully submit the following report thereon:

The duty of every state or nation, not to permit its territory to become an asylum for criminals, but to surrender upon request, those who have fled to it to escape the punishment due to the crimes which they have committed in another country, may be regarded as a well established principle of the laws which regulate the intercourse of civilized nations. And this has been questioned by some whose opinions are entitled to great respect, it is supported by reason, usage and weight of authority. It is a settled rule pervading the criminal jurisprudence of the whole civilized world, that no state can rightfully punish any crime, however enormous, perpetrated beyond its own limits. If therefore the perpetrator of the grossest offences against humanity, can but escape from the jurisdiction of the country where the crime was committed, he will go unpunished, unless the government to which he has fled will lend its aid in bringing him to justice. Were the means of impunity so easy, it would be impossible to give force and efficacy to laws designed to restrain the evil passions of mankind, especially among those inhabiting the borders of a country. A regard for justice, therefore, as well as for the safety of their own citizens, and the avoidance of perpetually recurring causes of misunderstanding and complaint, requires that governments should mutually aid each other in arresting and subjecting to the rigor of the laws, these whom other motives are insufficient to withhold from wrong and violence. Accordingly the duty of surrendering fugitives from justice, is now generally recognized and acted on throughout the civilized world.

The principal difficulty has been in determining how far the rule should be extended, and what offences should be considered as falling within it. While some writers confine its application to crimes against the laws of nature, others would carry it further, and embrace within its operation, offences which are made such only by the positive laws of the state. Between sovereign and independent states, the extent of which it shall be applied, is commonly regulated by agreement, and provisions for that purpose have been inserted in several of the treaties made by the United States, with foreign powers.

But its duty, as between the different states of the union, does not depend either on its obligation or its extent, upon the law of nations. The illustrious men who had the courage and patriotism to declare and achieve their independence, had also the sagacity to perceive that the intimate union and harmonious connection which they sought to establish between them could not be maintained without some provision that should prevent each from becoming an asylum to fugitives from the others. They therefore inserted in the articles of confederation, a clause requiring fugitives from justice to be delivered up for punishment to the state where their crimes had been committed. The same principle somewhat modified was adopted into and now forms part of the federal constitution, to the following terms, viz: "A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state, shall on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime." This language, it will be perceived, is broad and comprehensive, and in the opinion of the committee ought to be liberally construed. It extends to all crimes—by which are manifestly intended, crimes against the laws of the state from which the fugitive has escaped. Each state is entitled to prescribe such rules for the government of its own citizens and the regulation of its own internal affairs, as it may see fit, subject only to the constitution of the union. By the laws of nations, a citizen of one country, whose business or pleasure carries him into another, is entitled, except in case of war, to the protection of its laws, and in return, he is bound equally with its own citizens, to respect and obey those laws, though it may palliate, and in a moral view justify its guilt, will in a court of laws, afford no justification for their infraction.

The constitution of the United States, which secures to the citizens of each state all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, does not in terms and cannot in reason, lessen the force or extent of this obligation. A citizen of New Jersey who should go into the state of New York, and there do an act, which within the limits of this state he might lawfully do, but which the laws of New York had made a crime, and should then return to his home, would be within the language and spirit of this clause of the constitution, equally with a citizen of New York, who had done the same act and had then fled hither to escape the punishment which he knew would overtake him if he remained. And whether the citizen of New Jersey, unconscionable of offence, should return leisurely and openly, after accomplishing the purpose of his journey, or should flee hastily, and by stealth, he would equally "flee from justice" within the meaning of the constitution.

Nor is it requisite that the guilt of the fugitive thus demanded, should be established and proven before the authorities of the state where he is found, are bound to deliver him up. Even between states wholly independent and disconnected, the law of nations requires only that reasonable grounds for the charge, sufficient to put the accused upon his trial, shall be shown; and with good reason, as the witnesses by whom the crime is to be proved, will naturally and usually be in the country where it was committed, and it might be highly inconvenient for them to pursue the fugitive. But whatever ground there might be for doubt as to the nature of the charge, or the evidence by which it should be supported, if the constitution was our only guide, has been removed by the action of a congress, which numbered among its members many who had taken part in the framing or adoption of that instrument.

An act of congress passed February 12th, 1793, provides, "That whenever the executive authority of any state in the union, or of either of the territories northwest or south of the river Ohio, shall demand any person as a fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any such state or territory to which such person shall have fled, and shall moreover produce the copy of an indictment found on an affidavit made before a magistrate of any such state or territory, as aforesaid, charging the person so demanded with having committed treason, felony or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state or territory from whence the person so charged fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the state or territory to which such person shall have fled, to cause him or her to be arrested and secured, and notice of the arrest be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear." This law prescribes the duty of the executive authority of a state upon whom a demand is made, in plain terms, and reduces within very narrow limits the examination which he is to make before acting. If a duly authenticated copy of an indictment, or of an affidavit, as aforesaid, be presented to the person demanded with acts which by the law of the state where they were done amount to a crime, and the proper evidence of those laws are produced, he has no right to inquire, whether the indictment or affidavit is true, but is bound at once to take measures for causing the person so charged to be arrested and secured. He may not pause to inquire whether the person demanded is guilty of the charge made against him, or whether the laws against which he is accused of offending, are right or proper, or whether from excitement in the public mind or from any other cause, he is in danger of being denied a fair and impartial trial. None of these questions lie in the path of duty marked out for him, and which he ought to pursue without deviation or reluctance.

Such is the opinion of the committee, are the rules by which the conduct of the several states of the union towards each other, on this delicate and important subject, ought to be regulated. And were there no other motive for the faithful and prompt observance, than the fact that they are part of the supreme law of the land, that alone ought to be abundantly sufficient.

New Jersey has never yet refuse a ready and willing obedience to this or any other requirement of the constitution; and the committee hope and trust that she never will. She has ever regarded with feelings of veneration and attachment, that glorious monument of the wisdom and patriotism of our fathers, and recognised the sacredness of the obligation which she assumed by its ratification. But aside from the imperative duty thus imposed, and the many and great benefits arising from the union which that constitution has cemented, the interest and safety of the several states, if wholly independent and unconnected, would require the adoption and observance of similar rules of intercourse; lying as they do contiguous to each other, separated only by narrow rivers, and in many instances only by imaginary lines, with the means of passing from one to another so numerous and rapid, the criminal code of each must inevitably become the laughing stock of the vicious and abandoned, if the crossing of a boundary line should ever be a security against punishment. It needs no labored argument to prove that in the matter at hand, the path of duty, and of interest is one and the same, and should be carefully and cheerfully followed.

Upon the conduct of the executive of the state of Maine in the particular case which has given rise to the report and resolutions referred to them, the committee express no opinion. There are no documents before them to show by what reasons and motives that conduct was guided—and if there were, they would not feel themselves entitled to pass upon them. The states between which this difficulty has unhappily arisen, are the political equals of New Jersey, and much as she may regret that any contrariety of feeling and opinion should exist between them, she claims no right to thrust upon either her unsolicited umpirage. But she may, without offence, challenge each to a friendly and generous strife with her, and with each other in the faithful discharge of all the duties of our social compact, and in devotion to the welfare and happiness of our common country.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY—JOINT RESOLUTION.

Be it resolved by the council and general assembly of this state, That the report of the joint committee, to whom were referred the report and resolutions of the legislature of the state of Georgia, be accepted, and that the governor be requested to transmit copies thereof to the governors of the states of Georgia and Maine.

In council, March 6th, 1839. This joint resolution having been three times read and compared in council.

Resolved, That the same do pass.

By order of council, A. PARSONS,
Vice president of council.

House of assembly, March 7th, 1839. This joint resolution having been three times read in the house of assembly.

Resolved, That the same do pass.

By order of the house of assembly,
LEWIS CONDICT, speaker.

MR. STEVEN'S ADDRESS.

To the people of Adams county, Pennsylvania.

FELLOW CITIZENS: In accordance with your wishes I presented myself to the body now exercising the duties of the house of representatives of this commonwealth, and desired to have administered to me the oath prescribed by law. A majority of that body, using the same constitutional and unlawful means which invested me with official authority, refused to allow me to occupy that seat, to which I had been called by the free choice of my fellow citizens. Under the most shallow, hypocritical and false pretences, they have declared my seat vacant, and imposed upon you the expense of a new election, to be held on the 14th day of June next. In doing so they have committed an unprecedented outrage on the rights of the people. If suborned by that people, liberty has become but a mere name. Already is the constitution suspended, and the most sacred contracts between the state and individuals are violated with the most daring and reckless audacity. The tyrants, who have usurped power, have determined to oppress and plunder the people. It is for you to say whether you will be their willing slaves. If they are permitted finally to triumph, you hold your liberty, your lives, your reputation, and your property, at their will alone.

I had hoped that no circumstances would occur, which would render it necessary for me to again a candidate for your suffrages. Both my inclination and my interest require me to retire from public life. But I will not execute that settled intention, when it will be construed into cowardice or despondency. To refuse to be a candidate now, would be seized upon by my enemies as an evidence that I distrust the people, and am afraid to intrust to them the redress of their own wrongs. I feel no such fear or such distrust. Without intending any injurious comparison, I have always said, what I sincerely believe, that the honesty of Adams county have more intelligence, and not less honesty, than the people of any other county in the state. To me, a people, I can have no fear in appealing against lawless aggressions. To them I do appeal, to restore to me that which was their free gift, and therefore my right, and of which I have been robbed by those who "feel power and forget right."

I present myself to you as a candidate to fill that vacancy which was created to wound my and your feelings. I do not wait to receive a party nomination from my friends. The question now to be decided is above all party considerations, and would be disgraced by sinking it to the level of a party contest. Every freeman must be impelled to resist this public outrage as a personal wrong to himself. Every thing dear to him in his country, his liberty, the liberty of his children, and the title to his property, admonish him to rise above every paltry personal and party consideration, and rebuke tyranny at that great tribunal of freemen—the ballot box.

While, however, you are determined, resolute and energetic, let me implore you not to imitate the example of our oppressors; but do every thing calmly and temperately. This admonition is hardly necessary to the orderly citizens of Adams county, ly; but when oppression is so intolerable, as at present, it is difficult for the most peaceable and quiet men to control their indignation. With respect and gratitude, I am your obedient servant,

THADDEUS STEVENS.

GENERAL ASSEMBLIES OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer, May 25,

NEW SCHOOL.

Friday, May 25, Morning session. After prayer, the roll was called, and the minutes read and approved.

Dr. Hill, from the committee on the state of the church, reported in part; and his report was accepted and laid on the table.

Mr. Wisner, from the committee to prepare a declaration on the present condition of the Presbyterian church, made a report which was accepted and re-committed.

Judge Darling from the committee, then read the following report, which was received:

Terms of compromise.

Whereas, the committee of twelve, appointed by the general assembly of 1835, at the session at the First Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, did, through their legal council in November last, previous to the trial before judge Rogers, and equitable, for the pacification of the church, by which terms this body is willing to abide; and, whereas, there has been falsely imputed to us a spirit of litigation which we always deplored—therefore,

Resolved, That the following plan of peaceable division be published—that all may know our strong desire for peace, and to whom the blame of litigation, past and prospective, belongs.

"In order to resume an amicable and equitable adjustment of difficulties existing in the Presbyterian church of the United States, it is hereby agreed, by the respective parties, that the following shall be the articles on which the division shall be made and continued:

Art. I. The successors of the body which held its sessions in Reamstead court, shall hereafter be known by the name and style of the "General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America." The successors of the body which held its session in the First Presbyterian Church, shall hereafter be known by the name and style of "The General Assembly of the American Presbyterian Church."

Art. II. Joint application shall be made by the parties to this agreement, to the legislature of Pennsylvania, for a charter to incorporate the trustees of each of the respective bodies, securing to each the immunities and privileges now secured by the existing charter to the trustees of the general assembly of the United States Presbyterian church, subject, nevertheless, to the limitation and articles herein agreed on, and when so obtained, the existing charter shall be surrendered to the state.

Art. III. Churches, ministers and members of churches, as well as presbyteries, shall be at full liberty to decide to which of the said assemblies they will be attached; and in case the majority of legal voters of any congregation shall prefer to be connected with any presbytery connected with the assembly to which their presbytery is not attached, they shall certify the same to the stated clerk of the presbytery which they wish to have; and their connexion with such presbytery shall thenceforth cease.

Art. IV. The theological seminary of Princeton, the western theological seminary, the board of foreign missions, the board of domestic missions, the board of education, with the funds appertaining thereto, shall be the property and subject to the exclusive control of the body which, according to this agreement, shall be chartered under the title of the "General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America."

This agreement shall not be considered as a secession on the part of either body from the Presbyterian church in the United States, but as a voluntary and amicable division of this church into two denominations, each retaining all the ecclesiastical and pecuniary rights of the whole body, with the limitations and the articles above specified."

NOTE.—The only reply which the committee received to these articles of agreement, was that they could not be accepted; that the old school party would agree that the members of the constitutional general assembly, and those who adhere to it, might leave the Presbyterian church without molestation from them; and that they should not be called "Seceders."

The unfinished business of the preceding day, viz: the minute on the subject of slavery, was reviewed.

Mr. Caskil, on leave, withdrew an amendment which he had offered.

Mr. Rankin moved to amend, so as to read "great moral evil from the churches."

Mr. Graves then moved to postpone this amendment and the whole report, with a view to introduce a substitute:

The motion to postpone, was carried.
The substitute of Mr. Graves was taken up, and after some discussion, the assembly adjourned till 3 1/2 P. M. concluded with prayer.

In the afternoon session, the discussion on slavery was resumed, and several members spoke.

The question was closed by the passage of the following resolution:

"Whereas, certain memorials have been sent up to this assembly from several presbyteries, desiring some action on the subject of slavery; And whereas these memorials have been read and freely discussed by this body: And whereas, this assembly is made up of members from different portions of our extended country, who honestly differ in opinion, as well in regard to the propriety as the nature of the ecclesiastical action in the case; therefore

Resolved, That this assembly does most solemnly refer to the lower judicatories, the subject of slavery, leaving it to them to take such order thereon, as in their judgment will be most judicious, and adapted to remove the evil.

A season of prayer and appropriate religious exercises then followed. After which the trial of Mr. Tappan was resumed, and occupied the remainder of the day.

OLD SCHOOL.

The thanksgiving resolutions had not been disposed of at the hour of adjournment on Thursday.

Friday.—The assembly opened with prayer.

The minutes were read and adopted.

Leave of absence was granted to Messrs. A. Smith, Kelton, Henderson, and Woodbridge.

The protest and complaint of the synod of Cincinnati was taken up, and at the request of the party most interested, leave was given to withdraw it.

The committee on mileage made a report, which was accepted and adopted.

The committee on psalmody made a report, which was accepted and adopted.

The following gentlemen were declared elected to fill vacancies in the board of domestic missions: Ministers—Samuel Miller, W. B. Sprague, Fred. Herron, Henry B. Weed, Wm. M. Engles, C. Van Rensselaer, W. M. Murray, Elisha McCurdy, Alexander O. Patterson, Charles C. Benton.

Laymen—Solomon Allen, Joseph Lennox, W. Nassau, Robert Stewart, Wm. R. Thompson, James Field.

Resolved, That Dr. Miller, A. Alexander, and James Carrahan, be a committee to inquire whether any, and if any, what measure ought to be adopted for securing to the children and young people of our church more full advantages of Christian education than have hitherto been afforded.

The committee on overture No. 5, made a report, which was ordered to be placed on the docket.

The assembly passed to the order of the day, viz: the receipt of the annual report of the board of missions. The report was presented and read. Addresses were made, and on motion, the report was referred to a committee.

Nominations were made and tellers appointed in relation to vacancies in the board of foreign missions.

The committee on overture No. 15, made a report, which was adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the board be authorized to increase the number of vice-presidents to twelve.

The committee on overture No. 13, made a report, which was accepted.

COMMODORE PREBLE.

The following interesting memoir of this gallant officer, is copied from the Courier of Portland, Maine, his native city.

COMMODORE PREBLE. Our contemporary the Argus, is mistaken in its information relative to the birth of our renowned townsman commodore Preble. In speaking of the ship launched in Portsmouth to which his name has been given, it says, the vessel received the name of Preble, "in honor of the distinguished commodore whose place of nativity was the town of York, within this state, within half a dozen miles of where the vessel was built."

As we cannot afford to lose the reputation of giving birth to this distinguished son, we propose to furnish a brief notice of him, and thus retrace some of the prominent acts of his life. Commodore Preble was born in this town in August 1761; his father, Jedediah Preble, moved here from York about 1750, and married in 1754 for his second wife, a daughter of Joshua Bangs, who came here from Cape Cod, and from whom the island at the mouth of our harbor is named. The general was born in York, from which all of the name in this state sprung, in 1707. He was long a respectable merchant in town; but in the French war with true military ardor he joined the army under gen. Wolfe in charge of a company, was present at the capture of Quebec, and was near that lamented officer when he fell. He was gradually promoted to the rank of brigadier general of the provincial troops, and at the close of the war in 1763 held command of the garrison on the Penobscot.

He was twice wounded during the war. In 1775 he was appointed major general of the Massachusetts troops but declined on account of his age. He was appointed a mandamus councillor under the crown in 1773; was the first senator from the county under the new constitution, twelve years representative of the town and two years a judge of the court of common pleas. He died at last laden with years and honors in 1784, aged 77 years.

Edward, the commodore, inherited the spirit and enterprise of his father; always bold and daring in his youth, he sought the earliest opportunity for the display of those qualities which could not be satisfied in the sphere of civil life, for which his father at first designed him. As early as 1779 he entered the British navy of the revolution as midshipman in the Protector, a state ship of 20 guns. On his first cruise he captured a British letter of marque of 36 guns; but on the second, she was herself captured by a frigate and a sloop of war. By the friendship of col. Tyng, a refugee and a friend of his father, he was released, and soon afterward entered the sloop of war Winthrop, as first lieutenant. While in this ship he was stationed in the Penobscot, where he distinguished himself by capturing an armed brig of superior force to the Winthrop, with a tender of 14 men.

After the peace of '82, there being no employment for him in the service, he performed various voyages as a shipmaster to different parts of the globe. But in 1788 on the establishment of a navy by the U. S. he was one of the five lieutenants first appointed and was entrusted with the command of the Frigate. The next year he received a captain's commission and was promoted to the command of the Essex of 36 guns. In this ship he rendered valuable service to our commerce in the Indian and Atlantic oceans; and in 1800 he conveyed home from the East Indies 14 American merchantmen valued at several millions of dollars. On this voyage he gave chase to a French corvette which he would have overtaken had not the wind died away which permitted her to escape by means of her sweeps. On his return he was appointed to the Adams for the Mediterranean, but was obliged to decline the command from ill health.

In May, 1803, having sufficiently recovered his health, he was appointed to the command of the squadron destined to the Mediterranean, consisting of seven sail, to protect the commerce and the sea-board of the U. S. then continually exposed to Tripolitan freebooters. He proceeded to his destination in the Constitution frigate, then as now, the favorite ship of our navy. By his firm and vigorous conduct for more than a year during which he had charge of this squadron, he secured peace with Morocco and inspired such terror in the other Barbary powers of the American arms as elevated her name and effectually protected her commerce from the depredation of these marauders. President Jefferson in his message of Dec. 1803 mentions "the promptitude and energy" of commodore Preble and "the conduct of our officers generally," as meriting "entire approbation."

It was during this service that our navy performed those brilliant feats which approach to the romantic age of chivalry and which spread its renown through the civilized world. Among these was the destruction of the Philadelphia frigate by a party of volunteers under command of Stephen Decatur. This ship had unfortunately grounded and fallen into the hands of the Tripolitans. The frigate lay in the harbor of Tripoli within half gun shot of the castle and principal battery, with her guns mounted and loaded, and two corsairs full of men riding near. Decatur with 70 volunteers entered the harbor in the most gallant manner at night, boarded and carried the frigate against all opposition, slew 20 or 30 of her crew, and drove the rest overboard, and set fire to the ship without the loss of a man.

Other instances of personal valor and intrepidity were displayed by our gallant officers and men, more resembling the conflicts of the crusaders, than the systematic battles of modern times. The Turks were astonished at their desperate courage, and asked if those men that fought so brave Americans, or infernals in Christian ships, sent to destroy the sons of the prophet. An instance of deep self-devotion occurred in the blowing up of a fire ship by com. Preble into the harbor for the destruction of the Tripolitan flotilla. Capt. Somers had charge of this expedition accompanied by Lt. Israel, our valiant townsman Lt. Wadsworth and ten men. The fire ship having gained the inner harbor was boarded and captured by two of the enemy's gallees containing 100 men each. At this moment the fire ship with 100 barrels of powder, exploded! and friend and foe were buried in one common grave. The effect was awful, every battery was silenced and desolation was spread around.

On his return in 1804, congress voted the thanks of the nation to commodore Preble for his efficient services in the Mediterranean, with an emblematic medal, which was presented to him by the president in terms of esteem and admiration. He did not long survive to serve his country or enjoy his honors. In 1806 his health declined: on the 25th of August, 1807, he breathed his last, in the 47th year of his age.

Commodore Preble bore in his air and countenance the signatures of his character, his features expressed strong passions, but at the same time manly and generous feelings; his attitude was erect, his step firm and his whole appearance commanding. He was a rigid disciplinarian, yet he won the affection and esteem of those who served under him by his sincerity and generosity. He married in 1801 a daughter of the late Nathaniel Deering of this town, and left but one child in the house now occupied by Mr. Moorhead as a tavern; this at the time of his death was one of the respectable old establishments of the town which had lived through the revolution. The front yard, now occupied with brick stores, extended to the street, and was filled with ornamental trees and shrubbery. The estate had been occupied by his father after the war. The spirit of modern improvement has divested it of all its beauty and its venerable associations.

LAW CASES.

United States district court—May 21.

Judge Betts presiding.

Hughes & Gynett vs. Jesse Hoyt. This was an action to recover back duties alleged to have been illegally exacted by the custom house amounting to $3,515 70, and which the plaintiffs had paid under protest. The articles on which the duties had been imposed were shawls, which the plaintiffs had at different periods imported from France. They are known in commerce by the name of Thibet, Broche and Tartan worsted shawls, and are composed either of worsted and cotton, wool and cotton, or worsted, or wool, and silk. The custom house charged them with a duty of 50 per cent, as if they were woollen goods.

Mr. Lord, for the plaintiffs, contended that no matter of what materials the articles were composed of, that as shawls they were exempt from duty; or if not exempt as shawls, that as they were manufactures of silk and worsted, or were worsted stuff goods, or either or all of those grounds they were exempt from duty.

Several witnesses were examined on both sides, and it appeared that this description of shawls was generally, if not universally, classed in commerce as worsted goods. And that some of those, on which the plaintiffs had paid the duty, were composed of worsted and cotton, some of them composed of worsted and silk, and some of them composed of cotton or silk and wool.

The weight of evidence went to show that whatever might be the materials of which they were composed, wool to a greater or less degree formed a part of some of them, and some others of them were all wool.

The court charged the jury—in regard to those laws which impose duties, it is contended on the part of the custom house, that the onus lies with the merchant to show that the article is clearly free of duty, as in the case of any other plaintiffs.

The officers of the government have the privilege of charging such duties as they are instructed to do, and the merchants are obliged to pay such duties as are demanded, as they could not otherwise get their goods. But this does not vary the obligation of the government to make out their right to the duty. The very laws which impose duties, make it incumbent on those who collect the duties, to show with reasonable evidence that they were entitled to it.

It is said on the part of the plaintiffs that by the acts of 1832 and 1833, shawls as a class are free of duty. The court, however, thinks that the term shawl is not used in such a general sense, but was restricted, by its place in the sentence, to shawls either of worsted, or silk and worsted. And this was the view formed by the court in the case of Elliott and Swartwout, 10th Peters.

The next question was—supposing the chief component parts of them to be worsted, or silk and worsted, would the fact, that part of the shawl being composed of wool, rendered it liable to the woollen duty? According to my view, the language of the court in the case of Elliott and Swartwout, would subject them to a woollen duty, if wool is a component part of the shawl.

It is contended on the part of the plaintiffs that the articles are so much like worsted, and worsted and silk, as to be so classed by dealers in them, and therefore exempt as worsted, or worsted and silk shawls, although there may be some wool in them.

On this part of the subject, the court laid it down as a rule, that if at the time these laws were passed, the articles were known and understood to be, and were called worsted, or worsted and silk goods, although there might be a portion of wool in them, they were free of duty. But if not at that time so classed, although subsequently so classed, they were subject to duty.

In regard to the presence of wool in the article, the law did not regard the quantity. If it contained any quantity of wool, it was subject to the duty of woollen goods.

Verdict for the plaintiffs—$2,471.

For the plaintiffs, Mr. Lord; for the custom house, Mr. Butler.

The amount paid by the plaintiffs was $3,518 70, and the difference between that sum, and the amount of the verdict, was allowed by the jury to remain with the custom house, on the ground that they had a right to charge a woollen duty on such of the shawls as were wool or partly composed of wool.

Important to importers of twist. United States circuit court.—Judge Betts presiding.—Samuel F. Dorr vs. Jesse Hoyt. This was an action brought by the plaintiff, an extensive importer of French goods, against the defendant, the collector of this port, to recover back the sum of $53 60, being the amount of duties charged on an importation of "twist."

These duties had been charged under the decision of the comptroller of the treasury of 1833, and the entry was made, and the duties levied, as upon sewing silk, at the rate of $2 28 per lb.

The plaintiff contended that this particular article, twist, was not in itself silk, but that it was composed of goat, or mohair and silk, and that it would not serve the same purpose as sewing silk, and that under the tariff it was provided that articles of importation of which silk forms a component part, were free of duty, and it was further contended that according to mercantile usage, twist was not sewing silk, under which class the duty had been claimed and exacted.

The entry and payment of the duty, under protest, were admitted, and the plaintiff called a manufacturer of twist, who testified to the article being composed partly of goat, or mohair, and partly of silk.

For the defence it was contended and appeared that, under the decision of the comptroller of the treasury of 1833, this article had been entered as all goods of the like kind, and classed as sewing silk by the custom house authorities.

On cross-examination, however, of the defendant's witnesses, it came out that the component parts of the article twist, were as contended by the plaintiff.

The court said that all articles manufactured partly of silk, or of which silk was a component part, were entitled to be admitted free of duty.—The custom house department had established, as it appeared by the testimony adduced in this case, a rule which the merchants had protested against, and this was a question for the jury to pass upon. The jury, without leaving their seats, found a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, namely, $53 60; thus sustaining the protest of the merchants, that twist is not liable to payment of duty.

For the plaintiff, Daniel Lord, jr.; for the defendant, B. F. Butler, esq.

From the Ostego Republican.

The Cooper libel. James Fenimore Cooper, vs. Andrew M. Barber. For defendant Morehouse & Lathrop, attorneys; and J. A. Spencer, S. S. Bowne, and Lyman J. Walworth, counsel. The suit brought by Mr. James Fenimore Cooper against the editor of the Ostego Republican, for the publication of an alleged libel on the novelist, some two years since, was tried at Montgomery county circuit on Wednesday last, judge Willard presiding, and terminated in a verdict of $400 for the plaintiff. The libel itself, it will be recollectcd, consisted solely in our republishing an article from the Chenango Telegraph, in which Mr. Cooper was handled rather severely than otherwise, and which had reference exclusively to a dispute which had sprung up between the plaintiff and his neighbors, relative to the occupancy or use of a small strip of land up the Ostego lake, which for years and years had answered the purpose of resort for the surrounding villagers during the hot summer months. The intrinsic value of this piece of land would certainly not exceed ten dollars! In republishing the Chenango article we accompanied it with what we deemed at the time, and still hold to be a correct version of the matter at issue, taking care to correct such of the statements in the former as were at variance with the facts, and actuated throughout with the honest and avowed purpose of giving a frank and fearless expose of an affair, which had already crept into the columns of the newspaper press, and was then widely circulating in a distorted, incorrect and exaggerated form.

For thus assuming a position friendly to Mr. Cooper—for no reasonable man will view it in any other light—the novelist commences forthwith a suit against us, and pushes it even to a final issue in a court of justice.

It was contended on the part of the defence in this case, and subsequently admitted by the court, that not a particle of libellous matter existed in the stricture of the defendant, while no justification of the obnoxious matter of the Telegraph was set forth the whole together indicating upon its face, as we have before stated, the honest intentions of the defendant, and a disposition to give to the public what was repeatedly called for, from various and highly respectable quarters, viz: a plain, unvarnished statement of facts, without fear, favor or the hope of reward.

The court, however, excluded the entire testimony of the defence in proof of the facts stated, as the truth in evidence, it was alleged, did not amount to a justification nor could be given in mitigation of damages—and instructed the jury accordingly to find a verdict—not simply a verdict, but a "respectable" verdict, (we use the precise term of the judge in favor of the plaintiff in the suit of Mr. James Fenimore Cooper.) To this decision of the judge, the defendant's counsel took exceptions, and an application will be made to the supreme court for a new trial.

The plaintiff summed up the cause himself in his own behalf, and Joshua Spencer, esq. of Utica, for the defendant. The speech of Mr. Spencer was acknowledged on all sides to be one of the most forcible and eloquent addresses ever made to a jury.—We regret that our notes were not sufficiently full to enable us to lay it before our readers with a degree of accuracy that would do justice to the speaker himself.

As this suit may be deemed still pending, we shall delay our intention, for the present of going into a thorough and minute history of the whole transaction—from its commencement to its close.

Important decisions. The supreme court of Louisiana decided at New Orleans on the 14th inst. in the case of the Atchafalaya bank vs. Dawson; that the forfeiture of bank charters by the suspension of specie payments does not accrue to individuals or to any person or party, but to the state which gave them; and it alone can avail of forfeiture and take away the charters. That although by a clause in the charter of the Atchafalaya bank and some others, in case of suspension of specie payments for 90 days, the charter is ipso facto forfeited, yet the bank continues to exist, and can sue and be sued until the state choose to institute proceedings, and take from it its charter. In other words, that bank contracts between the state which grants and the corporators or stockholders who accept and receive them.

CHRONICLE.

Real estate in Baltimore. The large three story dwelling and double lot of ground, with extensive back buildings, situated on M. Street, opposite to the south front of the Carey and belonging to the estate of the late E. R. Partridge, were sold at auction yesterday, for $21,800. There is a ground rent on the property, which may be purchased out for $6,000; making the fee simple cost, therefore, $27,800. The property is situated in a handsome and improving part of the city, and the amount for which it was sold is a proof that there is an improvement in prices of real estate in Baltimore, now in progress.

Cal. Stone. The New York Express says, the governor has nominated Col. Stone of the Commercial, to go to England, and search for colonial documents interesting to the state of New York. This is a good nomination, and will give general satisfaction.

William Leggett, esp. of New York, formerly editor of the Plaindealer, has been appointed confidential agent from the United States to the republic of Central America.

The U. S. ship Levant arrived at Havana on the 24th inst. from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 23rd, in company with which it was sold in Opatario. The commodore parted company on the 3d inst. and proceeded to Pensacola with the Ontario. From one to two hundred sail of American vessels were lying in the harbor of Havana.

The senate of Connecticut balloted on Friday for a United States senator, but no choice was had. The house on its part elected, as was mentioned on Saturday, Thaddeus Betts, a whig. It was thought probable that the Van Buren men would vote Mr. Sherman, who then stand a fair chance of being elected. Mr. Sherman is a whig—Ralph Ingersoll is the Van Buren candidate.

Steamboat accident. We learn that the steamboat Eric, capt. Benson, on her passage up yesterday, when near Newburgh, collapsed a flue, by which accident the boat was disabled, and one of the firemen severely, but it is thought not dangerously, scalded. The mail and passengers were taken off and brought up by the steamboat Arrow, capt. Dean.

The New York annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church on Friday elected its delegates to the next general conference. The following is the result of the ballot.

A second ballot was then had for two members to complete the number—163 members were present; necessary for a choice, 85. The following were elected:

The Middletown Sentinel says the prospects of legislative aid in behalf of the Wesleyan university in that town, is not very favorable. If any appropriation is made, the editor supposes it will not exceed $5,000 or $6,000.

The population of Louisville, Ky. is estimated at 32,000. In 1839 it was 19,336.

Among the passengers for New York, by the ship Floridian, which sailed yesterday, is Miss Anna Wheeler, the interesting protegee of the Mobile rifle company. It will be in the recollection of many of our readers, that some years since, on the sudden death of Mr. Morris, a dealer, a popular member of that rifle corps, his brother soldiers united in paying every public tribute of respect to his memory; and as a father substantial and abiding testimony of their esteem, undertook the charge of raising and educating his daughter, then a little child. That trust they have faithfully executed, and have provided ample funds for her increasing education required by her rapid growth. The child, now an intelligent girl of ten or eleven years of age, has been sent to the north to receive, at the best schools there, every advantage of mental and moral cultivation, such as her liberal benefactors desire to bestow upon the orphan of their deceased friend. We are glad to be assured that this act of noble sensibility has been worthily bestowed, and that their protegee exhibits all the signs of a gentle and docile disposition, and the proofs of a superior capacity, which must gratify the hearts of her young protectors. [Mobile Register.]

Death of Mrs. Grant. We learn from Oromiah, Persia, that Mrs. Grant, wife of Dr. Grant, American missionary at that station, departed this life on the 14th January, after an illness of 13 days. Her disease was bilious fever.

The first Baptist church in Providence, R. I. will celebrate its two hundred anniversary this autumn. It was founded in the days of Roger Williams.

"The tie which binds two willing hearts." There were forty applications for divorce before the supreme court of Ohio in a single term.

The Raymond, Miss. Times, of the 3d instant, comes to us with about nine-eighths of a column of reading matter, the remainder of the paper being completely filled with a verisimilitude of scurrilous libel.

River Osage. This river, which twenty years ago was deemed to be an exclusive possession of the whites, is now bordered by thriving settlements. It empties into the Missouri some hundreds of miles from the Mississippi, and is not remote from the western boundary of the state of Missouri. A steamboat nearly regularly between the Osage and the settlements near the mouth of the Missouri, and the country is rapidly filling up with farmers. The result of the immigration tends that way, and in the course of twenty years, the lands watered by the Osage, will be as thickly settled, and as productive as any other portion of the mighty west.

Rail road accident. As the Carrollton train of cars was coming to the city last evening, between six and seven o'clock, the locomotive ran off the track, a short distance this side of Greenville, upsetting the two adjoining cars, and breaking the third. Two young men were severely injured, one of them was attached to the train. There were a number of ladies in the cars, who fortunately escaped unhurt.

We learn from the Army and Navy Chronicle that the board of engineers and naval constructors, of which capt. M. C. Perry, of the navy, is president, was ordered to re-assemble in Washington, on Thursday, and that the board was accordingly organized on that day, all the members being present.

The state of Alabama is about to build a penitentiary at Wetumpka, at a cost of $84,599. The contract for its erection has been given to Mr. Thomas of Nashville.

Manufacture of pins. On a visit to Derby, Conn. some weeks since, I had the pleasure of inspecting the pin manufactory of Dr. Howe. The apparatus is the invention of the doctor, and is one of the most ingenious and beautiful pieces of mechanism in the whole circle of the arts. It is impossible for me to give you any adequate description of it. Those who have any fondness for mechanical ingenuity must see it for themselves. Generally speaking, one of them was attached to the machine, which the pins are to be made is passed in at one end of the machine, cut into the requisite length and passed from point to point, till the pins are headed and fitted for the process of silvering and putting up. The whole process may be distinctly seen, and as one pair of forceps holds the pin along to its neighbor, it is difficult to believe the machine is not in an elegant being. The pins are all of one solid piece of wire, and possess an advantage in this respect over those upon which the head is wound, and thus liable to come off, often to the great inconvenience of tender fingers. The process is exceedingly rapid. I think Dr. Howe informed me that one machine will make 17,000 pins in 11 hours, and a new machine which he had just put in operation would make 27,000 in the same time. Formerly it required several men to make one pin—now to head it, one to point it, &c. and then only a few thousand could be made in a day—but one man could superintend twelve of these machines, and at the lowest estimate manufacture 200,000 pins daily.

Thread. On a late visit to Pawtucket, we called at the thread manufacturing establishment of capt. N. B. S. Dwyer & Son, and was astonished to see to what perfection the manufacture of thread had arrived in this country. The whole of this extensive concern is under the control of capt. Dwyer, who by his perseverance, untiring industry and enterprise, has brought this branch of American industry so near to perfection.—They employ five cotton mills in the manufacture of thread, and one wool machine, amounting to two hundred hands, (exclusive of those used in the thread and army and navy.) They manufacture one hundred and thirty thousand dollars worth of thread per annum, of the finest and most beautiful texture, equal in every respect to any made in this country. The manufacture of thread in Pawtucket, of which there are several excellent establishments, has been a long time taking the place of the threads formerly imported from England. And we are pleased to hear they are all liberally patronised; the thread they manufacture is of a far better quality and cheaper than that formerly imported from England.—The colors are fast, and of every hue, from the snowy white to the deep scarlet and the most delicate pink.

Religious toleration. The following law was passed by the general assembly of New York, at its recent session. No writ, process, warrant, order, judgment, decree, or other proceeding of any court, or office of justice of the peace, which will be served or executed upon the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, day or upon any person whose religious faith and practice is to keep the seventh day as a day set apart by divine command, as the Sabbath of rest in prayer and dedication to the worship of God, shall be valid except in cases of breach of the peace, or apprehension of persons charged with crimes and misdemeanors. The service of any such proceeding, in all other cases shall be utterly void.

Safety fund notes. The agreement made between the western safety fund banks and the bank of the state of New York, Lumber Manufacturers and Merchants' Exchange banks in this city, has been renewed for another year. It has worked well since it was adopted. By this agreement the safety fund banks notes are bought at half per cent. discount by the city banks, and the country banks are entitled to twenty-days time for the redemption of their notes and engagements, to keep their accounts with the contracting city banks. Destruction of the Real Estate bank at Decatur. The Brandon, Mississippi, Sentinel, of the 6th, has a paragraph to the effect that the editors had received information by a gentleman direct from Decatur, that the Real Estate bank at that place was set on fire by a mob, and burned, together with all the books and papers. Nothing was saved. He also stated that if the mob was not quelled, they would wreak their vengeance on the persons and property of the directors. So much for mob law in Mississippi.

In the large list of checks and bills received from William Gill, the post rider, who lately robbed the express mail destined for Nashville and north, were the following, drawn in favor of gentlemen in the city of Louisville:

Three bills drawn by W. H. Lambeth & Thompson, in favor of Messrs. Pope, Davis & Co. on James Donaldson, esp. New York, all dated 16th April; one for $2,500, one $3,500, one $4,000—duplicate of the 17th April.

Bill drawn by James Erwin, in favor of Messrs. H. B. Hill & Co. for seven thousand dollars, on general James Shelby, of Lexington, Kentucky, dated 17th April, 1839.

The whole amount of the bills and checks received amounts to about $120,000. The following was the list of letters for Louisville:

L. B. Walpole to H. White, dated 16th April; J. Erwin to H. Hill, dated 17th April; J. Kirkman to J. Kirkman, dated 17th April; R. W. Gilbreth to McCure & Gilbreth, 17th April.

Gill was examined on the 11th inst. and committed to jail to await his trial before the circuit court in September.

Colonization. The resolution offered by the rev. Dr. Alexander, of Princeton, in the old school general assembly, the other day, commending the colonization society and its objects was carried without debate, with but one dissenting voice. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That this general assembly, approving the objects of the American Colonization society, and rejoicing in the success which by a gracious Providence has been granted to this benevolent enterprise thus far, would renew the recommendation to the churches under their care, formerly made, to take up a collection to the funds of said society, on or about the fourth day of July, annually.

Two good to be lost. A gentleman was called upon to give a disquisition on designations inscribed on a lot of bells, recently imported and supposed to be of Spanish manufacture. On examination he found that these inscriptions looked as little like Spanish as any thing else, being apparently some very ill-used members of the alphabet, turned topsy turvy. He excused himself, therefore, from the task of deciphering on the ground that he had never seen a Spanish alphabet, and did not make much progress in the Spanish bell's letters. [N. Y. Death of Gen. Holstein. We have to announce the sudden death of our venerable and estimable fellow citizen, gen. H. V. Du Coudray Holstein. He died at his residence in Chapel street, on Thursday evening, or apoplexy, at the advanced age of 76.

The deceased was a native of Germany, where we believe, he received the thorough knowledge of German and French literature which has since enabled him to sustain himself and family here. At an early age he entered the French army, and served many years as a staff officer under Napoleon. He took refuge in this country upon the restoration of the Bourbons, and has since been a resident of this state. At the time of his death, he was at the head of the French department in the Albany female academy. Though almost constantly employed in this capacity, he still found time to contribute to the literary periodicals and newspapers, and to prepare for the press elegant French and German works. He was a principal contributor to the Lecturer's published in this state. The series of articles entitled "the gallery of Lou Phillippe," which appeared in this paper, were from his busy and graphic pen.

We shall not at this time attempt to do justice to a character of this truly good man; nor have we the time to give even a sketch of his life and his labors, and eventful life. We leave this to those who enjoy more of his intimacy and confidence while living, a few who know and appreciate his worth. [Albany Arg.]

Sarah Walton, the woman against whom a bill was found at the last September session of the court over and terminer, on a charge of infanticide, was acquitted on Thursday last at the request of the attorney general, without any evidence being offered in case. [North American.]

THE OREGON TERRITORY. We have embraced the earliest occasion of our having sufficient space for it to publish the able and instructive report, made in the house of representatives at its last session by the committee of foreign relations, on the subject of the Oregon territory, to which it seems to be high time that the public attention was more particularly turned. It is no more than fourteen years ago that a bill for the occupation of that territory was introduced into the house of representatives by Mr. FLOYD, then a representative from Virginia, (since governor of the state), now deceased, who supported it with great earnestness and zeal. That bill passed the house of representatives by a vote of more than two to one, but, in the senate, was, after debate, ordered to lie on the table, on the motion of Mr. LOWRIE, then a senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LINN, of Missouri, has, with equal earnestness, recently pressed the subject on the attention of the senate; and now we have the elaborate report published to-day, understood to be the production of Mr. CUSHING, of Massachusetts. So that movements towards occupation of the territory, and organization of government therein, have been made successively, from the south, the west and the east; which, though so far without success, can hardly fail to end in some decisive legislation on the subject by the next congress. [Nat. Int.]

THE VIRGINIA ELECTION. We have as yet received from no county the complete returns of the election held throughout Virginia on Thursday last. In some of the counties, owing to threatening weather, the election was continued over by keeping the polls open after Thursday, as is in such cases authorized by law. The partial returns we have seen from Fairfax and Spotsylvania counties (the only ones heard from) were not particularly favorable to the whig cause. [Ibid.]

HARMANUS BLEECKER, ESQ. The appointment of this gentleman as charge d'affaires of the United States at the Hague is at once a source of surprise and satisfaction to his fellow townsmen of Albany. Mr. Bleecker's high character and varied attainments have long commanded the respect of his numerous friends at home, and will unquestionably add to the credit of his country abroad. WM. H. CRAWFORD'S letter to Charles Jared Ingersoll, on the subject of the Bank of the United States.

Woodtown, Dec. 5, 1831.

Dear Sir: Your friendly letter, on the subject of the Bank of the United States, has been received by the course of mail. The opinion which I formed of the constitutionality and expediency of the Bank of the United States, when I was a member of the senate, was the result of a careful examination of the constitution of the United States, made without any preconceived opinions. That opinion is recorded in two speeches made in the senate in the year 1811. Since that time I have had no occasion for renewing the question.

My opinion remains unaltered, I was secretary of the treasury more than eight years, and during that time I had ample evidence of the great utility of the Bank of the United States in managing the fiscal affairs of the union. I am persuaded that no man, whatever his preconceived opinion may be, can preside over the treasury one year without being deeply impressed with the expediency of the Bank of the United States in conducting the finances of the union. The provision in the constitution, which gives congress the power to pass all laws which may be necessary and proper to carry into effect the enumerated powers, gives congress the right to pass the bank bill, unless a law, most proper to carry into effect the power to collect and distribute the revenue, should be excluded by that provision.

The opponents of the constitutionality of the bank place great stress upon the word "necessary," contained in the grant of power, and insist that no law can be necessary but such without which the power could not be carried into effect. Now this construction appears to me to be indefensible.

It does seem to me that the words "necessary and proper" cannot exclude a law that is most proper to carry the power into effect. Yet the unconstitutionality of the bank can be pronounced only upon that construction. It does appear to me that the framers of the constitution never could have intended to exclude the passage of a law most proper to carry a power into effect by another law. My construction of the grant of power to pass all laws which may be necessary to carry the enumerated powers into effect, includes the power to pass all laws which may be necessary and proper to carry the enumerated powers into effect in the most perfect and complete manner, and in an incomplete and imperfect manner.

I have not seen a complete development of the president's plan of a bank. It is possible that, by his plan the transmission of the revenue may be effected. The advantage of this security to the public is incalculable. It ought not to be relinquished unless it can be satisfactorily proved that the Bank of the United States is unconstitutional.

This, I think, cannot be satisfactorily shown.—My speeches are recorded, and can be republished if necessary. They contain the result of the best investigation I was able to give the subject. I am persuaded I could not improve upon it now, if I had the power of investigating the subject, which I have not. I am, sir, your friend, &c.

RESOURCES OF THE WEST. Few persons, we suspect, thoroughly realize what are the capabilities of the valley of the Mississippi, though every body has been talking and writing about them these twenty years. A writer in the New York Review sets this matter in a most forcible light as follows:—

"Look at it in that valley are one million four hundred thousand square miles, or eight hundred and ninety-six millions of acres, while Great Britain and all its islands, contains but about eighty-eight thousand square miles, or fifty-six and a half millions of acres. And what is the character of this vast region? One-third of it, at least, is capable of cultivation, and thick settlement, and one-third is four hundred and sixty-six thousand square miles in extent, about seven times as great an area as all the available land in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales and the islands. Look at it more minutely, and you find it, from the cleared fields of Ohio and Indiana, to the edge of the barren prairies of Missouri, and from the wild rice swamps of the north, to the cypress swamps of the south, fertile beyond example, almost level, or slightly undulating, and accessible in every direction. Never was there a finer country for the agriculturist: standing at his farm house-door, in the interior of Ohio, Indiana, or Illinois, a thousand miles from the salt water, he may see his produce almost on its way to New York, or Europe; in a very few years, five complete lines of water and railway communication will exist between the interior of Ohio and the ocean; four are now in operation. Nor is that valley destined to be less eminent in manufacturing than agricultural. The state of Ohio, if we may rely upon her geologist, Mr. Maier, contains as much bituminous coal, of good quality and easy access, as all England and Wales; and Ohio in this respect is, he thinks, no richer than western Pennsylvania, western Virginia, and Kentucky; judging from the little that is known, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, are probably underlain to a considerable extent by the same great mineral treasure. Nor is it coal alone that abounds in that region. Kentucky and Ohio, extends a bed of iron ore twenty miles in width. Tennessee is filled with iron; immense beds were lately opened in Indiana—and who has not heard of the Missouri mountain of that most precious metal. Already do Pittsburg and Cincinnati, yearly, manufacture some 7 or 8 millions of dollars worth of iron articles for export to other points; and lead abounds also; salt is met with in inexhaustible quantities; lime is universally distributed; and the finest freestone found in the greatest profusion.

Here, then, is a land, the soil and climate of which favor tillage in the highest degree; the interior of which is far more easy of access than the interior of any country in Europe, and filled with mineral wealth. Within its limits, grow maize, wheat, hemp, flax, tobacco, cotton and sugar. It is a land which scarce needs foreign commerce; it is a world within itself, there is scarcely one considerable article of commerce, if we except coffee and some dyestuffs, which the Mississippi valley cannot furnish.

The first flint glass made in America, was at Pittsburg; the porcelain earth found within the limits of that region, rivals that of China; the lakes abound in fish; and the burr stone of Ohio, may compare with the best of France.

Now, what, in the common course of things, must be the result of this wealth and capability? A dense population, a population of not less than one hundred and twenty millions of people; nay, if we base our calculations on the present population of France, of not less than one hundred and sixty millions, that is to say, a population greater than that now living in Great Britain, Ireland, France, Holland, Spain, Portugal and Germany.

LOWER CANADA. "On Thursday morning," says the Montreal Herald of Saturday last, "several loyal families from La Tortu and the surrounding towns arrived in town, in consequence of the treats to which they have lately been subjected by the rebels, and the fears entertained that their lives were in danger. Among the number is Mr. Vitty, who was so severely wounded when Mr. Walker was killed at the breaking out of the rebellion last year. The third act in the tragedy of Lower Canadian rebellion has now commenced, and we doubt not, it will terminate as the previous ones have, in the discomfiture of the rebels, but at a much greater sacrifice of life and property."

SMALL POX AND VACCINATION IDENTIFIED. An English paper mentions that Mr. Creely, a surgeon of Aylesbury, has demonstrated the important fact, that small pox and cow pox have the same origin, the latter being small pox communicated to the cow. Mr. Creely inoculated cows with small pox matter; the vesicle produced in the animal had every appearance of the vaccine pock. To ascertain the point, children were inoculated with matter taken from the cow thus justifiably infected, the result was a fine, genuine vaccine vesicle. To establish the fact satisfactorily, these children were submitted to small pox disease. Twenty-five successive inoculations have now been performed with this new virus, which may truly be named variola vaccina, and it continues to produce the most satisfactory results; the matter has been employed in Bristol with perfect success. The importance of this discovery cannot be too highly appreciated. The Philadelphia Inquirer states that the identity of the two diseases was ascertained some years ago by Dr. Jos. KLAPP, of that city, who made the same experiments which have been lately used in England with similar results. Reference is made to the 5th vol. of the Philadelphia Medical Museum, by John Redman Cox, M. D. where the whole doctrine is stated. If we mistake not some experiments of a like nature were once made in Baltimore, to the entire satisfaction of medical men.

SPECIAL OR GENERAL PARTNERS. A case was tried in the United States district court in New York yesterday, in which Elijah T. Hubbard and Henry Carrington were plaintiffs, and Edward M. Morgan, Wm H. Jessup, Henry T. Morgan, and Knowles Taylor, were defendants, to test the question as to whether this latter defendant was a special or general partner in the firm of Edward M. Morgan & Co. of Wall street.

The action was an action of assumpsit, and was brought to recover the amount of a balance of an account alleged to be due the plaintiffs, who resided and were in business in Illinois on the 22d of January, 1838. The amount claimed was $10,179 75, with interest.

It appeared that Mr. Taylor had put $75,000 into the firm as a special partner, but had neglected to comply with the provision in the law authorising special partnerships, which requires that "the business of the partnership shall be conducted under a firm in which the names of the general partners only shall be inserted without the addition of the word 'company,' or other general term;" for the word company was used in the certificate of partnership used before recorder Riker, and in all subsequent transactions. Judge Betts therefore instructed the jury that Mr. T. had lost the privileges of a special partner, and they accordingly rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs of $11,125 75—which binds him.

[Newark Daily Adv.]

A case was decided in the superior court on Monday, which may serve as a caution to men holding official situations, that trivial carelessness or neglect may sometimes be attended with very serious consequences. Wm. P. Hallett, esq. was sued for the recovery of a judgment which had been obtained against a Mr. Charles Morris, and the amount of which had not been recovered in consequence of Mr. Hallett's having overlooked, in examining the records of the supreme court, a previous judgment against Morris for $15,000 or $16,000. The amount for which Mr. Hallett was now sued was nearly $4,000, and before the case had been submitted to the jury, it was made out so clear that his counsel, in his behalf, consented to the payment of it with costs.

DEVOTION. There is a sweet and simple custom prevalent in Iceland, which marks the habitual devotion of its inhabitants. Whenever they leave home, though for a short journey, they uncover their heads, and for the space of five minutes silently implore the protection and favor of the Almighty. Dr. Henderson, from whom the fact is derived, and who observed it in the Icelanders who often attended him on his excursions, also remarked it in the humblest fishermen when going forth to procure food for their families. After having put out upon the sea, they row the boat into quiet water, at a short distance from the shore, and bowing their uncovered heads, solicit the blessing of their Father in Heaven. Even at passing a stream, which in their country of precipices is often fraught with danger, they observe the same sacred custom. This affecting habit of devotion has been imputed to the fact, that from their isolated situation and mode of life, the mother is almost the only teacher, and her instruction seems to have become incorporated with their very elements of being.

The old fashioned courtesy and sterling beauty of the following correspondence, so characteristic of the men of the old school, will commend it to the admiration of our readers. It is derived from Spark's invaluable compilation of the Washington papers:

DR. FRANKLIN'S LETTER.

Philadelphia, 16th September, 1789.

"DEAR SIR: My malady renders my sitting up to write rather painful to me; but I cannot let my son-in-law Mr. Bache, call for New York, without congratulating you by him on the recovery of your health so precious to us all; and on the growing strength of our new government under your administration. For my own personal ease, I should have died two years ago; but, though those years have been spent in excruciating pain, I am pleased that I have lived them, since they have brought me to my present situation. I am now finishing my eighty-fourth year, and probably with it my career in this life; but in whatever state of existence I am placed hereafter, if I retain my memory of what has passed here, I shall with it retain the esteem, respect, and affection, with which I have long been, my dear friend, yours, most sincerely,

B. FRANKLIN.

TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

New York, 23d September, 1789.

"DEAR SIR: The affectionate congratulations on the recovery of my health, and the warm expressions of personal friendship, which were contained in your letter of the 16th instant, claim my gratitude. And the consideration, that it was written when you were afflicted with a painful malady, greatly increases my obligation for it.

Would to God, my dear sir, that I could congratulate you upon the removal of that excruciating pain, under which you labor; and that your existence might close with as much ease to yourself as its continuance has been beneficial to our country and useful to mankind; or, if the united wishes of a free people, joined with the earnest prayers of every friend to science and humanity, could relieve the body from pains or infirmities, then you could claim an exemption on this score. But this cannot be, and you have within yourself the only resource to which we can confidently apply for relief, a philosophic mind.

If to be venerated for benevolence, if to be admired for talents, if to be esteemed for patriotism, if to be beloved for philanthropy, can gratify the human mind, you must have the pleasing consolation to know, that you have not lived in vain. And I flatter myself that it will not be ranked among the least grateful occurrences of your life to be assured, that, so long as I retain my memory, you will be recollected with respect, veneration, and affection by your sincere friend,

THE ELECTRIC GIRLS OF SMYRNA. We mentioned some time since, on the authority of a Smyrna paper, the departure of the remarkable electric girls from that city for France. The following letter from a Paris paper gives an account of the progress and apparent failure of their expedition:—

[Boston Daily Ad.]

The two Smyrna girls whose persons present such remarkable electric phenomena, landed, as you are aware, at Marseilles in the beginning of last month. In hopes of realizing a splendid fortune, they intended to exhibit themselves in France and other parts of the continent. Immediately on their arrival, several persons, including various men of science and professors, visited them and ascertained the following phenomena. The girls stationed themselves facing each other at the ends of a large table, keeping at a distance from it of one to two feet, according to their electric dispositions. When a few miles had elapsed, a crackling resembling that of the electric fluid, spreading over a sheet of gilt paper, which was always made in advance from the elder to the younger sister. A key, nail, or any piece of iron, placed upon the table, instantaneously stopped the phenomenon. When the iron was adapted to the under part of the table, it produced no effect upon the experiment. Saving this singular circumstance, the facts observed constantly followed the known laws of electricity, whether glass insulators were used, or whether one of the girls wore silk garments. In the latter case the electric properties of both were neutralized. Such was the state of matters for some days after the arrival of the young Greeks, but the temperature having become cooler, and the atmosphere having loaded itself with humidity, all perceptible electric action seemed to have deserted them. One may conceive the melancholy of these girls, and the disappointment of the two Greeks, their relations, who have come with them in order to share their anticipated wealth.

SAGACITY OF DOVES. Much has been written and spoken upon the sagacity of animals, and so interesting is this subject to most people, and especially to youth, that almost every parent has been beguiled the severities of a winter's evening by narrating to his children some well-attested facts of animals, illustrative of their surprising sagacity. These anecdotes are generally related of quadrupeds, the dog, the horse and the elephant; but I shall relate one of that emblem of beauty and innocence, the dove.

Early in the present winter, my dove-cote was broken into, from the scaffold, by a stranger cat, in the darkness of night, and two of the peaceful inmates were surprised and devoured, in the presence of the family, by this merciless invader. As soon as the morning came, they all forsook their home, and gave such tokens of fright as induced us to search for the cause, when the remains of the slain, in the apartment which had then proved their asylum, at once dispelled all doubts in regard to the cause of the present distress. But another painful question arose with my children, whose sympathies with the little sufferers were now at their height:—"How could the old creature get into the dove house?" My young son had the frankness to dispel this perplexity.

Owing to the severity of the weather, a few days previous, he thought he would feed his doves without calling them from their retreat, and went to the room on the scaffold, removed a board, cast in the grain, but did not take sufficient caution in replacing the board. We at once secured the apartment against another invasion, and replenished it with food; but although the weather continued intensely cold, and the wind boisterous, the doves would in no way enter their habitation by day or by night; but sought their security at the expense of their comfort, by perching upon the carriage house, barn or dwelling house. But in each of these places the ruthless spoiler surprised them, and continued to reduce their number, eluding all our efforts to take her by trap, or otherwise. At length, fearing that the whole covey would fall a prey to her rapacity, I resolved to lie in ambush with powder and buck-shot, and await her approach.

The plan was successful. Between eleven and twelve o'clock at night, the old marauder advanced slowly and cautiously forward to renew her depredations upon the little innocents, but at that moment she fell a sacrifice to her murderous daring. The little doves, from the roof of our dwelling, and by the aid of the light of the moon, saw her bounding and agonizing in death. The next morning, while the children were rejoicing over the fall of their common enemy, and a monster in size she was, among our domesticated feline race the doves participated in the general joy, as indicated by their flying to, circling upon the wing, and hovering over, the slain, and then returning to their deserted habitation, cooing and strutting, in conscious security, after an exile of more than two months. The following night they took roost in their own house, but stationed one at each window for a sentinel. As this order was strictly adhered to each successive night, we were led to apprehend there might be a remaining foe on the premises. Another ambush on my part was successful in taking the surviving partner in crime, and from that moment, the sentinels have been recalled, nidification has been resumed, and all appears blithesome, and full of hope.

SINGULAR FORESIGHT. Six hundred years ago, a monk of the order of St. Francis foretold most of the great discoveries which have adorned later ages. This monk was Roger Bacon. His whole life was devoted to study, and he narrowly escaped being punished as a magician, through the very envy and jealousy of his brethren. He has left a work which earned for him the surname of "The Wonderful Doctor." In this book, the title of which is de Secretis Operibus Naturæ et Artis; there are many things that will astonish the scientific. "A substance may be prepared," says he, "which, in even very small quantities, will produce a violent report in the air, kindle like a train of fire, and destroy whole castles and armies."

A century afterwards, a German taught the Venetians the use of powder which was first employed in their wars with Genoa. "Moreover," says he, "we may cut glasses, or kind of mirrors, some of which will be able to enlarge objects, or bring them near, and others to diminish, or remove them farther; some to make them appear upside down, others to right them again." Is not this the exact idea of spectacles, telescope and microscopes, which made their appearance some ages afterwards? "It is possible," says he, "to discover a mode of moving in the air, of descending and walking about on the bottom of rivers and the ocean." Diving bells and balloons have since been made known, to prove the correctness of Bacon's assertions. "It is moreover possible to build ships that might be managed by one man, and surpass in swiftness all ordinary vessels, even if full of rowers. Lastly, a kind of carriage may be constructed, which, without being drawn by horses, could go over an incredible space." Not to speak of our modern inventions, the attempts which have been made for five hundred years to resolve these two problems of Bacon's are innumerable. Boats with wheels, propelled by a more or less ingenious mechanism, have been almost perpetually attempted since the days of our learned monk.

In 1740, the canals of Belgium and Holland were covered with them, and in France and elsewhere new experiments have been made, and are still making in this branch. As to carriages without horses, it is well known that in the middle of the sixteenth century, Simon Stevinus invented a car with masts and sails, which moved at the rate of about two miles an hour. Marries of Nassau, prince of Orange, had a similar one, which he took great delight in, and so had William the third in England, who was fond of showing it off to the great astonishment of the court and citizens. Many other carriages have been set in motion by a system of wheels and springs like those of a watch. These inventions are doubtless far inferior to our steam, which moves not only boats and wagons, but ships and trains of cars; but it is an act of simple justice to call to mind at times the far-sighted philosopher, who six hundred years ago, affirmed that such hidden powers existed.

DEATH WARRANT OF JESUS CHRIST. Of the many interesting relics and fragments of antiquity which have been brought to light by the persevering researches of modern philosophy, none could have more interest for the philanthropist and the believer, than one which we copy below. "Chance," says the Courier des Etats Unis, "has just put into our hands the most imposing and interesting judicial document to all Christians, that ever has been recorded in human annals: that is the identical death warrant of our Lord Jesus Christ." The document was faithfully transcribed by the editor, and is in the Register.

Sentence rendered by Pontius Pilate, acting governor of Nazareth under Gualdice, stating that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the cross.

In the year seventeen of the emperor Tiberius Cesar and the 25th day of March, the city of the holy Jerusalem, Anna and Caiphas being priests, sacrificators of the people of God, Pontius Pilate, governor of lower Galilee, sitting on the presidential chair of the Patory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross between two thieves—the great and notorious evidence of the people saying—

1. Jesus is a seducer.
2. He is seditious.

3. He is an enemy of the law.
 4. He calls himself falsely the King of God.
 5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.
 6. He entered into the temple, followed by a multitude bearing palm branches in their hands.
 Order the first centurion, Quillus Cornelius, to add him to the place of execution.
 Forbid to any person whatsoever, either poor or rich, to oppose the death of Jesus.

The witnesses who signed the condemnation of Jesus are, viz.—1. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee; 2. Annas Rorabable; 3. Raphael Robani; 4. Capet, a priest.

It shall go out of the city of Jerusalem by the name of Struenus."
 The above sentence is engraved on a copper plate; on one side are written these words:—"A similar tale is sent to each tribe." It was found in an antique vase of white marble, while excavating in the ancient city of Aquila, in the kingdom of Naples, in the year 1820, and was discovered by the commissaries of arts attached to the French armies. At the expedition of Naples, it was found enclosed in a box, of ebony in the sarcophagus of the charmer. The vase is in the chapel of Caserta. The French translation was made by the members of the commission of arts. The original is in the Hebrew language. The charmer requested earnestly that the plate should be taken away from them. The request was granted, as they feared for the sacrifice they had made to the army. M. DEXON, one of the savans, caused a plate to be made of the same model, on which he had engraved the above sentence. At the sale of his collection of antiquities &c. it was bought by Lord HOWARD for 2,890 francs. Its intrinsic value and interest are much greater. A few years ago there was found at Caiskilk, in New York, a shekel of Israel," of the time of our Saviour. On one side was the representation of a palm leaf, on the other, a picture of the temple, with the words underneath, "Holy Jerusalem," in the Hebrew language. Relics like these, properly authenticated, are about them an inexpressible sacredness and veneration. They seem to blend two worlds, and to vary human curiosity from the finite to the infinite.

Portrait of Quakerism. Poulson's American Daily Advertiser furnishes the following extract "a letter from queen Caroline, (wife of George the third), to the princess Charlotte.
 Did I court applause, I would preface this letter with an apology, for the ignorance of hinting at religious principle. To suppose the great swayed their conduct, by a respect for religion is an affront to the delicacy and refinement of their taste. Hence, the day set apart by the laws of their country, for religious service, they deride and insult as vulgar and obsolete institution; should you propose to them a renewal of family devotion, which included the guiltless evening entertainments of their ancestors, you would become an object of derision, rather than of their contempt.
 The same tenets, the same and simple manners of the gospel, are now trodden under foot. Can we wonder, if that profession, which asserts these truths, and preaches these morals, be treated with a similar contempt? But irreligion knows no bounds, hence once let loose; and Christianity herself has been obliquely insulted, within those consecrated walls, where decency and policy, in the absence of reason and virtue, would forever have held her in regal reverence.
 But, notwithstanding the general contempt of religion among the great, you are not to imagine the present age is deep in speculations of infidelity. To such things; for that would imply a certain attention to these subjects—a certain degree of self-reverence and thought—and this would clash with the ruling manners of the times. Indeed there have often wanted laborious husbandmen, who have faithfully sown their tares—not in the night season, but in the broad daylight. These have at length put up into a large and fruitful crop of irreligious implicit faith; for implicit faith, is belief or disbelief, without evidence; and why they disbelieve, of the present age can tell. They have other pretensions, than the meager sophisms of irreligion; and are therefore well content with the conclusion without the premises.
 Fortunately for mankind, there has arisen out of this vile system of disputation, anarchy of belief or disbelief, a religion called the religion of the bankers; and although the great have nothing to do with this simple original worship, I shall make a few remarks upon it, because I am conscious, you are as yet ignorant of its beauty, importance and truth.
 It appears to me, my Charlotte, that the progress made by this interesting people, vulgarly called bankers, and officially called Friends; above all other sects, in simplifying Christianity, and freeing it from those mixtures which have so much disgraced and abused it, has been so extraordinary, that it may justly set them at the head of all reformers, and stamp them with a decisive character, in which their little peculiarities of manner are unworthy of remark. In the first place, they are the only sect who admit no priests or ministers, as a separate order of men, into their constitution; an advantage of so capital a nature, that some think, it is well worth purchasing, by the institution of a distinct society for that direct purpose only. For what a legion of evils does this cut off? Not to mention the greater mischiefs, which the struggles for wealth and power, by an established clergy, have in all countries occasioned. Are not their rivalries, their parties, their controversies, their interests, their intermeddlings, the bane of concord and brotherly affection in all the communities of separatists?—Does not their ordinate authority, frequently as much infringe the rights and privileges of private congregations, as it always does of national churches? Do they not afford ready means of laying at the feet of power, the political influences of dissenting bodies? It would be too much to assert, that it never was in the contemplation of the founder of the Christian religion, to institute such a body of men, and that the supposed necessity of them, is contradictory to the notion of a Divine Revelation, free and clearly communicated in writing; but we cannot help lamenting at least, that so many corruptions, forgeries and interpolations of scripture, which they have been accused of, should deform the page of history.

Secondly, I find the Quakers are the only people, who have completely detached religion from state policy, and thereby avoided that doubtful combination, of two dissimilar interests; which has too frequently spoiled and calumniated both.

They have confined religion to its proper province of amending the hearts and lives of men; and have abhorred the plan of making it subservient to the narrow and temporary purposes of a party, or a government. They have not dared to enlist the Almighty in the service of a particular nation, or to point his thunders against their fellow creatures merely because their worldly interests interfered.

They have not set apart days for the religious celebration, or commemoration of public events; the final consequence of which, no man can see, and which are regarded with totally different feelings by different parties. Keeping their own hands unstained with blood, they have viewed the shedding of blood by others as a subject of humiliation, rather than of thanksgiving; and if ever they offer prayers for national blessings, it is for those of peace, bothery love and righteousness, in which they desire that all mankind should equally participate, and as strenuously endeavor to effect.

Thirdly, I do not know that they differ from other Christians in their speculative notions of the efficacy of prayer; and the interposition of Providence in human concerns; yet I can see, that they are much more modest and reserved than others, in making petitions for particular favors; and hence, according to my judgment, they preserve a greater consistency in the theory of divine perfections, and inculcate a more tranquil and reverential submission to the will of the Deity. In this respect they are a strong contrast to the Puritans of the last century and the first Methodist of this, whose copious and minute addresses to heaven, often degenerated into indecent familiarity, and a querulous impudent importunity.

Fourthly, by boldly discarding, instead of endeavoring to simplify and rationalize those rites of religion, which, from a kind of emblematical veil, thrown about them, will always be abused and misunderstood by the vulgar and fanciful, they have eradicated from among themselves, a vast mass of superstition and error, from which no sect derives its title, is entirely free; and which, in some, has almost overwhelmed all that is valuable in revelation. How far they have been justified, in doing this, from the authority of scripture, I do not inquire; but, the advantage of having got rid of such inlets to false opinion, must be manifest to all, who are capable of making comparisons, and of valuing the peace and happiness of mankind.

On the whole, it appears to me, that no society of Christians ever required the essential of their religion at so cheap a rate, or in so pure a form; and these privileges are so intrinsically valuable, that I should not doubt of the ability of such a sect to maintain its ground, even though it were to resign its little peculiarities of speech and dress. But this is a measure I would by no means recommend to them; their dress in particular should never be relinquished; its simplicity may expose them to the ridicule of fools, but at the same time, secure them the approbation of the wise and good. That you may be one of the latter number, is the prayer of CAROLINE.

MILITARY OUTRAGE IN FLORIDA.

From the New York American.

Under this head, in the New York American, of 26th March, we published some letters from Florida handed to us by a gentleman incapable of imposing upon us as true—that he had any reason to suppose even doubtful,—which imputed to the officers in command at Tampa Bay, gross violations, as they appeared, of the rights of citizens.

We received, some days ago, the following detailed answer to these charges, which, however long, we publish entire; and deem them, as we presume our readers will, quite conclusive, as to the right of the officers to take the course they did—and of the misapprehension as to the extent of the reservation of land for public purposes, under which the letters published by us must have been written.

We have great pleasure in finding—what, indeed, we almost as a matter of course anticipate, when regular officers are concerned—that notwithstanding the contrary appearances, the conduct of these officers was, in this case, entirely in conformity with law.

Fort Brooks, Tampa bay, E. F. April 23, 1839.

In the American of the 26th of March, 1839, we read with surprise an article headed with the words "military outrage in Florida." The surprise we felt arose from the editorial remarks preceding the letters, which are published at length—for the editors of the American have generally been supposed to understand enough of the situation of the officers of the army, and their relation to those who complain of outrages and military oppression, as to have been expected to have at least withheld an opinion till an examination of the grounds on both sides of the question would justify them in doing so. The officer in command at Tampa is unknown to the editors—and this, we feel, should have led them to exercise much suspicion, of such exparte evidence of an outrage, from any source, however respectable.

We thank the editors for the offer of the privilege granted to those upon whom even the sentence of death is pronounced; and for the purpose of doing ourselves justice in the eyes of many of the readers of the American, will proceed to place before the public the whole statement of the case, part of which they have had from an individual, of whose responsibility the public themselves must now be the judges.

The following correspondence will place the whole transaction in the light in which it actually occurred.

Fort Brooks, Jan. 3d, 1839.

Sir: I deem it my duty to apprise you, that a citizen by the name of James Lynch, is building on the public ground at this place, within fifty yards of the hospital—and I discovered yesterday that the said Lynch has been cutting timber on the public lands, within about 3 miles of this place. Believing as I do, that he has no authority to act thus, I make this report to you, as you may have the authority, as you have the means, of preventing these abuses. With great respect, your obt^s serv^t.

(Signed) S. B. DUSENBERRY, Ass't. quarter master.

To lieut. col. Cummings, commandant.

Fort Brooks, E. F. Jan. 3, 1839.

Sir: I herewith enclose a statement of captain Dusenberry, assistant quartermaster of this post, in relation to an intrusion on the public lands in the vicinity, and beg leave to add, that the person here named is now cutting and destroying the best of the timber in the neighborhood of this post, which is now becoming scarce and much needed for the public service.

It seems that he claims the ground on which the Seminole negroes are encamped as his own, and a few days ago applied to me to have them removed, that he might build a house on the spot. This request, of course, has not been granted.

Having reported these facts to my proper military superior, I conceive that I have discharged my duty. I would respectfully beg leave to suggest, however, that if the U. S. district attorney should be instructed to issue process against the intruders and bring them before a court, to answer for their trespasses, it might have good effect, and prevent further difficulty. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obt^s serv^t.

(Signed) A. CUMMINGS, Lt. col. com'g Z. Taylor, com'g army of the south.

In answer to the foregoing letter, Lt. col. Cummings received the following letters:

Ass't adj. gen'l's office, Fort Clinch, Jan. 14, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 3d inst. including a statement of capt. Dusenbery, acting quartermaster, relative to an intrusion on the public lands in the vicinity of Fort Brooks. I herewith transmit you copies of a correspondence between col. D. Clinch, 4th infantry, and the war department, and two letters from Elijah Hayward, esq. commissioner of public lands, on the same subject, in 1830, with a plot defining the limits of the reserve.

From the above papers you will perceive that the government has made a reservation for military purposes at Tampa Bay, of sixteen miles square, and empowered the commanding officer to remove therefrom any person or persons who may have illegally settled on the same.

The commanding general, therefore, directs that no building be allowed to be erected within the limits of said reserve, without having previously obtained the sanction of the commanding officer; and any public timber that may have been cut improperly, that you at once seize and convert to the use of the public service. I am, sir, &c. &c.

The two following letters will finish this selection on the subject of the "military outrages," in preventing buildings from being erected on the reserve in despite of military authority:

General hospital, Fort Brooke, Jan. 26, 1830.

I would respectfully represent to the general that there is at present residing, adjoining the hospital, a large number of whites, blacks and Indians, that the numerous and still further contemplated erections of buildings and shanties by different individuals in the immediate vicinity, is not only a source of annoyance and destruction to the maintenance of proper discipline among the sick, but cannot fail to prove a fruitful cause of disease on the approaching hot weather, by the congregation and consequent accumulation of filth, of such a mixed population. (Signed) N. S. JARVIS, surgeon U. S. A.

Fort Brooke, Florida, January 26, 1830.

GENERAL: The above has been submitted to me, and I fully concur in opinion with surgeon Jarvis, and would add; that a permanent occupancy of the ground immediately surrounding the hospital, with shanties, &c. will not only incommodate the sick and destroy the discipline of the hospital, but if persisted in, will eventually result in a forced abandonment of the premises now occupied for hospital purposes. Respectfully submitted,

Gen. Z. Taylor, commanding army of the south.

In the case of Mr. Lovelace we will merely say, that as the post sutler had made an official application for protection, and as the commanding officer was in full possession of all the lawful powers of preventing new accessions to the number of our valuable citizens, how much soever he doubted the propriety of the military ejection of those already located here, it was highly unbecomg for Mr. Lovelace, or any one else, to attempt to force himself or his goods upon the military reserve, especially as he had been officially informed that he had no permission to land his goods, and would do so at his peril. And as the general reader of the American will not readily understand why Mr. Lovelace did not possess a "common right, guaranteed by the laws of the country," we will take the trouble of quoting the following selections from the regulations of the army, for his consideration.

"Article xxvii. 1. The sutlers are to be treated with respect, and protected in their places."
"6. For the privilege enjoyed by the sutler, he shall be assessed and held to pay to the post fund, at the end of every two months, or oftener, as may be determined by the council of administration, at a rate not exceeding fifteen cents a month for every officer and enlisted soldier serving at the post; the monthly average number of such persons to be determined equitably by the said council."

"The commanding officer will lend his authority as often as may be necessary, to protect, within his local command, the privilege of the sutler; and no further tax or burden, in any shape beyond what is herein authorised, will be imposed on him."

We merely ask the question, whether the arrival of an individual with $20,000 worth of goods, openly expressing a disregard of all military authority—and paying none of the assessments, and under none of the restrictions of the sutler, and having few, if any, but those connected directly or indirectly with the army, to furnish with goods, would not interfere with the privileges of the sutler?

Under these circumstances the commanding officer of the post referred the case to the commanding general then present, who sustained colonel Cummings in the exercise of his military authority; and refused permission to Mr. Lovelace to land his goods; and as the attempt was persisted in, the result was, that Mr. Lovelace and his accomplices were very shortly secured, and sent with his goods to the vessel from whence they came.

Permission has since been granted by the commanding general to Mr. Lovelace to locate at this post.

It is not our intention to weigh the merits of the assertion, that the conduct of the commanding officer in the above cases was "viewed as an arbitrary stretch of power," by some of the officers here.

We hope for the credit of the service that this assertion is no better sustained than the rest of the allegations of the correspondent of the American.—But if we are so unfortunate as to be mistaken, and these opinions have been actually expressed, it is time these officers should be reminded that they receive their commissions from the president, while reposing special trust and confidence in their patriotism, valor, fidelity and abilities, and to remember that their commissions are to continue in force during the pleasure of the president of the United States for the time being.

We have not gone thus into detail for the purpose of entering into a contest or of commencing a controversy. We deprecate the necessity of having thus to appear before the public—not because we fear the most minute investigation of our conduct—for we belong to the public—but because we are well aware of the fact, that many have read, and reading, have believed, charges against absent officers, who will never see their refulcation.

We hope the editors of the New York American, and all others, may rest assured, that they will find, if they will be at the trouble of an examination, the charges of "military outrages" elsewhere, about as well grounded as they have been in "Florida."

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE TO MR. STEVENS.

Harrisburg, Saturday morning, May 11, 1839.

SIR: The committee appointed by the house of representatives "to inquire whether Thaddeus Stevens, a member elect from the county of Adams, has not forfeited his right to a seat in the house," will meet for that purpose in the east committee room of the house, on Monday next, at 4 o'clock, P. M. or at an earlier period, if you desire it, where you may attend and be heard.

CLARLES M. HEGINS, chairman.

MR. STEVENS' REPLY.

Harrisburg, May 13, 1839.

SIR: I received your letter of the 11th instant, informing me that the committee appointed by the house of representatives "to inquire whether Thaddeus Stevens, a member elect from the county of Adams, has not forfeited his right to a seat in the house," will meet on Monday next, when I might attend and be heard.

I decline to appear before the committee, because I will not consent to a palpable violation of the constitution and laws. If, as on recent occasions, I am compelled by force to witness such scenes, I can at least withhold from them my sanction, both express and implied.

The resolution admits the legality of my election and return, but proposes to inquire whether I have not forfeited my seat before my admission into the house. The grounds of such forfeiture are not specified in the resolution, and I can only infer them from the remarks of the original mover of the resolution, T. B. McElwee. As set forth by him, they consist in non-user, misuser, contempt of the house by calling it an illegal body—the ouffring of a mob; and for sundry personal improprieties. No constitutional disqualification was or is alleged, and for none other can the house, without an illegal exercise of arbitrary power, prevent a member elect from taking his seat. Expulsion for good cause, after admission, stands on different grounds, and is authorised by the constitution.

I think it will trouble the committee to find a precedent of the declared forfeiture for non user of an elective representative office. For two whole sessions, the minority in the British parliament absented themselves from the house. Yet, neither the King, the speaker, nor the majority dared to exercise the high-handed tyranny now attempted by what is called the house of representatives of Pennsylvania.

That certain public executive or ministerial offices may be forfeited for non-user in England, where no written paramount constitution exists, is true. The business of several departments of government could not otherwise be transacted. But it must be a continuing non-user. It would be too late to declare the forfeiture after the officer had taken possession of his office, and was ready to discharge its duties. The forfeiture is a remedy against public inconvencence, and not a punishment upon an offender. But in constitutional governments no such forfeiture takes place, except for the causes and in the mode pointed out in the constitution itself.

In the present case, the majority did not seem to consider the public business as suffering by my absence, nor claim a right to take away from the constitu-

...to forfeit my seat; else they would have declared it vacant before the adjournment, and given my constituents a new election during the vacation, so that they might be represented in the present session. No intimation of a vacancy, no step to supply it, was taken, until I appeared to take the oath and use the office. The house, therefore, seems rather anxiously to create than to supply a vacancy.

I need hardly notice the allegation of the mis-user of an office which I have been prevented from using at all.

The right to exclude a member elect for speaking or writing contemptuously of the house or its proceedings is a novel and dangerous position. Until members elect has taken the requisite oaths, he cannot participate in the proceedings of the house, or is he any more subject to its jurisdiction, than private citizen. Individuals may be punished by the house for corrupt attempts upon its integrity, by attempting to bribe its members, or for disturbing and interrupting its proceedings, as in the case of December 1806, but not for any written or printed comments on its proceedings, however severe.—The sixth section of the ninth article (the declaration of rights) of the constitution declares that "the printing press shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the legislature or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof." Any thing which may have published, therefore, is not subject to your supervision, if the constitution be yet considered as existing.

If I were admitted member, and should demean myself indecorously and disorderly towards the body, the house has the power of expulsion.—and if calling it an "illegally organized body—the spring of a mob," as was contended in debate, be sufficient cause for expulsion, I think I may safely venture to furnish an excuse for that act soon after my admission. I do consider the "Hopkins house" usurping" body; but, like all other usurpers having possession of the government, de facto, its acts will be binding, for good or evil, on the state.—Hence my constituents have thought proper to ask me to take my seat, and attempt to moderate an evil which is now without remedy.

If the committee should occupy the ground pointed out by the mover of the resolution, and sit in judgment upon the decency and morality of my conduct, I must still further object to the tribunal. I do not disrespect to the committee; for a majority then I feel a high regard; but the whole question their report will be again in the power of the majority of the house, and I cannot agree to admit of intellectual, moral, or habitual competency of Jos. B. McElwee, his co-mpeers, conjutors and flatters, to decide a question of decency and morals.

For myself personally I feel no anxiety for the suit of this inquiry, or the reasons which may be given for it, and to put which upon the journal I presume was the chief object of this proceeding.—My only anxiety is that the constitution may not be further violated, and that the people may yet have some ground to hope that LIBERTY, although often wounded, may not expire.

I owe my acknowledgments to the committee their prompt attention to this business, and that it may be speedily finished. With proper respect, your obedient servant,

THADDEUS STEVENS.

Charles W. Hegins, esq. chairman committee, &c.

THE PROTEST

The democratic members of the house of representatives, against the proceedings of the majority of that body in relation to Mr. Stevens. The undersigned, members of the house of representatives, present the following reasons for their objection to the resolution that the admission of Thaddeus Stevens "be postponed for the present, and a committee of five be appointed to investigate the claims of the said Thaddeus Stevens to a seat in the house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and whether he has, if elected, forfeited his seat by mal-conduct."—and the undersigned demand, under the rules of this house, that these reasons be placed upon the journal thereof.

The third section of the first article of the constitution provides, that "no person shall be a representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-one years, and have been a citizen and inhabitant of the state three years next preceding his election, and the last year thereof an inhabitant of the district in and for which he shall be chosen a representative, unless he shall have been absent on public business of the United States or of this State."

It is not disputed by the majority in this house, or by any member of it, that the qualifications pointed out in this article, or either of them, are possessed by Thaddeus Stevens; nor is it pretended that he was not elected a representative of the county of Adams, and that the certificate of his election was made out, and returned through the secretary of the commonwealth, according to the provisions of the several acts relating to elections, now in force, and in strict conformity with the established usages of this house.

We contend, therefore, 1st. That in the absence of a constitutional disqualification, the speaker cannot refuse to administer the oath of office to a member elect, when he appears at the bar to be sworn; nor can the house, without an illegal assent, have power to exclude such member elect from its seat. The inquiry contemplated by the resolution above referred to, cannot therefore be ordered, because the house has no power to punish a member elect for mal-conduct before admission. It matters not how grave may be the charges brought against him—it matters not how gross may be his mal-conduct as a private individual—it is of no consequence that he may have spoken or written disrespectfully of the house or of its members. The constitution nowhere indicates these things as operating to disqualify a member elect from taking his seat in the first instance, and the house has no legal power to raise a committee to try an offender which they have no power to punish; if found guilty of the charges preferred against him.

It is contended, 2d. That the principles advanced in this house, that no user of office is sufficient to work forfeiture, is false and untenable in law as regards an elective representative office, and that no precedent can be found even among the parliamentary records of Great Britain for the establishment of such a doctrine, though in that country the parliament is the supreme power, and there is no written constitution to restrain it, unless the magna charta and the bill of rights may be considered to be such. It is true, that in England there are offices of an executive character, of which no user may cause a forfeiture; but even there the forfeiture must be declared while the no user continues, and before the claimant shall appear to assume the duties of his trust. In a republican government, where the constitution is the supreme law, no forfeiture can take place, except for causes indicated by the constitution itself.

We contend, 3d. That this house has no power to exclude a member elect for writing or speaking contemptuously of the house, its proceedings, or its members—because a member elect, being unqualified by oath, is to such intents and purposes a private citizen; and the seventh section of the ninth article of the constitution, which declares that "the printing press shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof," withdraws the citizen from any jurisdiction which the legislature may seek to exercise for the use of this privilege.

It is contended, 4th. That no vacancy has been created by the resignation of the county of Adams by death or resignation; and that in no other conceivable mode could the seat of Thaddeus Stevens have been vacated, but by the action of the house or by law. He could not be expelled, because he was not a qualified member of the house, and the house had no power of expulsion from a seat he did not hold.

It cannot be pretended that he has resigned, for the reason that he could not resign to any other than the presiding officer of the body of which he was a member elect; and no such resignation has been made.

The people of Adams county who elected him to a seat in this house, could not have received his resignation, nor could they have proceeded to fill by a new election the place so resigned; because such an election would not be valid under the constitution, nor could the house have recognised its validity by receiving the returns.

If a vacancy could have been created by a resolution of the house, or by law; then, if such resolution or law had been passed, it would have been the duty of the speaker, in accordance with the nineteenth section of the first article of the constitution, and the provisions of the act of the 10th of February, 1799, to issue his writ directed to the sheriff of Adams county, commanding him, on a day therein expressed, to hold an election for the supply of the vacancy. No such resolution or law has been passed, and therefore the right of Thaddeus Stevens to a seat in this house has never been impaired, and cannot now be disputed.

For these reasons the undersigned do solemnly PROTEST against the action of the majority in refusing to admit Thaddeus Stevens, a member elect from the county of Adams, to his seat in this house—believing that such refusal is a direct violation of the law and the constitution, and involves a principle destructive of the rights and liberties of the people of this commonwealth.

From the Fulton (Mo.) Jeffersonian.

The hon. T. H. Benton arrived in this city on Tuesday evening; his room is at the City Hotel, where he is at all times extremely happy to see and converse with his friends. As at St. Louis, and as has been his practice for many years, col. B. declines the honor from his friends of public dinners. The following is the invitation given him at Fulton, and his letter on declining the same:

Fulton, Mo. November 10, 1838.

Hon. Thomas H. Benton:
SIR: Your democratic fellow citizens of the county of Callaway, sensible of the services you have rendered the cause of democratic liberty, and desirous of evincing their love for the cause, and their attachment to their benefactors, have appointed the undersigned as a committee to wait upon you, and in their name to tender to you a dinner, to be had at any time your convenience may appoint. In discharging so agreeable a duty, permit us to say to you, that should your engagements allow, nothing would give us more pleasure than the honor of participating with you in such a dinner, and mingling in the social eclat of the festive board.

In conclusion, we will just add, that in the democratic citizens of Callaway you may always confidently look for support in your conflicts with the enemies of democratic liberty. That although defeat may for a time check her advance, yet, armed with the sword of truth, her arms will triumph, and the cause receive from the democrats of Callaway an efficient and powerful support.

We are, dear sir, with sentiments of great regard and respect, your obedient servants.

Fulton, November 12, 1838.

GENTLEMEN: Want of time, and the general rule which I have followed with respect to public dinners, will prevent me from having the pleasure of accepting the invitation with which I have been honored by you on the part of the democratic citizens of Callaway county. I am glad to see my fellow citizens generally, and travel slowly, stopping at intervals, for that purpose. I shall remain in this place until Tuesday, and shall be happy to exchange salutations, and to make the personal acquaintance of all who shall give me an opportunity of doing so. For your kind invitation I am duly thankful and grateful; but it does not come within my general rule of action to accept any public honor, or to meet my fellow citizens in any formal or public way. I wish to see the citizens generally, without form or ceremony, and at any hour during my stay which is convenient to themselves; and I hope in this manner to see as many, and to meet them as commodiously and agreeably, as could be done in a public assemblage. I had the honor to explain myself on this point to the members of the committee who presented the invitation, and I flatter myself that the mode of intercourse which I propose will be generally understood by the citizens, and prove acceptable to them.

I have great pleasure, in travelling through the state, in witnessing the universal prosperity which pervades the land, and contrasting it with the predictions of ruin with which my ears have been stung for several years in congress. Our crops of every kind are the most abundant ever known, and that is a blessing which we are indebted to a plentiful Providence and to the industry of the agricultural and laboring classes. We have the best prices ever known for produce, property and labor; and that is a blessing for which we are indebted to the overthrow of the monopoly of the Bank of the United States, to the increase of gold and silver among us, and to the general policy of the administrations of gen. Jackson and Mr. Van Buren. We have hard money for every body, so that every citizen that pleases can get "the better currency," the same as an "office holder;" and for this we are indebted to the firmness of the democracy, which would not yield to federal fury, and to the integrity of the New York banks, which would neither be beggared nor bullied by "colton-bag-letters" into an indefinite prolongation of the suspension.

A few years ago, and especially when we had a national bank and a federal administration, the price of produce, labor and property was only about the one-third, or the one-half of what it now is; and farming was then considered the poorest business which could be followed, and New Orleans the meanest market that could be found. Now all this is reversed. Prices are now the best ever known; farming is the best business which a man can follow; and New Orleans is among the best markets in the union. The main cause of all this depression formerly was in the conduct of the Bank of the United States in collecting and carrying off specie, in accumulating bills of exchange upon New Orleans, and in making vast loans to a few monopolizing speculators who could then knock down prices as low as they pleased. The specie thus collected and carried from the south and west in the short space of ten years previous to 1832, amounted to above forty-two millions of dollars, (a full proportion of it from Missouri); a drain of the precious metals sufficient of itself to destroy all prices, to derange all dealings, to paralyze all industry, and cripple all local banks. These were the causes of the depression some years ago. The main causes of our present prosperity is in the increase of our specie; the breaking down of the monopoly of the Bank of the United States, and in releasing New Orleans from the dominion of her branch at that place. The specie in the union has been increased in six years from twenty millions to one hundred millions of dollars—an increase which is of itself sufficient to raise prices, to restore credit, to invigorate industry, and to enable all solvent banks to pay specie for their notes.

My residence in St. Louis, where there was a branch of the United States bank, and my travels in other parts, and especially in New Orleans where there was another, enabled me to observe the workings of that institution, and to see that so far as business was concerned, it was nothing but a collector and exporter of specie, and a favorer of monopolizers, usurers and politicians; and that, so far as politics was concerned, it was nothing but a federal machine, working incessantly to elevate federalism and to depress democracy; and seeing all this I was one of the foremost to take my stand among those who were so uncompromisingly opposed to the renewal of its charter.

The prosperity which now gladdens the land, took its commencement, and has been in a regular course of increase, from the time that we first broke the power of the bank at the veto session of 1832, (with the exception of transient interruptions from the panics), and it will be permanent if the bank and its confederates will let it alone. But they will not let it alone. They will not let prosperity continue, because that prosperity is fatal to them. The federal party, with all its forty names, has never been able to live upon any thing but public distress; public prosperity kills them, and this they know. Public calamities revive them; and, therefore, we see the same insolent extent in all their leaders over every species of national misfortune, whether it be a British victory over our armies in time of war, or a bank-made distress over our citizens in time of peace. A continuation of the present prosperity will expunge the party, not by black lines, but by a clean and total rubbing out. New distress is indispensable to them.

The late bank suspension (which was a contrived piece of business, and one of the objects of the distribution law) was fully counted upon to restore the federal party and its tutelary deity—the Bank of the United States—to full power; but it was made at the wrong time. It was a master stroke but wrong timed. It should have been made in the fourth, instead of the first, year of Mr. Van Buren's administration; it was premature. Its authors did their best to make it last until the next presidential election; but the democracy and the New York banks forced the resumption, and now there is no alternative but to make a new suspension for the elections of 1840. It is a bad chance, but it is the only chance. They are dead without it; and, accordingly, all the preparations are now in full progress for that catastrophe. The preliminary steps are already taken. An expansion of the paper currency has commenced, to be followed at the proper time by a sudden contraction, and the consequent stoppage of the banks, and the general derangement of the business of the country.

The president of the Bank of the United States, a few years ago, in answer to interrogatories from a committee of the senate, declared "that there were but few state banks which the Bank of the United States could not destroy by an exercise of its powers;" and the same president has lately declared that his bank is struggling to ever last. We know it is more wicked; and we have his authority that it is more powerful; and upon this power and this wickedness the confederates now build their designs. Agencies of that institution are established in the south and west to gather up specie and ship it to Philadelphia, to push into circulation millions upon millions of the notes of that bank, and collect bills of exchange upon New York and New Orleans to exhaust those cities of their specie when the crops are coming in. At the same time, the political party identified with this bank are crying out for an increase of banks and banking capital, and for increased issues of small notes under twenty dollars. They are encouraging the introduction of small notes and post notes from all the neighboring states, and they are doing every thing in their power to promote the paper, and to diminish the gold and silver currency. This is what is going on at Philadelphia is the source from which these machinations issue, and the south and west are the devoted theatres of operations. Without referring to other states, I take leave to point your attention to our own, and to ask you to observe what is now passing among ourselves. Agencies are established among us to import paper, and to export specie; there are houses in St. Louis which should have this inscription over their doors: "Paper money importing and hard money exporting warehouses." Your own bank lives the life of a coon treed by the hunter. It dare not put out notes to the amount of specie for fear of being run upon and blown up, no more than the coon would dare to come down from the tree while the dogs were lying in wait for him at its feet. United States bank notes are exchanged for Missouri notes, the specie drawn for them and shipped; they are exchanged for specie direct and the specie shipped; they are exchanged for bills of exchange on New York and New Orleans, and these bills are sent to those cities to draw specie from them. The United States Bank notes thus received are themselves remitted to the east as eastern funds, and thus the state loses both the specie which it had and the notes which it received for them. In fact the notes are sent out to capture specie, and to return with it. This is the case with the eastern notes which are imported; not so with western, and with the miserable post notes! These are retained for domestic consumption, and sent into the country, and perseveringly pushed into the hands of the farmers; and in a little time, if these operations are allowed to go on, there will be nothing but this trash in their hands. The state will then be ready for the next suspension, which will be a panic, and the new distress which will be charged, of course to any thing that Mr. Van Buren may do or say, no matter what, about that time.

The arrestation of these measures is partly, not wholly, the business of the federal government; and that government is endeavoring to do its part by increasing the gold and silver circulation, restraining the small note circulation under twenty dollars, divorcing bank and state, restoring hard money payments at the federal treasury, preventing the resuscitation of the king bank, advocating the responsibility of incorporated stockholders, promoting general information of the banking system, and exposing the usury, the usurious, the desultive and false practice of banking, and the other's paper. Most of these measures of prevention required the aid of the state legislatures, and none more so than the suppression of the pestilential issue of small paper. The circulation or suppression of this kind of paper has now become one of the regular points of controversy between the federal and democratic parties; and the doctrines of the democratic party may be seen in general Jackson's messages, in Mr. Van Buren's letter to Sherrod Williams, and in the present practice of the general government, which neither receives nor pays out any note below twenty dollars.

The democratic administration is doing its part to arrest the impending mischief; but every state can do much for itself, and Missouri, especially, can do enough for herself. She is large enough, rich enough, and active enough, and far enough removed from the center, to be able to protect her own currency. She can regulate it herself, and make it what she pleases within the limits of the constitution of the United States. She is as large as England, has as many elements of inherent wealth, is not yet enslaved by the paper system, and is a thousand miles off from that unchartered Bank of the United States which is now determined to go on as a national bank without a national charter, to intrude her branches (agencies) into the states in defiance of their laws, and to harass and destroy their currency until they give up, and admit that they cannot prosper without a king bank to rule over them. Missouri is able to protect herself from these machinations. It is her duty to protect herself. Her destiny is in her own hands; and devoutly is it to be wished, that she may act up to the exigency of the occasion, and apply the remedies which the public good require. Respectfully, gentlemen, your friend and fellow citizen,

THOMAS H. BENTON.

NORTHEASTERN BOUNDARY.

MR. ECHANAN'S REPORT.

The committee on foreign relations, to which was referred the "bill to provide for surveying the northeastern boundary line of the United States, according to the provisions of the treaty of peace of seventeen hundred and eighty three," have had the same under consideration, and now report. That the first section of this bill directs "the president of the United States to cause the boundary line between the United States and the adjacent British provinces, from the source of the St. Croix river directly north to the highlands which divide the water that fall into the Atlantic ocean from those which fall into the river St. Lawrence, thence along said highlands from the northwest angle of Nova Scotia to the northwesternmost head of Connecticut river, as particularly defined in the treaty surveyed and marked, and suitable monuments to be erected thereon, at such points as may be deemed necessary and important."

The second section provides for the appointment of a commissioner and surveyor by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, "who may employ such assistants, and under the direction of the president, as he may think proper; and who shall give to the president, as soon as he returns, a report of his proceedings to the president, with a correct map of the country over which said line passes, exhibiting the prominent points of its topography and the location of the mark and monuments by them made and erected."

The third and last section merely provides for the compensation of the commissioner and surveyor.

This bill, then, proposes that congress shall create a commission, independently of Great Britain, to run and mark the northeastern boundary of the United States, continuous with that of New Brunswick and Canada, provinces of the British empire. It asks no previous consent from Great Britain; it does not require that Great Britain should become a party to the survey; and yet the country has common interests with the United States in the correct establishment of this boundary, according to the treaty. It would be premature and inexpedient if the committee believe, to resort to such a course of separate action towards a neighboring and friendly power, between which and the United States there is a reciprocal desire to maintain the most friendly relations, until every other means of amicably adjusting the dispute shall be exhausted. Before the committee could recommend the adoption of such measure to the senate, they ought to be satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, first, that the United States have a clear title to the disputed territory which would be embraced within their limits by the proposed survey; and, secondly, that no other and more friendly expedient remains untried of bringing this long pending controversy to a conclusion.

The committee will, therefore, proceed to consider the question under this twofold aspect. And, first in regard to our title.

This title depends altogether upon the correct construction of the definitive treaty of peace between the United States and his Britannic majesty, concluded at Paris on the third day of September, or thousand seven hundred and thirty-three.

By the first article of this treaty, "his Britannic majesty acknowledged the said United States, viz: New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia to be free, sovereign and independent states; that he treats with them as such; and for himself, his heirs and successors, relinquishes all claims to the government, property and territorial rights of the same, and every part thereof."

The United States had declared their independence almost seven years previous to the date of the treaty. They had maintained this declaration before the world; and the treaty is not only a solemn recognition of that independence by Great Britain, but an express acknowledgment that she treated with them as free, sovereign and independent states. We were equals treating with an equal. Great Britain was not a superior assigning territory to an inferior. No superiority was claimed on the one side, or would have been acknowledged on the other. Great Britain then claimed no such prerogative as she now asserts, of assigning an appropriate boundary to the United States, as a new power, formerly under her dominion. The treaty must, therefore, be construed as a solemn agreement entered into by one sovereign and independent nation with another, equally sovereign and independent.

It was not necessary expressly to have prescribed the limits of the United States by the treaty. At its date, the boundaries of each of the thirteen states were well known. The first article acknowledged each of them to be sovereign and independent, and relinquished "all claim on the part of the British king to the government, property and territorial rights of the same, and every part thereof," and this would have been sufficient.

The commissioners who framed the treaty were, however, not content with such a general recognition. Its second article proves their desire to prescribe the limits of our boundary in a manner so precise and specific, as forever to prevent all disputes upon the subject. This second article is as follows:

ART. 2. "And that all disputes which might arise in future, on the subject of the boundaries of the said United States, may be prevented, it is hereby agreed and declared, that the following are, and shall be, their boundaries, viz: from the northwest angle of Nova Scotia, viz: that angle which is formed by a line drawn due north from the source of the St. Croix river to the highlands which divide those rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the Atlantic ocean, to the northwestmost head of Connecticut river," &c. It is unnecessary here, to repeat any more of the treaty description.

In every delineation of territory, the all important point is to fix the place of beginning with the greatest possible precision and certainty. To prevent all dispute thereafter, this was done by the commissioners. "The northwest angle of Nova Scotia" was a well known point. This can be clearly established by the most authentic official documents, which, it will conclusively appear, from the highest intrinsic evidence, were before the commissioners at the time the treaty was made. It is true that this point had never been fixed by actual survey, nor was it marked by the erection of any monument; but that it could be found upon the ground at the intersection. This northwest angle of Nova Scotia, which was notorious, although the very spot had not been ascertained, was fixed upon as the place of beginning of our boundary, in order to prevent all future disputes; and yet, strange as it may appear this is the very point now contested by the British government. Whether with any good reason, it will be the task of the committee to inquire.

It is agreed by both parties that the map, called Mitchell's map, a copy of which is annexed to this report, was the one used by the commissioners at the formation of the treaty. It was published in 1753, and bears upon its face an official stamp; it has been used by the British government, and at the request of the lords commissioners for trade and plantations. Whoever may inspect this map will, at once, perceive the natural formation of that region. The river St. Lawrence runs from the southwest towards the northeast; whilst numerous tributaries rising in the highlands to the south of it, and passing north through its valley, empty themselves into the main stream. These tributaries are all necessarily short; because the highlands from which they flow run at no great distance from the river, and in parallel direction to it, throughout its whole course. From these highlands, on the south, proceed the head waters of the Connecticut and Antisogaquin, Kennebec, the Penobscot, the St. John, and the Restigouche, all flowing into the Atlantic ocean, through different bays. And here we may be observed, that there is not a single stream, which arises on the south side of these highlands, throughout this whole region, which does not first empty itself into some Atlantic bay; not one of them flows directly into the main ocean. Such is the natural formation! Highlands running in a parallel direction with the St. Lawrence, and dividing the streams which fall into that river on the north, from those which seek the Atlantic ocean in the south. In 1753, when Mitchell's map was published, the British possessions in North America did not extend north of the St. Lawrence.—At that period, it will appear from the map that the northwest angle of Nova Scotia was to be found on the St. Lawrence, at the point intersected by the line running due north from the source of the St. Croix. This north line is distinctly marked upon the map. On the west of it, the words "New England" are printed in large letters, and on the east of Nova Scotia.

If this map were, alone, to be the guide, and if the place of beginning of our boundary, mentioned in the treaty, had been simply "the northwest angle of Nova Scotia," without further qualification, the state of Maine would have extended to the St. Lawrence. In what manner was this northwest angle of Nova Scotia brought as far south as the highlands separating the streams which flow in opposite directions to the St. Lawrence and to the Atlantic? In February, 1763, Great Britain acquired Canada from France by treaty. Canada, New England and Nova Scotia being then all subject to the British crown, the king thought proper, in creating the province of Quebec, to extend the limit south of the St. Lawrence, so as to include the valley of that river. The reasons were obvious. Quebec the seat of government, was situated on its northern shore. It was one of the most important cities in North America, and the trade and business of the people along the numerous streams which flowed into the St. Lawrence from the highlands south of it, would naturally centre there.—Beside, it was obviously convenient that the limits of the different provinces should be regulated, as far as practicable, by the course of the rivers; and it would have been highly inconvenient that the valley south of the St. Lawrence, within the sight of the capital of the province of Quebec, and necessarily having constant intercourse with the opposite shore, should continue attached to remote and distant governments.—The king, therefore, by his proclamation, dated on the 7th of October, 1763, declared that the government of Quebec should be bounded, south of the St. Lawrence, by a line crossing that river and the Lake Champlain, in forty-five degrees of north latitude and passing "along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the sea, and also along the north coast of the bay des Chaleurs and the coast of the gulf of St. Lawrence, to cape Rosiers." Thus the province of Quebec was extended south, so as to include the vale of the St. Lawrence, and its southern line was fixed along the highlands from whence its tributaries flowed. New England and Nova Scotia were deprived of this much of their former territory; but they still retained all that portion of it watered by streams whose sources were on the south side of these highlands, and which emptied themselves into the sea. This was a natural and proper division. After the date of the treaty, "where was 'the northwest angle of Nova Scotia' to be found?—Can doubt or difficulty rest upon this question? We must look for it on the line running north from the source of the St. Croix, at the point where this line intersects the southern line of the province of Quebec, "running along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea." This point is, and necessarily must be, the northwest angle of Nova Scotia. It is demonstration itself. To run these two well described lines upon the face of the earth, is to ascertain that angle. The commissioners, therefore, who formed the treaty, was and was placed the beginning of our boundary at a point which could be rendered absolutely certain, by merely running these two lines. Those, who choose to examine Mitchell's map, will find that the due north line marked upon it from the source of the St. Croix, crosses the southern line of the province of Quebec, in these dividing highlands, about the forty-eight degree of north latitude.

But the British government deemed it proper to fix the boundaries of the province of Quebec, even with more solemnity than by royal proclamation. This was done by an act of parliament passed in the year 1774, "for making more effectual provision for the government of the province of Quebec, in North America." By this act, the separating boundary between that province on the north, and Nova Scotia and New England on the south, was still more clearly and distinctly defined than it had been in the treaty.

The following language is employed, to wit: "bounded on the south by a line from the bay of Chaleurs, along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea, to a point in forty-five degrees of northern latitude on the eastern bank of the river Connecticut." In both the proclamation and the act of parliament, the dividing highlands are described in the very same language. "The highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea." The termini of this boundary are more precisely fixed by the act of parliament than by the proclamation. This act makes the southern point of the line commence on the eastern bank of the river Connecticut, in latitude forty-five, and terminate at the bay of Chaleurs. Its extremities are two well known natural objects.

This bay is in latitude about forty-eight. The act of parliament seems to have been prepared with great deliberation, it is intended to fix the boundaries between the vast provinces of the same empire; and no act of legislation demands greater care and attention. The bay of Chaleurs on the north, in latitude forty-eight, and a point on the Connecticut, in latitude forty-five at the south, were to be the two extremities; and the intermediate line was to pass along the highlands running between these two points, which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the St. Lawrence on the one side, from those falling into the sea upon the other. After this act of parliament, is it possible to conceive of a more extraordinary pretension, than it would have been in the government of Quebec to have claimed jurisdiction, not only to these dividing highlands, whence streams flow into the St. Lawrence, but a hundred miles south and east of them, embracing a region of country watered by a large river, the St. John, and its numerous tributaries flowing into the sea? Such a claim would have broken down the barriers between these provinces, erected with so much care by the act of parliament, and made rivers running north into the St. Lawrence, mean the same thing as rivers running south into the ocean. And yet the present attempt of the British government to make Mars hill the northwest angle of Nova Scotia, rests upon no other or better principle, as will be shown hereafter.

The commissions of the different governors of Quebec, in describing the boundaries of their jurisdiction, followed the language of the proclamation of 1763, until after the passage of the act of parliament in 1774. The first commission which subsequently issued to Guy Carlton, esq. in the same year, and it adopts the language of that act. The southern limits of his jurisdiction are described in its language "to be a line from the bay of Chaleurs, along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea, to a point in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, on the eastern bank of the river Connecticut." Thus this province had for its southern boundary highlands dividing streams running in opposite directions between a bay and a fixed point on a river. Was ever boundary better defined?

It would be a waste of time to recite the numerous commissions which have issued to the governors of Quebec, of Nova Scotia, and, after this province was divided, in 1784, of New Brunswick; all speaking the same language. The western limit of Nova Scotia, and afterwards of New Brunswick, is uniformly described to run from that point where a line drawn due north from the source of the river St. Croix, would intersect the southern boundary of Quebec, and from thence "to the northward by the said boundary as far as the western extremity of the bay des Chaleurs." These commissioners place the natural construction upon one expression, which, in the act of parliament, at first view, might appear vague. In it the bay of Chaleurs is mentioned generally, without a special reference to any particular part of it, though from the whole context the evident meaning was, the western extremity of that bay. The commissions to the governors of Nova Scotia, and afterwards New Brunswick, render this certain, by specifying "the western extremity of the bay des Chaleurs."

Enough has already been shown to fix with precision what was the acknowledged southern boundary of the province of Quebec at the date of the treaty in 1753, and what it has remained ever since. It was then clearly known to have been a line from the western extremity of the bay of Chaleurs, to a point on the eastern bank of the Connecticut, in latitude forty-five, and running along the highlands dividing the tributaries of the St. Lawrence, from the sources of streams flowing into the sea. Where, then, was the northwest angle of Nova Scotia known to be at the date of the treaty?

Without going back to the creation of this province, in 1621, by James the first, which the committee deem unnecessary, though it would add strength to the argument, they will content themselves with a reference to the first commission which was issued to the governor of Nova Scotia, the date of the proclamation of 1683. Before the proclamation, this province, as well as New England, had extended north to the St. Lawrence. After its date, it was necessary to make the commissions of the governors correspond with the extension of the province of Quebec south of that river. Accordingly, the royal commission to Montague Wilmore, bearing date on the 21st November, 1763, limits and restrains the province of Quebec, thus: "To the northward our said province shall be bounded by the southern boundary of our province of Quebec as far as the western extremity of the bay des Chaleurs;" and again, to the westward "it shall be bounded by a line drawn from Cape Sable, across the entrance of the bay of Fundy, to the mouth of the river St. Croix, by the said river to its source, and by a line drawn due north from thence to the southern boundary of our colony of Quebec." The next commission which issued to lord William Campbell, on the 11th August, 1763, changes this description only by commencing with "To the northward our said province," thus: "On the westward by a line drawn from Cape Sable across the entrance of the bay of Fundy, to the mouth of the river St. Croix, by the said river to its source, and by a line drawn due north from thence to the southern boundary of our colony of Quebec, to the northward by the said boundary as far as the western extremity of the bay des Chaleurs." In every commission which has issued since to all the governors of Nova Scotia, and afterwards of New Brunswick, the same identical language has been used. On the 29th day of July, 1782, but four months previous to the conclusion of the provisional treaty of peace with Great Britain, the commissioner granted to governor Parr, describes the limits of Nova Scotia in precisely the same manner. And here it may be proper to observe, that the St. Croix has since been ascertained by a joint commission of the two governments, and a monument has been erected at its source.

Were not, then, the commissioners who framed the treaty fully justified in this conviction, that when they established the point of beginning of the boundaries between the United States and Great Britain, at "the northwest angle of Nova Scotia," they were fixing it at a point long known and well established? To render assurance doubly certain, however, they describe where it is, in the very language which had been uniformly used by the "British government in proclamations, in acts of parliament, and in numerous commissions to the governors of Quebec and Nova Scotia," says the treaty, "is that angle which is formed by a line drawn due north from the source of St. Croix river to the highlands." To what highlands?—The treaty answers, "the highlands which divide those rivers that empty themselves into the Atlantic ocean." From those which fall into the Atlantic ocean." The northwest angle of Nova Scotia, then, is to be found in these highlands, at the point where the dividing due north line between New England and Nova Scotia, which commences at the source of the St. Croix, meets the southern boundary of the province of Quebec. The act of parliament of 1774, was doubtless before the commissioners. They use its very language in the treaty. "Along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea." The only change of this language in the treaty is, that "the Atlantic ocean" is substituted for "the sea." Both are evidently intended to convey the same meaning. It is the sole office of the commissioners to preserve this highland boundary throughout between the two nations is maintained. Under the act of parliament, the southern extremity of this line is described to be "a point in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, on the eastern bank of the river Connecticut." In the treaty it is "the northwesternmost head of Connecticut river." From thence the treaty line runs "down along the middle of that river, to the forty-fifth degree of northern latitude."

Thus the British government surrendered that small portion of the province of Quebec between the northwesternmost head of Connecticut river and the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, in order to have a continuous highland boundary from the northwest angle of Nova Scotia to the source of the northwesternmost head of the Connecticut. To accomplish this object, a part of what had been taken from New England, when the province of Quebec was established in 1773, has been restored by the treaty. The great purpose of the highlands, which the line should consist of the highlands, which, in the language of the treaty and the act of parliament, divide those rivers which empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea?" or "the Atlantic ocean."

The committee will now proceed to show what was the construction placed upon this treaty fifteen years after its ratification, by solemn official declarations of high and responsible agents of the British government.

To render it more manifest that these declarations are wholly inconsistent with the present claim of Great Britain, it will be necessary to show precisely the extent of that claim. It comprehends all that portion of the state of Maine which lies north of the red line marked upon the map No. 2, annexed to this report, and embraces about one-third of its whole territory. This red line leaves the due north line from the mouth of the St. Croix, at the distance of forty miles from the monument there erected, and one hundred miles south of the northwest angle of Nova Scotia, marked A; and thence passes to the westward, not along highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the St. Lawrence from those which fall into the Atlantic ocean, according to the terms of the treaty, but along highlands dividing the rivers which flow into the St. John from those which flow into the Atlantic. These highlands are far south of the St. John; and if the British claim could be established, the whole of that river from its source to its mouth, with all its branches, would be within British territory. Now if it can be demonstrated that agents of high character, acting under the express authority of the British government, several years after the date of the treaty, have expressly admitted, in their official arguments and correspondence, that this north line, from the source of the St. Croix, not only crosses the St. John, but runs as far north as the streams emptying into the bay of Chaleurs, what ought to be thought of this recent pretension?

A short time after the conclusion of the treaty a question arose between the two governments which was intended by the St. Croix of the treaty. In order to determine this question, commissioners were appointed under the fifth article of the treaty of 1794, commonly called Jay's treaty. Ward Chipman, esq. the agent of the British government contended that the true source of the St. Croix was at the head of the Scoudiac lakes, at the point marked W, on the second map. In his argument in 1797, to establish this position and to defeat the position taken by the United States, he expressly admitted that "this north line [from the source of the St. Croix to the treaty highlands] must of necessity cross the river St. John." Admitting this fact, his leading purpose seemed to have been to remove this line as far west as he could, so that it might cross the St. John at as great a distance from its mouth as possible, and thus embrace as much of its territory as attainable within British territory.—In prosecuting this argument he says, "but if a north line is traced from the Chepuncatecook, (as insisted on by the United States), it will not only cross the river St. John about fifty miles from Fredericton, the metropolis of New Brunswick; but will cut off the sources of the rivers which fall into the bay of Chaleurs, if not of many others, probably the Miramichi among them, which fall into the gulf of St. Lawrence." Thus it appears that, in 1797, the British government had never thought of confounding that the highlands of the treaty were to be found south of the St. John, or even south of the sources of the streams which empty into the bay of Chaleurs.

Robert Liston, esq. at the time of these proceedings was his Britannic majesty's minister to the United States. He was consulted by Mr. Chipman upon the propriety of acceding to a proposition made to him by the agent of the United States. This proposition need not be stated. It was in his reply, dated at Providence, on the 23d of October, 1798, advises Mr. Chipman to accede to the proposition, because "it would give an addition of territory to the province of New Brunswick, together with a greater extent of navigation on St. John's river." The British government now claim the whole river and all its tributaries from its source to its mouth.

The committee might here enumerate, if they deemed it necessary, the numerous maps of this region which were published in England, between the proclamation of 1763 and the treaty of 1783, and subsequently until all of more than half a century; in all of which, without a single exception known to the committee, the western line of the province of Nova Scotia, afterwards New Brunswick, crosses the river St. John, and the northwestern angle of Nova Scotia is placed north of that river.

Previous to the treaty of Ghent, the British government had become convinced of the great importance of having a direct communication within their own territory, between their provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and the city of Quebec. It will be seen from an inspection of the map No. 2, that the territory in the state of Maine, now in dispute, intercepts this communication.—It was one object of the British commissioners at Ghent to obtain a cession of this territory. They did indeed make a faint and feeble suggestion that our title was doubtful; but this was not seriously urged. As the occasion was solemn, and the subject one of great importance, can any person suppose that if they had even entertained doubts, where "the northwest angle of Nova Scotia" was to be found, they would not then have earnestly insisted on the pretension which they now so seriously maintain? From the date of the treaty of 1783, until the conferences at Ghent in 1814, during a period of more than thirty years, our title was unquestioned, as it still remains unquestioned.

In a protocol of August 8, 1814, the British commissioners stated the following as one among other subjects, upon which it appeared to them, that the discussions between themselves and the American commissioners would be likely to turn:—"A revision of the boundary line between the British and American territories, with a view to prevent future uncertainty and dispute."

In a note of the British to the American commissioners of the same date, they specify more particularly what they mean by the general proposition; and in conclusion state, "If this can be adjusted, there will then remain for discussion the arrangement of the northwestern boundary between Lake Superior and the Mississippi; the free navigation of that river; and such a variation of the line of frontier as may secure a direct communication between Quebec and Halifax."

It will be perceived that they do not propose to ascertain and fix a line previously agreed upon by the treaty of 1783, but to vary that line in such a manner as to secure a direct communication between Quebec and Halifax. The latter in substance a proposition to obtain a cession of territory and was so considered by the American commissioners. Accordingly on the 25th of August, 1814, they replied "that they had no authority to cede any part of the United States; and to no stipulation to that effect will they subscribe."

On the 4th September, 1814 the British commissioners observe that they are unable to reconcile this declaration with the statement previously made by the American commissioners, "that they were instructed to treat for the revision of their boundary lines;" "although the proposal left it open to them [the American commissioners] to demand an equivalent for such cession either in frontier or otherwise."

They then proceed to insinuate the first doubt in regard to our title, in the following language: "The American plenipotentiaries must be aware that the boundary of the district of Maine has never been correctly ascertained; that the one asserted at present by the American government, by which the direct communication between Halifax and Quebec becomes interrupted, was not in contemplation of the British plenipotentiaries, who concluded the treaty of 1783; and that the greater part of the territory in question is actually unoccupied."

The undersigned are persuaded that an arrangement on this point might be easily made, if entered into with the spirit of conciliation, without any prejudice to the interests of the district in question."

This note contains the first intimation ever made by Great Britain of any doubt as to the title of the United States. It was the undersigned declared that the British commissioners first endeavor to obtain it by cession, and failing in this attempt, they intimate rather than assert a claim to it.

This faint pretension was promptly repelled by the American commissioners in their note of September 9, 1814; and it is due to them that the committee should present their views in their own language.

"With regard to the cession of a part of the district of Maine, as to which the British plenipotentiaries are unable to reconcile the objections made by the undersigned with their previous declaration, they have the honor to observe that at the conference of the 8th ult. the British plenipotentiaries stated as one of the subjects suitable for discussion, a revision of the boundary line between the British and American territories, with a view to prevent uncertainty and dispute; and that it was on the point thus stated, that the undersigned declared that they were provided with instructions from their government; a declaration which did not imply that they were instructed to make any cession of territory in any quarter, or to agree to a revision of the line, or to any exchange of territory where no uncertainty or dispute existed. The undersigned perceive no uncertainty or matter of doubt in the treaty of 1783, with respect to that part of the boundary of the district of Maine which would be affected by the proposal of Great Britain on that subject. They never have understood that the British plenipotentiaries, who signed that treaty, had contemplated a boundary different from that fixed by the treaty, and which requires nothing more in order to be definitely ascertained than to be surveyed in conformity with its provisions. This subject not having been a matter of uncertainty or dispute, the undersigned are not instructed upon it, and they can have no authority to cede any part of the state of Massachusetts, even for what the British government might consider a fair equivalent."

Three subsequent notes, one from the British commissioners, dated 19th September, 1814, an answer from the American commissioners of the 26th September, and a reply from the British commissioners, dated 30th October, seem to have contained all the subsequent correspondence on this subject. In this last note, they declare that "the British government never required that all that portion of the state of Massachusetts intervening between the province of New Brunswick and Quebec, and Great Britain, but only that small portion of unsettled country, which interrupts the communication between Quebec and Halifax, there being much doubt whether it does not already belong to Great Britain." Thus it appears that in 1814 Great Britain would gladly have accepted a small portion of the disputed territory, by cession, and granted an equivalent therefore, either in frontier or otherwise; and yet, strange as it may seem, her claim has since grown to such a magnitude that she now demands the whole by right, under the treaty of 1783.

Our commissioners at Ghent having successfully resisted every attempt for the dismemberment of Maine, agreed upon an article with the British commissioners, not to revise or to change the ancient treaty boundary, but to run and establish upon that treaty boundary a new one, which interrupts the communication, and to ascertain "the northwest angle of Nova Scotia," its place of beginning. This article is the fifth in the treaty. Under it each party appointed a commissioner. Those commissioners disagreed. According to the treaty the question was then referred to the king of the Netherlands, as umpire, whose award was rejected by the United States, because it did not even profess to decide the controversy recording to the terms of the submission, but proposed a compromise, by a division of the disputed territory between the parties. Great Britain has also since announced her abandonment of this award, and now, at the end of more than half a century after the conclusion of the treaty of 1783, the question not only remains unsettled, but threatens to involve the two nations in a dangerous dispute.

The committee will now proceed to state the principles which Great Britain rests her claim to the disputed territory, and to give them such an answer as in their judgment they merit. She contends, in the first place, that the northwest angle of Nova Scotia, mentioned in the treaty, is to be found at Mars hill, in the line due north from the monument at the source of the St. Croix, and forty miles distant from it; and that the highlands of the treaty are those running to the westward from that point and dividing the sources of the streams flowing north into the St. John, and south into the Penobscot. A reference to map No. 2 will clearly show the extent of this claim.

Great Britain contends, in the second place, that if this be not the true treaty line, it is impossible to find it; that, then, the description of the treaty would be essential as to what they have failed to name, of lines terminating the controversy, but by abandoning the treaty altogether, and agreeing upon a conventional line.

The committee trust that a sufficient answer has already been given to this last proposition. They have endeavored, and they believe successfully, to prove that the northwest angle of Nova Scotia was a well known point, capable of being easily ascertained, ever since the proclamation of 1763, by simply running a due north line from the source of St. Croix, to intersect the southern line of the province of Quebec, which consists of the highlands running from the western extremity of the bay of Chaleurs to the head of Connecticut river, and dividing those rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the Atlantic ocean. It is certain as the laws of nature, that these highlands, from which we know that streams do flow in opposite directions, can be found on the face of the country.

In support of the first proposition, the government of Great Britain contends that, as the eastern boundary of the United States runs "by a line to be drawn along the middle of the river St. Croix, from its mouth in the bay of Fundy, to its source;"

and as the St. John, though nowhere mentioned in the treaty, has its mouth also in the bay of Fundy, that, therefore, the St. John is not a river which falls into the Atlantic ocean, according to the description of the treaty. They assert, therefore, that, in looking for the highlands of the treaty, you must search for highlands south of the St. John. This brings them far south to Mars hill; and from thence, westwardly, along the highlands, marked in map No. 2, to the western boundary of the state of Maine, where they first reached the highlands of which they contend, "divide those rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the Atlantic ocean." The whole argument of the British government, it will be perceived, rests upon the assumption that the St. John is not a river falling into the Atlantic ocean, because it has its mouth in the bay of Fundy.

Now what are the objections to this extraordinary pretension, as the committee are constrained to call it?

And, first, what is the bay of Fundy, if it be not a part of the Atlantic ocean? A bay is a mere opening of the main ocean into the land—a mere interruption of the uniformity of the seaboard by the salutation of water. These portions of the ocean have received the name of bays, solely to distinguish them from the remainder of the vast deep, to which they belong. Would it not be the merest special pleading to contend that the bay of Naples was not a portion of the Mediterranean, or that the bay of Biscay was not a part of the Atlantic ocean?

Again: the description of the treaty is, "rivers which fall into the Atlantic ocean." Can it be said, with any propriety, that a river does not fall into the Atlantic, because, in reaching the main ocean, it may pass through a bay? And yet this is the British argument. The Delaware does not fall into the Atlantic, because it flows into it through the bay of Delaware; and, for the same reason, the St. John does not fall into the Atlantic, because it flows into it through the bay of Fundy. The committee know not how to give a serious answer to such an argument. The bare statement of it is its best refutation.

But, like all such arguments, it proves too much. If it be correct, this portion of the treaty of 1783 is rendered absurd and suicidal; and the wise and distinguished statesmen, by whom it was framed, must be condemned by posterity, for affixing their names to an instrument, in this particular, at least, absolutely void. Although they believed they would prevent "all disputes which might arise, in future, on the subject of the boundaries of the United States," by fixing their commencement at "the northwest angle of Nova Scotia," and running from thence along the highlands which divide those rivers which empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the Atlantic ocean," yet it is absolutely certain, that there was not a single river in that whole region of country which, according to the British construction, did fall into the Atlantic ocean. They all fall into bays, without one excepted. Neither can we plead ignorance as an excuse for these commissioners; because it is fully in proof, that they had Mitchell's map before them, from which the fact clearly appears. The Ristigouche does not fall into the Atlantic, because it has its mouth in the bay of Chaleurs; nor does the Penobscot, because its mouth is in the bay of Penobscot; nor to the Kennebec and Androscoggin, because, after their junction, they fall into the bay of Sagadahoc. The same is true, even of the Connecticut, which empties itself into the Long Island sound. All the rivers in that region are in the same condition with the St. John. Thus it appears, if the British argument be well founded, that the commissioners have concluded a treaty, and described highlands, whence streams proceed falling into the Atlantic, as a portion of the boundary of the United States, when, from the very face of the map before them, it is apparent no such streams exist.

There is another objection to the British claim, which is conclusive. Wherever the highlands of the treaty exist, they must be highlands from which on the north side streams proceed falling into the St. Lawrence. This portion of the description is as essential as that from their south side streams should issue falling into the Atlantic. Now the British claim abandons the former part of the description altogether. Their line of highlands commencing at Mars hill is at least a hundred miles south of the highlands whence the tributaries of the St. Lawrence flow. Between these highlands and those claimed by the British government the broad valley of the St. John spreads itself, watered by the river of that name, and the streams which empty into it from the north and from the south.

The two points on the western line of New Brunswick are distant from each other more than a hundred miles; and when you arrive at the British highlands, you find that they divide the source of the St. John and the Penobscot, and not the sources of streams falling into the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic ocean, according to the description of the treaty.

But, even suppose it were possible to prove that neither the St. John nor any other river in that region falls into the Atlantic ocean, would this fact essentially benefit the British government? If this portion of the description should entirely fail, would it render the description itself void? Certainly not. It might be said that the commissioners were mistaken as to where the streams empty themselves which flowed from the southern side of the treaty highland; as the existence of these highlands, there could be no mistake. They are the boundary; and the streams flowing from them are mere matters of description. Can they be sufficiently identified, independently of this mistake? If they can, the question is settled. Now, fortunately on this subject, no doubt can exist. Two circumstances concur to identify them, about which it is not possible there can be a mistake. According to the act of Parliament of 1774, they constitute the southern line of the province of Quebec, between the western extremity of the bay of Chaleurs, in latitude 45, and the eastern bank of the Connecticut river, in latitude 45; and it is equally certain that from thence, all along in regular succession, streams proceed falling into the St. Lawrence. A mistake in one part of a description of boundary, has never been held to vitiate the whole, provided sufficient remains clearly to designate the intention of the parties.

But how is it possible ever to embrace Mars hill in the line of highlands running from the western extremity of the bay of Chaleurs and forming the southern boundary of the province of Quebec? It is clear that in this, and in this alone, the northwest angle of Nova Scotia is to be found. Mars hill is one hundred miles directly south of this line. You cannot by any possibility suppose that hill in this range; unless you can prove that a hill in latitude 46½ is part of a ridge directly north of it in latitude 43; and this notwithstanding the whole valley of the St. John, from its southern to its northern extremity, intervenes between the two. The thing is impossible. Mars hill can never be made, by any human ingenuity, the northwest angle of Nova Scotia.

Particular emphasis has been placed by the British government on the word "highlands," mentioned in the treaty; and comparisons have been made between the height of Mars hill and that of different parts of the highlands which divide the streams of the St. Lawrence from those of the Atlantic. Even in this they have failed; because it has been shown that the summits of the more elevated portions of the treaty highlands are considerably above that of Mars hill, the highest point on the ridge claimed by Great Britain. The committee, however, deem such a question to be wholly immaterial. When highlands are spoken of as dividing waters flowing in different directions, the meaning is plain. From the very nature of things, they must exist and slope off in opposite directions; but whether they consist of table land, of mountains, or even of ramps, still if there be a height of land, from which streams flow down in different directions, this is sufficient. It is not their elevation, but their capacity to divide, which gives them their character.

It is strange that the mere incidental mention of the bay of Fundy in the treaty, should not at all in connexion with the St. John, which is not even named, should have been the foundation of the whole superstructure of the British argument. The reason why it was mentioned at all, is obvious. It was palpably not for the purpose of creating a third class of rivers, flowing into that bay, distinct from those flowing into the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic, as the British government contend; but merely for the purpose of specifying with greater precision, the commencement of the eastern boundary of the United States. Several rivers in that portion of the country had borne the name of St. Croix; from the fact that the early French navigators, actuated by motives of piety, had planted a cross at their mouth when they were first discovered.—Hence it was necessary in specifying the beginning of our eastern boundary, to state that it was in the middle of that St. Croix, which had its mouth in the bay of Fundy. Notwithstanding this description it has been seen, that which was the true St. Croix became a subject of dispute between the two governments. Still both parties were prevented from claiming that any river which did not flow into that bay was the St. Croix of the treaty.

The bay of Fundy has been twice mentioned in the treaty. After starting at the northwest angle of Nova Scotia, and thence sweeping round the boundaries of the United States to this bay, it was necessary to fix, as precisely as possible, the point at which our own boundary commenced. This was essential for a double purpose. In the first place it was the extreme northern point from which a line was to be run due east twenty leagues into the ocean, according to the treaty; within which space the United States were entitled to all the islands along their coast, except such as were within the limits of Nova Scotia; and in the second place, it was the point from which our eastern line was to commence, and to run to the northwest angle of Nova Scotia.

Had the commissioners omitted to fix this point with as great precision as they could, they would have been guilty of culpable neglect. Having done so, and having mentioned the bay of Fundy as that part of the ocean in which the St. Croix has its mouth, the British government have used it, not merely as it was intended, to mark the eastern boundary of the United States, but to render the whole treaty, so far as the northeastern boundary is concerned, absurd, uncertain and void. Surely the commissioners never could have foreseen such a result. The language of this portion of the treaty is as follows:

"East by a line to be drawn along the middle of the river St. Croix, from its mouth in the bay of Fundy to its source, and from its source, directly north to the aforesaid highlands, which divide the rivers that fall into the Atlantic ocean, from those which fall into the river St. Lawrence, comprehending all islands within twenty leagues of any part of the shores of the United States, and lying between lines to be drawn due east from the points where the aforesaid boundaries between Nova Scotia on the one part, and East Florida on the other, shall respectively touch the bay of Fundy and the Atlantic ocean; excepting such islands as are now or heretofore have been within the limits of said province of Nova Scotia."

Upon the whole the committee do not entertain a doubt of the title of the United States to the whole of the disputed territory. They go further and state that if the general government be not both able and willing to protect the territory of each state inviolate, then it will have proved itself incapable of performing one of its first and highest duties. They feel an abiding reliance, however, in the inherent sense of justice of the British government. As soon as that government shall become convinced that the disputed territory belongs to the United States, which they persuade themselves will be the case at no distant day, impelled by a desire of preserving inviolate the faith of treaties, it will hasten to relinquish its pretensions. In that event, the committee entertain not a doubt but that this long contested and dangerous question may be settled to the mutual satisfaction of both governments.

TERRITORY OF OREGON.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JAN. 4, 1839.

Mr. CUSHING, from the committee on foreign affairs, to which the subject had been referred, submitted the following report:

The committee on foreign affairs, to which were referred a message from the president of the United States, and a resolution of the house, in relation to territory of the United States beyond the Rocky mountains, report, in part:

The committee have examined the present subject with the deliberate care which their estimation of its importance demands; and they are of opinion that it is due alike to the interests and the honor of the United States to take immediate steps to assert and secure the national rights in this matter.

They find that in his message to the two houses at the commencement of the second session of the eighteenth congress (December 7th, 1821), the then president of the United States (Mr. Monroe) recommended the subject to the consideration of congress in the following terms:

"In looking to the interests which the United States have on the Pacific ocean, and on the western coast of this continent, the propriety of establishing a military post at the mouth of the Columbia river, or at some other point in that quarter within our acknowledged limits, is submitted to the consideration of congress. Our commerce and fisheries on that sea, and along the coast, have increased, and are increasing. It is thought that a sort, would afford protection to every interest; and have a tendency to conciliate the tribes to the northwest, with whom our trade is extensive. It is thought, also, that by the establishment of such a post, the intercourse between our western states and territories, and the Pacific, and our trade with the tribes residing in the interior, on each side of the Rocky mountains, would be essentially promoted. To carry this object into effect, the appropriation of an adequate sum to authorize the employment of a frigate, with an officer of the corps of engineers, to explore the mouth of the Columbia river, and the coast contiguous thereto, to enable the executive to make such establishment at the most suitable point, is recommended to congress."

At the commencement of the ensuing congress, the same subject was referred to in the annual message of the then president of the United States, (Mr. Adams), as follows:

"Our coast, along many degrees of latitude upon the shore of the Pacific ocean, though much frequented by our spirited commercial navigators, have been barely visited by our public ships. The river of the west, first fully discovered and navigated by a countryman of our own, still bears the name of the ship in which he ascended its waters, and claims the protection of our armed national flag at its mouth. With the establishment of a military post there, or at some other point of that coast, recommended by my predecessor, and already matured in the deliberations of the last congress, I would suggest the expediency of connecting the equipment of a public ship for the exploration of the whole northwest coast of this continent."

The committee are of opinion that all the inducements to this measure, which existed at that time, continue now in full force, and have acquired new cogency and intensity with the lapse of years; and that other and equally strong ones have since grown up all pointing to the same object; and they propose to exhibit these in full to the house, in obedience to their instructions, which enjoin them not only to inquire into the general question of the expediency of establishing a post on the river Columbia, but also into the particular elements of which the general question is composed. In the discharge of which duty, they proceed to consider in the present report,

"The extent of the country claimed by the United States west of the Rocky mountains, and on the northwest coast on the Pacific ocean; the title under which it is claimed, and the evidence of the correctness of that title."

By the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington the 22d of February, 1819, commonly called the Florida treaty, it is agreed that the boundary line between the possessions of the two nations west of the Mississippi, after reaching the river Arkansas, shall be "following the course of the southern bank of the Arkansas, to its source, in latitude 42 north; and thence, by that parallel of latitude, to the South sea." And this line is confirmed by compact between the United States and the Mexican republic as the successor of Spain, in the treaty of limits concluded at Mexico on the 12th of January, 1823. In virtue of which two treaties, the southerly extent of the country in question, from the Rocky mountains west to the Pacific, is the forty-second parallel of north latitude.

By the treaty between Russia and the United States concluded at St. Petersburg the 17th of April, 1824, it is agreed that the title shall not be formed by the citizens of the United States, or under the authority of the same, any establishment upon the northwest coast of America, nor in any of the islands adjacent, to the north of 54 degrees and 40 minutes of north latitude; and, in like manner, none by Russia or her subjects, south of the same parallel of latitude.

Saving the rights, whatever they may be, of the Indian tribes scattered over the country, there is no foreign government, except Great Britain, which asserts or pretends any title in the tract of country west of the Rocky mountains on the Pacific, adverse to that of the United States.

There is a convention between Russia and Great Britain, concluded at St. Petersburg the 28th of February, 1825, by which Russia engages to Great Britain, as she had already done to the United States, to make no settlement on the northwest coast south of the latitude of 50 degrees 40 minutes north. This treaty could not, of course, prejudice the rights of the United States, any more than the preceding one the rights of Great Britain.

The United States and Great Britain have, by a convention concluded at London on the 20th of October, 1818, mutually agreed that the 49th parallel of north latitude shall be the line of demarcation between their respective territories west of the Lake of the Woods, and thence to the Rocky mountains. Efforts have been made to adjust their conflicting pretensions west of the Rocky mountains; but thus far without desirable results. Great Britain without undertaking to set up any claim to exclusive rights in that direction, or pretending to possess any exclusive jurisdiction or sovereignty therein, denies the claim of the United States to any such sovereign jurisdiction. Or, in fairness to her own pretensions, to state them in the words of her own ministers, they are:

"Great Britain claims no exclusive sovereignty over any portion of that territory. Her present claim, not in respect to any part, but to the whole, is limited to right of joint occupancy, in common with other states, leaving the right of exclusive dominion in abeyance. In other words, the pretensions of the United States tend to the ejection of all other nations, and, among the rest, of Great Britain, from all right of settlement in the district claimed by the United States."—(Protocol, Dec. 16, 1826).

Meanwhile, the actual relations of the two governments, in regard to this territory, are defined by the third article of the before mentioned convention of the 20th of October, 1818, as follows:

"Art. 3. It is agreed that any country that may be claimed by either party on the northwest coast of America, westward of the Stony mountains, shall, together with its harbors, bays and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be free and open, for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of the present convention, to the vessels, citizens and subjects of the two powers; it being well understood that this agreement is not to be construed to the prejudice of any claim which either of the two high contracting parties may have to any part of the said country, nor shall it be taken to affect the claims of any other power or state to any part of the said country; the only object of the said contracting parties in that respect being to prevent disputes and differences amongst themselves."

And the same rights are further defined, by a convention concluded at London the 6th of September, 1827, as follows:

"Art. 1. All the provisions of the third article of the convention concluded between the U. States of America and his majesty the king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, on the 20th October, 1818, shall be, and they are hereby, further indefinitely extended and continued in force, in the same manner as if all the provisions of the said article were herein specifically recited."

"Art. 2. It shall be competent, however, to either of the contracting parties, in case either should think fit, at any time after the 20th of October, 1828, on giving due notice of two months to the other contracting party, to cancel and abrogate the present convention; and it shall, in such case, be accordingly entirely annulled and abrogated, after the expiration of the said term of notice."

"Art. 3. Nothing contained in this convention, or in the third article of the convention of the 20th of October, 1818, hereby continued in force, shall be construed to impair, or in any manner affect, the claims which either of the contracting parties may have to any part of the country westward of the Stony or Rocky mountains."

At the date of the message referred to the committee, April 30, 1838, no recent communication on this subject had passed between the two governments, nor is it known to the committee that any has passed since; and it is to be taken for granted, therefore, that neither government has given the notice provided by the convention of 1827, and that their relations in this matter remain unchanged; by means of which, of course, the respective rights of the parties are to be collected from circumstances and considerations existing anterior to the 6th of September, 1827, the date of the last convention on the subject. To which, however, it is to be added the fact that, in 1826, the United States, "animated by a spirit of concession and compromise," which met with no correspondence on the part of Great Britain, offered to continue the line of 49 degrees from the eastern side of the Stony mountains, where it now terminates, to the Pacific ocean, as the permanent boundary between the territories of the two powers in that quarter.

The United States, then, claim title to the exclusive dominion, as against any foreign power, of the country extending east and west from the Rocky mountains to the Pacific ocean, and north and south from the limits of the Mexican republic in latitude 42 north of those of Russia in latitude 54 degrees 40 minutes north, with an offer to relinquish to Great Britain all north of latitude 49. They claim this on three grounds: 1. In their own right; 2. as the successor of France; and 3. of Spain.

As preliminary to the discussion of the contested points of the case, and needful to the full understanding of its merits, the committee premise a brief account of the voyages of discovery, enterprises and settlements of the powers in question, on the northwest coast and interior of the continent, so far as they bear upon the present controvery; referring to the documents appended to this report for a full and detailed account of the history of the northwestern discovery.

Spain, having established her power in Mexico, was impelled, by the same causes which led to the original conquest, to seek its extension. She was impelled to undertake expeditions by sea and land to the northwest by another inducement, namely, the hope of discovering a direct northerly passage by sea from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean; which anticipated passage used to be projected in the old maps of the seventeenth century by the name of the Straits of Anian.

Hernan Cortes himself set the example of these enterprises, by undertaking several of them at his own charge, and conducting one of them in person, exploring the gulf of California, and thus leading the way to the settlement of that country, and to the subsequent voyages of the Spaniards and others along the northwestern coast of America. Prior to the visit of any other European power, the Spaniards had prosecuted their discoveries to cape Mendocin and cape Blanco, in voyages of unquestionable authenticity. Complete and authentic evidence, also, exists, that Don Esteban Martinez, in 1774, made the first discovery of the sound of Nootka; that in 1775 Don Bruno Heceta, Don Juan de Ayala, and Don Juan de la Bodega y Quadra, were the first to discover the bay of the river Columbia, which they called Entrala de Heceta.

Though there is not the same authentic evidence of some other voyages of ancient date in that quarter ascribed to Spanish navigators, yet it is at present generally admitted that in 1599 Juan de Fuca discovered and named the strait which now universally bears his name.

The river Columbia itself was first entered and explored by captain Robert Gray, of Boston, in the year 1792, in the ship Columbia, whose name, applied to the river, also perpetuates the memory of the original discovery.

The first European establishment, founded on any part of the northwest coast from California to the 49th degree of north latitude, was made by Fidalgo in 1799 on the main land at the entrance of the strait of Juan de Fuca.

Leaving the Pacific, we find that three only of the great European powers acquired a permanent foothold in North America from the side of the Atlantic.

Spain secured to herself the countries of Mexico, extending from the gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, and so indefinitely to the northwest; and also the country of Florida, limited to the northeastern shore of the gulf.

France obtained the valley of the St. Lawrence on the one hand, and that of the Mississippi on the other, the whole connected together by the great lakes, and constituting a noble and unique territory, stretching from the northeast to the southwest, in the rear of the English settlements on the Atlantic, restricted by them on the east, but extending westward indefinitely towards the Pacific and the possessions of Spain.

England got possession of the region of country on the Atlantic; extending from the neighborhood of the St. Lawrence on the northeast to Florida on the south, and westward indefinitely, in conflict with the claims of France in that direction. England also established herself in the waters of Hudson's bay, with a claim extending into the interior indefinitely, in conflict with the claims of France along the St. Lawrence and the great lakes.

Whatever rights, be the same more or less, were held by Spain in the northwest, have, as already stated, been expressly ceded to the United States by Spain and by the Mexican republic.

Whatever rights Great Britain had in virtue of her possessions between the St. Lawrence and Florida, she recognised as vested in the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris the 3d September, 1783, commonly called the treaty of peace; acknowledged the said states to be free, sovereign and independent; and relinquishing all claims to the government, propriety and territorial rights of the said parts of the treaty.

Whatever rights France had, subsequently to the conquest by Great Britain, and now the United States, (for we performed a large part of that work), of that part of her possessions lying on the St. Lawrence, she ceded to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris the 30th of April 1803, commonly called the Louisiana treaty.

At the date of the Florida treaty, therefore, in 1819, there remained to Great Britain of her ancient territory in North America, only the countries of the St. Lawrence and of Hudson's bay; all the residue of the continent, eastward of the Rocky mountains and south and west to the confines of the Mexican republic, having become undeniably vested in the United States.

This result was reached by various treaties and conventions between Spain, France, Great Britain and the United States, the combinations of which treaties restricted or extended in one way or another by express compacts, the respective territories of Great Britain and the United States; which compacts therefore, and the acts consequent on them, constitute the next stage in the history of the title of the United States to the territory of Oregon.

By treaty between Great Britain and France, concluded at Utrecht the 17th of April, 1713, article iii, "Hudson's Bay, together with all lands, &c. which belong thereunto," was restored to Great Britain; and the article proceeds:

"It is agreed on both sides to determine within a year, by commissioners to be forthwith named by each party, the limits which are to be fixed between the said bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French." The same commissioners shall also have orders to describe and settle in like manner the boundaries between the other British and French colonies in those parts.

[Jenkinson's Treaties, vol. iii.]

And the commissioners appointed under this article adopted the 49th parallel of latitude as the line of demarcation between the possessions of England and France in that quarter and west of the Mississippi; in pursuance of which, the same limit was ratified and confirmed between Great Britain and the United States as the successor of France, by the second article of the convention of the 20th October, 1818, so far west as to the Rocky mountains.

By the treaty between Great Britain, France and Spain, concluded at Paris the 10th of February, 1763, the former hands of Spain in 1500, and that of the latter, as previously possessed by France, with all its rights and appurtenances.

This description is, to be sure sufficiently loose. But Napoleon, having made the cession at the moment of going to war with Great Britain, and having made it to prevent the country from falling into the hands of the latter, and having ceded it to the United States out of friendly feelings towards us, and in order to augment our power as against that of Britain; being actuated by these motives, he, of course, chose to execute a quit-claim rather than a warranty of boundaries; and the United States placed in the position of acquiring, at a cheap price a territory of a value altogether inestimable to her, (for Louisiana would have been well purchased at a cost of twenty times sixty millions of francs), had no disposition to be hypercritical on this point, and thus hazard the loss of such a favorable contingency. (Barbe Morbois, Hist. &c. de la Louisiane.) And though much controversy sprang up in regard to the southwestern or southeastern limits of Louisiana, yet all this resolved itself at length into a question with Spain, as did also the doubts as the western limits of Louisiana.

[Culmer's, vol. ii.; Martens, Recueil, vol. i.]

Mr. Jefferson at any rate, took enlarged views of the rights of the United States in this respect, and in his message to congress of the 13th of January, 1803, recommended the exploration of the northwestern parts of the country, not on the Missouri merely, but "even to the western ocean," putting the expediency as well as constitutionality of the exploration expressly on the ground of its being a territory claimed by the United States; and the fruit of this recommendation was the celebrated expedition of Lewis and Clark.

Prior to that time little was known of the vast region watered by the Missouri and the Columbia, and of the intervening Rocky mountains, now so familiar to the hardy hunters of the west. Of the latter river, the earliest mention known to the committee is by Jonathan Carver, a citizen of the then colony of Connecticut, who travelled among the Indians of the Upper Mississippi, in 1768, and who in his book speaks of the "Oregon, or river of the west," that falls into the Pacific ocean at the straits of Juan de Fuca. It is probable that Carver derived his idea of the existence of this river from the wandering Indians among whom he lived, and who had either crossed the Rocky mountains themselves, or received visits from the Indians on the other side. This, at all events, seems to be the origin of the name Oregon. For there is no account of the inlet of the river Columbia having been seen by European Christians prior to Heceta's voyage in 1775; or the mouth of the river before the time of Robert Gray, in 1792; or its upper waters until the expedition of Lewis and Clark. Thirty years after the travels of Carver, indeed, Alexander Mackenzie crossed the Rocky mountains in the extreme north, and fell upon a river which he supposed to be the Columbia; but it is now well known and admitted on all hands that he was mistaken, and that the river he saw is no part of the Columbia. So that, whilst Americans were the first to navigate the river Columbia upwards from its mouth, so they were also the first to explore it downwards from its sources. Lewis and Clark not only explored the country as ours, but they took possession in behalf of the United States; and the expedition itself, the published account of which went forth to the world, was destined to all nations of our claim of title, and of the possession, by the erection of works and otherwise, in assertion of the title.

This expedition was speedily followed by the actual occupation of the mouth of the river for the purposes of trade and settlement, with the sanction of the United States. In 1811 John Jacob Astor, of New York, who, by his successful competition with British fur companies in the northwest, had already been of essential service to the United States in neutralizing to some degree the hostile influence exercised by foreign traders over the Indians of the United States, foresaw the ultimate political importance of the Columbia, and conceived the noble idea of carrying his operations beyond the Rocky mountains, and establishing a factory as the nucleus of a future settlement and colonization of the Oregon. The classic narrative of this magnificent undertaking, by Washington Irving, has spread the fame of Mr. Astor's great design wherever the English language is read.

The establishment at Astoria was anterior to that of any other power on the Columbia. It was broken up in 1812, fraudulently sold to the Northwest company by one of Mr. Astor's agents, and taken possession of by the British as an act of war. But the U. States claimed that the sole to the Northwest company of course did not affect the national jurisdiction, which continued of right in the United States; and thus, according to the first article of the treaty of Ghent, which stipulated for the mutual restitution of "all territory, places and possession whatsoever, taken by either party from the other during the war," Astoria (or Fort George) should be restored to the United States; and it was done in 1818, in the most formal manner. Mr. Prevost proceeded thither from Lima, and received the surrender as agent of the United States, in the following terms:

"Act of surrender and acknowledgment.

"In obedience to the commands of his royal highness the prince regent, signified in a despatch from the right honorable earl Bathurst, addressed to the partners or agents of the Northwest company, on the 24th date of 17th January, 1818, and in obedience to subsequent orders dated 26th July last from William H. Sheriff, esq. captain of his majesty's ship Andromache, we the undersigned, do, in conformity to the first article of the treaty of Ghent, restore to the government of the United States, through its agent, J. B. Prevost, esq. the settlement of Fort George, on the river Columbia.

"Given under our bands, in triplicate, at Fort George, Columbia river, this 6th October, 1818.

"F. HICKEY,

"Captain of his majesty's ship Blossom.

"JAMES KEITH,

"Of the Northwest company."

It is true that, in the despatch of earl Bathurst, and in Lord Castlereagh's instructions to the British minister at Washington, a reservation is made, that the surrender of possession should not be deemed an admission of the absolute and exclusive right of dominion claimed by the United States; but at the same time, in explanation to Mr. Rush, as stated in a published despatch, "Lord Castlereagh admitted, in the most ample extent, our right to be reinstated, and to be the party in possession while treating of the title." In this condition were the rights of the parties in 1813, at the time of the signature of the convention of the 20th October; and by virtue of the express stipulations of that convention, in the same condition (so far as regards possession) do the rights of the parties still continue. If our title was good then, it is good now; and whatever defects, if any, there were, if there have been healed by the Florida treaty; and by the direct admissions of the British government, we are entitled now to be in possession of the territory, and so to remain, until the question of ultimate title can be determined.

It would seem, indeed, that the English themselves are beginning to entertain rational views on the subject; for in remarking upon it recently, a respectable London journal (the Post) says:

"The United States government now says that no agent of the American Fur company had no right to dispose of the jurisdiction; and the president it would appear, is determined to enforce that claim. It must be admitted that the United States have apparently a good case; and if, on investigation, it be found that the sale of the property only took place, and that the allegiance could not be transferred, the surrender of the post to the United States may be the most prudent course. We have but a limited interest in the occupation of Astoria, while to the United States it is of great importance."

Having thus detailed the general facts affecting the title, it now becomes the duty of the committee to resume these facts, and to apply to them the recognised principles of the law of nations, which prescribe the rights of the parties.

The civilized people of Europe and America, which are associated together by their identity of origin and religion, and still more by the innumerable ties of a common civilization, of commercial and social intercourse, and the intercommunication of arts and of knowledge, and which recognise a rule of mutual dealing composed of treaty stipulations, of prescriptive usages, and of certain general principles of right called the law of nations—these people have been accustomed to acquire and to define their possessions in America by the rule of 1. The right of discovery and exploration, followed by settlements; and 2. the collatory right of extension by contiguity to actual settlements.

This rule, in its elementary ingredients, is thus laid down by Vattel:

"All mankind have an equal right to things that have not yet fallen into the possession of any one; and those things belong to the person who first takes possession of them. When, therefore, a nation finds a country uninhabited, and without an owner, it may lawfully take possession of it; after it has sufficiently made known its will in this respect, it cannot be deprived of it by another nation. Thus, navigators going on voyages of discovery, furnished with a commission from their sovereign, and meeting with islands or other lands in a desert state, have taken possession of them in the name of their nation; and this title has been usually respected, provided it was soon after followed by a real possession."—(§ 207, Chitty's Vattel).

"The whole earth is destined to feed its inhabitants; but this it would be incapable of doing if it were unoccupied. Every nation is then obliged by the law of nature to cultivate the land that has fallen to its share; and it has no right to enlarge its boundaries, or have recourse to the assistance of other nations, but in proportion as the land in its possession is incapable of furnishing it with necessaries. Those nations (such as the ancient Germans, and some modern Tartars) who inhabit fertile countries, but disdain to cultivate their lands, and choose to live by plunder, are wanting to themselves, are injurious to all their neighbors, and deserve to be extirpated as savage and pernicious beasts. There are others, who, to avoid labor, choose to live only by hunting and their flocks. This might, doubtless, be allowed in the first ages of the world, when the earth, without cultivation, produced more than was sufficient to feed its small number of inhabitants. But at present, when the human race is so greatly multiplied, it could not subsist if all nations were disposed to live in that manner. Those who still pursue this idle mode of life, usurp more extensive territories than, with a reasonable share of labor, they would have occasion for, and have, therefore, no reason to complain if other nations, more industrious and too closely confined, come to take possession of a part of those lands."—(§ 81.)

It is asked whether a nation may lawfully take possession of some part of a vast country, in which there are none but erratic nations, whose scanty population is incapable of occupying the whole.—We have already observed, (§ 81), in establishing the obligation to cultivate the earth, that those nations cannot exclusively appropriate to themselves more land than they have occasion for, or more than they are able to settle and cultivate. Their unsettled habitation in those immense regions cannot be accounted a true and legal possession; and the people of Europe, too closely pent up at home, finding land of which the savages stand in no particular need, and of which they stand in no particular want, may lawfully be entitled to take possession of it and settle it with colonies."—(§ 209.)

This rule of prior discovery, occupation, and of extension by contiguity to the exclusion of others, has been recognised, with more or less of precision in its application, by all the Europeans who have established themselves in America, and provides the dispensation, negotiations, and treaties which, expressly regulate, or which have not, the limits of their respective territories. So far as regards themselves, and their mutual relations, its chief defect is its vagueness and the consequent conflict of pretensions, which it either creates, or at least does not prevent.

In its application to the primitive inhabitants of the new world, it is more questionable in use, and more injurious in its effects. When it began to be applied by Spain, Portugal, England and other European states engaged in colonial enterprises, it was frequently associated with the idea of religion, as exemplified in the bull of Alexander VI defining the rights of Spain and Portugal, and the commission of Henry VII to the Cabots; the concession being to the possession of countries not already occupied by Christians. However defective, therefore, the rule may be in itself, and however destitute of all reason or justice when made the pretext of conquering and reducing to servitude organised communities like those of ancient Peru and Mexico, it is, nevertheless, the real foundation of the great European colonies in America. And these rights of the Indians stand in the way of England as well as the United States; and cannot be alleged by her against us and in her own favor. And when a European people has become established in America, and has grown up to national power, the application of the rule is then a matter of absolute necessity; for the Indian tribes being, for the most part, migratory in their habits, as well as transitory and evanescent in their very existence, and possessed in their barbarous state, few or none of the social institutions essential to the preservation of their separate nationality, to treat them as independent nations, with all the international rights of such, would be absolutely destructive to the civilized states of European stock in or adjoining which they happen to be found, by admitting within the natural limits of such state the intrusion of some other foreign and perhaps hostile power.

Accordingly, chief justice Marshall says: "All the nations of Europe who have acquired territory on this continent, have asserted in themselves, and have recognised in others the exclusive right of the discoverer to appropriate the lands occupied by the Indians."

And judge Story says:

"It may be asked what was the effect of this principle of discovery, in respect to the rights of natives themselves? In the view of the Europeans, it created a peculiar relation between themselves and the aboriginal inhabitants. The latter were admitted to possess a present right of occupancy, or use in the soil, which was subordinate to the ultimate dominion of the discoverer. * * * But, notwithstanding this occupancy, the European discoveries claimed and exercised the right to grant the soil, while yet in the possession of the natives, subject, however, to their right of occupancy; and the title so granted was universally admitted to convey a sufficient title in the soil to the grantees in perfect dominion."

And Chancellor Kent says:

"This assumed but qualified dominion over the Indian tribes, regarding them as enjoying no higher title to the soil than that founded on simple occupancy, and to be incompetent to transfer their title to any other power than the government which claims the jurisdiction of their territory by right of discovery, arose, in a great degree, from the necessity of the case. * * * It was founded on the pretension of converting the discovery of the country into a conquest; and it is now too late to draw into discussion the validity of that pretension, or the restrictions which it imposes. It is established by numerous compacts, treaties, laws and ordinances, and founded on immemorial usage.—The country has been colonised and settled, and is now held by that title. It is the law of the land, and no court of justice can permit the right to be disturbed by speculative reasonings or abstract rights."

"And the peculiar necessity of adhering to the rule, in all dealings between the United States and any of the European powers, is forcibly illustrated by the pretensions brought forward by Great Britain at Ghent, and the answer of the American ministers, as in the following extracts from one of their letters:

"No maxim of public law has hitherto been more universally established among the powers of Europe, than that the territories of America, and there is none to which Great Britain has not uniformly and indelibly adhered, (than that of suffering no interposition of a foreign power in the relations between the acknowledged sovereign of the territory and the Indians situated upon it. Without the admission of this principle, there would be no intelligible meaning attached to stipulations, establishing boundaries between the dominions in America of civilized nations possessing territories inhabited by Indian tribes.

"* * * The Indians residing within the limits of the United States * * * are so far dependent as not to have the right to dispose of their lands to any private persons, nor to any power other than the United States, and to be under their protection alone, and not under that of any other power.—Whether called subjects, or by whatever name designated, such is the relation between them and the United States. * * * These principles have been uniformly recognised by the Indians themselves * * * in all the * * * treaties between them and the United States.

"The United States cannot consent that Indians residing within their boundaries as acknowledged by Great Britain shall be included in the treaty of peace, in any manner which would recognise them as independent of the power to whom Great Britain, having obtained this recognition, would hereafter have the right to consider, in every respect, as such. Thus, to recognise those Indians as independent and sovereign nations, would take from the United States and transfer to those Indians all the rights of soil and sovereignty over the territory which they inhabit; and this being accomplished through the agency of Great Britain, would place them effectually and exclusively under her protection, instead of being, as heretofore, under that of the United States.

"The United States claim, of right, with respect to all European nations, and particularly with respect to Great Britain, the entire sovereignty over the whole territory, and all the persons embraced within the boundaries of their dominion. Great Britain has no right to take cognizance of the relation subsisting between the several communities or persons living therein; they form, as to her, only parts of the dominion of the United States; and it is altogether immaterial whether, or how far, under their political institutions or policy, these communities or persons are independent states, allies or subjects. With respect to her, and all other foreign nations, they are parts of a whole, of which the United States are sole and absolute sovereigns."

Recurring then to the rule of discovery and occupation in its actual practice, and, for the sake of greater pertinency as well as brevity, taking examples in the practice of England herself alone, we find that the English government, having made discoveries on the Atlantic coast, proceeded to occupy at detached points on the coast, in right of that discovery, and, by the mode of discovery and occupation, and extension by contiguity, to claim and to grant from sea to sea across the whole continent, as exemplified in the charters of Massachusetts bay, Connecticut and Virginia; and this not only in those early ages, but at the present time; for, in the right of discovery and occupation in Hudson's bay, she has claimed of us since the treaty of Ghent, and we have conceded to her, an extension by contiguity through the fair interior of the continent to the foot of the Rocky mountains.

And it follows irresistibly from the premises, that the United States, having in themselves, and as the successors of Spain, all the rights appertaining to the first navigation along the northwest coast, the first discovery of the bay of Juan de Fuca, and of the rivers of Aguilar and Columbia, the first exploration of the same, and the first occupation or settlement of either; and having, in like manner, all the rights of extension access to or along the Pacific by contiguity, by the mode of discovery and occupation, and of discovery by Spain as the possessor of New Spain, to England prior to the treaty of Paris, and to France as the possessor of Louisiana; it follows irresistibly that we have the right of dominion to the territory of Oregon wholly exclusive of Great Britain.

Precisely the same conclusion may be reached in a different way, by considering separately the Spanish, the French and the American title; which, moreover, will be the most convenient means of examining the pretensions of Great Britain.

The Spanish title.
Spain (or her successor the Mexican republic) has rights, acknowledged by all the world, as far north on the Pacific as the 42d parallel. And in the same right that she goes thus far, she might, but for the intervention of treaties, go further. Certain it is, that she first explored the northwest coast by ships from Manila or Mexico. She is the admitted discoverer of the river of Aguilar, and of the inlet of the Columbia. She discovered the strait of Juan de Fuca. She discovered Nootka sound.

First of all Europeans, she founded a settlement on that coast, at the entrance of the strait of Juan de Fuca. And the natural extension of her possessions northward from California would carry her along until she met some other power having equal or better rights; and, with exception of the United States, she would encounter none such until she arrived at Prince of Wales island in latitude 54 and at the settlements of Russia. So well founded were these, the rights of Spain, that while, prior to the conclusion of the Florida treaty, Great Britain was accustomed, as against the United States, to assert rights of sovereignty in the northwest founded on pretended discoveries and purchases from the Indians, afterwards she was constrained to change her ground, as explained by Mr. Gallatin, (letter of August 7, 1827), and to content herself with simply denying our right of exclusive sovereignty, without pretending to any on her own part. In fact, the claim of England by discovery and occupation was of the flimsiest kind, resting only upon Drake's voyage, his landing in the bay of Boleaga (latitude 38) in 1578, and some pretended purchases by him of the Indians of that neighborhood. That is to say, the discovery of a country long before discovered by the Spaniards, and taken possession of by them, and to this day comprehended within the acknowledged limits of California. As to his purchases of the Indians, that again can avail nothing; for, by the municipal law of every European government in America, and of Britain above all, as already seen, no foreign state can acquire jurisdiction, or even title, by purchase from Indians within the territorial limits of another. If it were otherwise, the rule would be fatal to the claims of Great Britain on the whole northwest coast; for the purchase of the ship Columbia made extensive purchases of the Indians, the national benefit of which would ensure to the United States. Her new pretensions, or new grounds of cavil, since resorted to by her, depend on the Nootka convention, so called.

The Nootka convention is a treaty between Spain and Great Britain, signed at the Esorial the 28th October, 1790, in conclusion of the dispute occasioned by the seizure of English vessels at Nootka sound by Don Esteban Martinez, as detailed in the appendix to this report.

When the intelligence of that event reached Europe, it came through Spain, who herself gave the first information to the English government, and accompanied it with the fullest declaration of a pacific purpose, and of her readiness to enter into all proper explanations. But Mr. Pitt haughtily replied to the friendly advances, and appealed at once to the belligerent propensities of parliament, in behalf of the wounded honor of the nation, demanded and obtained an extraordinary supply of a million sterling, and prepared for war; and thus hurried Spain, who had neither disposition nor readiness for war at that time, into the conclusion of this treaty.

Art. 1 stipulates for the restitution of the property of British subjects disseised by Martinez.

Art. 2 engages to make restitution of or compensation for any like seizure which might have been subsequently made.

Art. 3 provides that the respective subjects of Spain and Great Britain shall not be disturbed or molested, either in navigating or carrying on their fisheries in the Pacific ocean or in the South seas, or in landing on the coasts of those seas, in places not already occupied for the purpose of carrying on their commerce with the natives of the country, or of making settlements there—the whole subject, nevertheless, to the restrictions and provisions specified in the three following articles.

Art. 4 guards against contraband trade with the Spanish settlements in America.

Art. 5 agrees that in any settlements to be made by either party, "the subjects of the other shall have free access, and shall carry on their trade without molestation."

Art. 6 provides for the free continuance of the fisheries on the east and west coasts and islands of South America, south of the occupation of Spain; and concludes, "Provided, that the said respective subjects shall retain the liberty of landing on the coasts and islands so situated, for the purposes of their fishery, and of erecting thereon huts and other temporary buildings serving only for those purposes."

Great Britain contends that, with the rights of Spain on the northwest coast, the United States necessarily succeed to the limitations by which those rights were defined, and the obligations under which they were exercised; and that, by the above convention, all parts of the northwestern coast of America, not already occupied at that time by either of the contracting parties, should thenceforward be equally open to the subjects of both, for all purposes of commerce and settlement, the sovereignty remaining in abeyance; and that the convention, establishing a new state of things, by compact, abrogates the pre-existing rights (if any) appertaining to Spain.

The United States have constantly denied all this. They say that, even if the British construction of the Nootka convention and of its effects were correct, it would avail nothing, because, though the United States might not in other respects have a good title as against Spain, they have as against Great Britain, which title cannot be weakened in the hands of the United States by the Florida treaty which quiets that of Spain.

But they deny the correctness of the British construction. The Nootka convention is on the face of it a commercial treaty merely, wholly aside from the question of sovereignty and distinct jurisdiction. It has a definite general object, the regulation of the fisheries in the Pacific and the South seas, so as neither to exclude England, nor injure Spain. That was the point in controversy between the two governments. "The enemies of peace have industriously circulated," says the count of Florida Blanca, "that Spain extends pretensions and rights of sovereignty over the whole of the South sea as far as China;" whereas, on the contrary, her sole aim was to vindicate her sovereignty on parts of the coast to which, by the law of nations and the recognition of all Europe, she has established possession or right of possession. (Dec. of June 4th, An. Reg. 1790). Accordingly, in the debates upon this treaty in parliament, it was strenuously objected that, being a treaty of commerce, navigation and fishery, England had gained nothing by it, but had on the contrary submitted to restrictions of searights, which existed before unrestricted. "In answer to this, Mr. Pitt maintained (Parl. Hist. vol. xxviii, p. 101) that though what this country had gained consisted not of new rights, it certainly did of new advantages. We had before a right to the southern whale fishery, and a right to navigate and carry on fisheries in the Pacific ocean, and to trade on the coasts of any part of it northwest of America; but that right not only had not been acknowledged, but disputed and resisted; whereas, by the convention, it was secured to us; a circumstance, which, though no new right, was a new advantage." Not a word of a "new right" to establish colonies in America, or of a "new advantage" in the exclusion of territorial sovereignty previously claimed by Spain. On the contrary, Mr. (now earl) Gray well argued that the "settlements" of the 3d article amounted to nothing, since access was every where left to both the parties, and if England made a settlement in a valley, Spain might erect a fort on the hill overlooking it, which conclusively shows that the right of colonization was never in the contemplation of the treaty. And Mr. Fox argued the same point at great length and with great force, demonstrating that before the treaty England might colonize in the Pacific, but that now she could only settle, as the phrase is in the third article, or build huts as restricted in the sixth, for the sole purpose of the fisheries, excluding colonization. (Parl. Hist. vol. xxviii). Add to which, it only as a commercial treaty that this convention can, upon the principles contended for by Great Britain in other great controversies, be considered in force; for such treaties only were renewed by the treaty between Spain and Great Britain of July, 1814.

In fact, the Nootka convention is obviously impossible to execute, if the word "settlements" is to denote the colonies, or carry after it any title of dominion; because the express language permits promiscuous and intermixed settlements every where, and over the whole face of the country, to the subjects of both parties; and even declares every such settlement, made by either party, common to the other. Or, if, as England contends, the convention is but a recognition of the general rights of all nations, then it admits of such promiscuous settlements by all nations; which is wholly incompatible with any idea of sovereignty, but applies well enough to "huts and other temporary buildings" for the fisheries.

In this view of the subject, the United States further say, that under the convention the sovereignty is not in abeyance; it remains unchanged; it remains a valid, permanent commercial right open to all for the time being regulate; that the question of sovereignty stands upon its former footing; that, when it comes up, the parties are remitted to their pre-existing rights; and that before the convention, and notwithstanding its provisions, the right of sovereignty appertained to Spain as against Great Britain; or, in the words of the count of Fernan Nunez, "by the treaties, demarcations, takings of possession, and the most decided acts of sovereignty exercised by the Spaniards, * * * all the coast to the north of western America, on the side of the South sea, as far as beyond what is called Prince Williams' sound, * * * is acknowledged to belong exclusively to Spain." (Letter of June 16, 1790). And the United States will not be deterred from the exercise of the just rights she demands from Spain, when there is nothing set up against her but her own and monstrous constructions of a treaty extorted from Spain by what Lord Rochester justly called "unprovoked bullying," and founded not in right but in power. (North A. Rev. vol. xxvii.)

The committee proceed to the French title. When Louisiana was acquired by the United States, it was well known, as already suggested, that the limits were not well defined. Indeed, they were defined on neither side, except along the Mississippi. The northern line by the British possessions was fixed in 1818. The southeastern and southwestern was fixed by the Florida treaty. And the question remains, how far does it extend west? This was at the time considered a question with Spain alone. Don Pedro Cevallos says: "From this point (the intersection of the River) the limits which ought to be established on the northern side are doubtful and little known." (Letter of April 13, 1805). And in the negotiation of the Florida treaty, Don Luis de Onis admitted the same thing, though he affirmed the Spanish title on the Pacific. But, as between France and Great Britain, or Great Britain and the United States, the successor of all the rights of France, the question would seem to be concluded by the treaty of Paris, already cited, in which Great Britain relinquishes irrevocably all pretensions west of the Mississippi. On the footing of the treaty of Utrecht, ratified by our convention of 1818, England may, possibly, by extension of contiguity, carry her possessions from Hudson's bay across to the Pacific, north of latitude 49°; but, by the treaty of Paris, we possess the same right, and an exclusive one, to carry our territory across the continent south of that line, in the right of France.

It has been objected that, in the grant of Louisiana to Crozat by Louis XIV, that province is confined to the country drained by the waters emptying in the Mississippi, excluding by implication any other country. But Crozat's grant did not cover the whole of Louisiana as it was when ceded to the United States. Crozat's grant was understood as extending no further north than latitude 42°; the French possessions north of that parallel being a part of New France, (or Canada). And New France, as projected in the most authentic maps, did extend to territory drained, or supposed to be drained, by rivers flowing into the Pacific. In 1717, Louis enlarged Louisiana, by adding thereto the country in the latitude of the Illinois. And this extended dimension of Louisiana has been tacitly admitted by Great Britain, who, while herself possessed of Canada obtained from France, and of the Hudson's bay company, has, by treaty with us, admitted that the northern limit of Louisiana goes up to latitude 49°; she having already, by the treaty of Paris, debarred herself of all claim south of that line and west of the Mississippi.

The American title remains to be considered on its particular merits.

Anterior to the Louisiana treaty, our claim rested on Gray's exploration of the river Columbia, the permanent record of which subsists in the name itself; it being one of the applications of the rule of prior discovery, that the explorer of a river gains rights to that country west of that river, as exemplified in the claim of the Mississippi valley by France, on the ground of the original exploration of the river by her subjects; and some such principle being necessary to give integrity and unity of possession to any one power, and to prevent the intermixture of possessions in a territory having a natural completeness of its own. The defects of this claim consisted of the counter-pretensions of France as the possessor of Louisiana, and of Spain as the possessor of Mexico, and as the first visiter of the Columbia and the coast generally. By the conclusion of the Louisiana treaty and the Florida treaty, these defects were cured. To which had then been added the further claims of the United States to their own right, or their title proper, by reason of Lewis and Clark's expedition, and Mr. Astor's establishment of Astoria, recognised by Great Britain as constituting possession, and also right of continued possession, until the title should be definitively adjusted. Though these several claims conflicted with each other originally, they acquired mutual strength in the same hands; as if three persons claim the same estate, one by deed or devise, another by inheritance, and a third by possession, the union of all in one person by purchase or otherwise would result in the best of titles. Thus much, treating it as a dominion founded on discovery and exploration, and partial occupation.

But, in another point of view, this combination of titles becomes yet more important. Having planted her foot on the shore of Hudson's bay, Great Britain claims against all the world that she may stretch the other to the Rocky mountains; and the claim is admitted by the rest of the world. Nay, it is from Hudson's bay that her establishments have extended across the continent. Sir Alexander Mackenzie led the way in 1793, and the northwest company and the Hudson's Bay company followed in it, until they had gradually intruded themselves into the valley of the Columbia, not from the Pacific, but proceeding from the Atlantic; and the civil jurisdiction of the British subjects dwelling beyond the Rocky mountains depends this day in the courts of Upper Canada, by the acts of parliament of 43 Geo. III, ch. 131 and 1 and 2 Geo. IV, ch. 66. Which is in conformity with the fact hereinbefore stated, that, prior to the treaty of Paris, the English government claimed and granted to the Pacific by virtue of her possessions in New England and Virginia.

And a pretension of this nature, however extravagant it may seem at the first blush, grows out of the necessities of self-preservation. Great Britain, when she gained a lodgment on the coast of the Atlantic, readily saw, and her colonies soon learned by disastrous experience, how dangerous it would be to them to have a hostile foreign power establish itself behind them. For the same reason that it was important to the British colonies to exclude, if they might, any power from taking possession in their rear, it was important to the French colonies on the Mississippi to prevent any other power from establishing itself in their own rear. Hence they claimed, and rightfully, according to the received law of nations, to have the exclusive dominion, and the right of excluding the entrance of any foreign colonization westward of them, until they should reach some other European power having a better title than theirs; and west of them there was none such except Spain.

And the precise extent of prolongation by continuity, to which an actual settlement gives right, must have some relation to the magnitude and population of that settlement, and to the facility with which adjoining vacant lands may promise to be occupied and cultivated by such a population, as compared with any to come from elsewhere; and this in addition to the considerations of national security.

Important as these principles were to the infant colonies of France and Britain, and strong as are the claims of this nature we derive from the treaties of those two powers, those principles are yet more important, and those claims stronger, in reference to the existing state of North America, and our own position as the leading power of this continent. Who shall undertake to limit the limits of the expansibility for the population of the United States? Does it not now flow westward with the never-ceasing advance of a rising tide of the sea? Along a line of more than a thousand miles from the lakes to the gulf of Mexico, perpetually moves forward the western frontier of the United States. Here, stretched along the whole length of this line, is the vanguard, as it were, of the onward march of the Anglo American race, advancing, it has been calculated, at the average rate of about half a degree of longitude each succeeding year. Occasionally, an obstacle presents itself, in some unproductive region of country; or some Indian tribe; the column is checked; its wings incline towards each other; it breaks; but it speedily reunites again beyond the obstacle, and resumes its forward progress, ever facing, and approaching nearer and nearer to the remotest regions of the west.

Thus the movement goes on with predestined certainty, and the unerring precision of the great works of eternal Providence, rather than as an act of feeble man. Another generation may see the settlements of our people diffused over the Pacific slopes of the Rocky mountains. It is idle to suppose any new colony to be sent out from Great Britain will or can establish itself in the far west, ultimately to stand in competition with this great movement of the population and power of the United States. Nor should any attempt at such competition be countenanced by us. For if the safety of the few thousands of British settlers on the Atlantic, or of French settlers on the Mississippi, required the extension of their exclusive sovereignty to a certain degree west, how far shall that extension not be demanded for the safety of the millions of the United States, who already occupy in full and undisputed sovereignty, and overspread with their teeming population, and unite in the bonds of one great and glorious political society, the whole of the vast valley of the Mississippi and the Missouri.

At a contingency the most delicate in the affairs of this continent, Mr. Monroe issued his celebrated declaration, that, while the United States continued neutral and impartial in the contests of the European powers among themselves, it was otherwise in regard to their movements in this hemisphere; that the United States would consider an attempt on their part to extend their peculiar political systems to any part of the new world as dangerous to our peace and safety; and that we could not view a voluntary interposition of theirs in the affairs of the new republics of America with indifference, or in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States.—(Message, December 2, 1823.)

This declaration, it is well known, had the most important inmediate effects at the time of its utterance, when certain of the European powers contemplated a forcible interference in the affairs of the Spanish colonies in America. It has deservedly come to be regarded as an essential component part of the international law of the new world. (Wheaton's Inter. law, p. 85.) And great as the force of it is, when applied to the precise case which called for it, still greater is it when considered in its application to the case of an attempt on the part of any European power to found new colonies in North America in parts not yet occupied. It has been the happy fortune of the United States to free itself, by the purchase of Louisiana and Florida, from the presence of European colonies on our southern and western frontiers. The possessions of Great Britain now overhanging the United States along their vast northern frontier from the Atlantic to the Pacific.—South of that line, the whole continent, from the great lakes to the Isthmus of Darien, is occupied by Americans, by children of the soil, by governments independent of Europe. And it is due alike to our highest interests and to our honor to have it universally understood, that neither Great Britain, nor any other European power, is any longer to consider the unsettled parts of the continent, adjoining the settlements of the United States, in the nature of unoccupied lands for the reception of European colonies. If Great Britain had any pretext to claim the territory of Oregon as a part of her possessions on the lakes, or her existing colonies, it would be otherwise. But she does not. She distinctly professes to claim no ground that it is unoccupied territory, just like Virginia or Massachusetts before she colonized them; and that as unoccupied savage territory she may now colonize the Columbia river; and that it is part of a colony now possessed by her, but found in which she has the right at this day to found a new colony.

"Great Britain considered the whole of the unoccupied parts of America as being open to her future settlements, as heretofore. They included within these parts as well that portion of the northwest coast lying between the 42d and 51st degrees of latitude as any other parts. The principle of colonization at that coast, or elsewhere, on any portions of those continents not yet occupied, Great Britain was not prepared to relinquish."—(Mr. Rusk's letters, p. 182.)

This pretension the committee deem to be inadmissible, and prejudicial to the rights, the security, and the peace of the United States.

There is a class of reasons applicable to this point which is every day acquiring more and more force. It is the situation of the Indians in the interior of the continent. It has at all times been the policy of Great Britain—a policy little in keeping with her ostentation of humanity in regard to the black race—to keep the red men under subsidy to her, so as to have them always ready to bring into the field against the United States. At the epoch of the revolution, we proposed that the Indians should be suffered to remain neutral; but England refused.—She has kept them under arms, or in a semi-hostile state, against us, more or less constantly, from that day to this. On our commissioners at Ghent proposed an agreement for the perpetual neutrality of the Indians; but England again refused it. The perseverance of Great Britain in this policy has been perpetually injurious to us; and its effects are written with the scalping-knife and the brand of the Indian, in letters of blood and fire, in the history of the southern and western states. And this, the untold policy of Great Britain in regard to the Indians, has done more than any and every other cause united, to waste, degrade, and barbarize them, so as to render them a curse alike to us and to themselves. By the acquisition of Florida, the influence of the British over the Indians of the United States was shut out from the south; but it still operates unchecked, and is fostered and kept alive by regular government subsidies to the northwest, and exerted without any counteraction among the Indians of the remote west, and will continue to be exerted, in all respects to our loss and injury, until the Hudson's bay company is expelled from the territory of Oregon, and it is possessed in full and undisturbed sovereignty by the United States.

In conclusion of this branch of their instructions, it only remains for the committee to advert to certain particular facts in the present political relations of the territory of Oregon, confirmatory of and connected with the general considerations they have suggested.

Great Britain had very much distinguished herself at an early period, by voyages of discovery in the seas to the northeast of this continent. Thus it happened that she acquired territorial rights on the shores of Hudson's bay, which at the congress of Utrecht were formally acknowledged by France, as before stated. The extent of this territory was not then, nor until long afterwards, definitely settled. Meanwhile, among the corrupt monopolies of the reign of Charles II was the grant of a charter to the "adventurers of the Hudson's Bay company." Their declared and proper objects were, of course, navigation, and trade in the furs, fish, or other productions of Hudson's bay. Exploration was, indeed, one of the benefits anticipated from the company; but the company itself proved for more than a century to be the great obstacle to exploration, or in the emphatic language of the London Quarterly Review, (a competent witness on such a point), "from the moment this body of 'adventurers' was instituted, the spirit of 'adventure' died away; and every succeeding effort was palsied by the baneful influence of a monopoly, of which the discovery of a northwest passage was deemed the forerunner of destruction." This company is to America precisely what the East India company is to Asia. It has been suffered to extend its power from Labrador southwestwardly to Lake Superior, thence along the ligne des versants of the Mississippi and the Missouri, and so sweeping around by the base of the Rocky mountains to the Slave lake, and thence back to the extreme northeastern shores of the Atlantic. A glance at the map will show the vast extent of these imperial dominions. (Zouchette's Br. Dom. vol. 1, p. 32.) When, by the aid of the Anglo-American provinces, Great Britain had subdued Canada, this did become incorporated with the possessions of the Hudson's Bay company. On the contrary, when the independence of the United States gave rise to new relations in the northwest, the Hudson's Bay company was placed by Britain in a footing of an independent power; and in regulating the rights of mutual transit in that quarter, Jay's treaty contains this clause: "The country within the limits of the Hudson's Bay company only excepted." That is to say, when the territorial or commercial rights of the United States are to be restricted, the Hudson's Bay company is put forward as an independent foreign state. So also is it, when there is opportunity or occasion to extend British rights in competition with ours; as in dealings with the Indians it has repeatedly happened, where the acts of the company have at all times been greatly injurious to the United States. But, on the contrary, if the United States, or any other power, seeks to repress the pretensions of the company, it is no longer left by Great Britain to stand on its own bottom as a political community, but is taken under the wing of the British government. Thus, indeed, we know, by the precise mode in which the East India company has been made the instrument of conquering the hundred millions of Hindostan.

After the Hudson's Bay company had for a length of time lorded it in sole supremacy over the Indians of the extensive region claimed by it, there sprung up a competitor of its profitable fur-trade in the Northwest company of Montreal. These two companies did not scruple to engage in continual feuds, growing out of jealousies of trade and mutual complaints of violated privileges; nay, they actually waged hostilities one against the other in the guise of sovereign states; rendering the interior of the continent a scene of rapine, outrage and bloodshed. (Earl of Selkirk, claims, &c.)

These empire companies, and their traders, trappers and agents, have been the immediate instruments of much of that perpetual intermeddling of Great Britain with the Indians of the United States, which, from 1775 to the present day, has never ceased to be practised to our injury, and the fruits of which were seen in every one of the disasters of the west and northwest, from the massacres of Wyoming and Cherry valley and the defeats of Harnar and St. Clair, to the later enterprises of Tecumseh and of Black Hawk.

This latter company, (the Northwest company, so called), it was, which fraudulently obtained possession of Astoria in 1812, and hoisted the British flag on the Columbia. (Trings Astoria.) Its differences with the Hudson's Bay company were at length adjusted; in 1821 the two companies became one, continuing to act under the charter of the Hudson's Bay company; and, by act of parliament, the company received a grant of civil jurisdiction, which it now exercises at all its establishments. That is, the Hudson's Bay company is the medium through which Great Britain exercises exclusive civil jurisdiction over all the territory of Oregon, in which it is conceded, on all hands, our rights are at least equal to hers. Nor civil jurisdiction only. It is known by the official report of Mr. Slacum, who recently visited the territory in behalf of the United States, that the company has, in addition to a number of minor factories, one at Vancouver, on the Columbia, which is in all respects a military post, though, like the Sepoys and other troops of Hindostan, the garrison consists of the servants of the company, not of officers and men bearing the queen's commission. Of other establishments of the company (which are in name as in fact, forts), there are known to be Fort Unqua on the Unqua; Fort George, Fort Nez Perces, Fort Okanquia, Fort Coville and Koolante fort, besides Fort Vancouver, on the Columbia, or its branches; and Fort Nasqually, south of the strait of Juan de Fuca.

To prove these general facts, and also to show the effect of them, a few authentic statements follow from persons of approved authority.

The president's message, of the 23d of December, 1837, contains this information:

"The Hudson's Bay company has also several depots, situated on watercourse, in the interior of the country; the principal one is at Port Vancouver, on the northern bank of the Columbia river, about eighty or one hundred miles from its mouth. It is known, by information recently obtained, that the English company have a steamboat on this river, and that they have a saw-mill, and are cutting timber on the territory claimed by the United States, and are shipping it in considerable quantities to the Sandwich Islands."

Mr. Cambreleg, in a letter to Mr. Benton of the 12th January, 1829, says:

"I have in my possession the actual returns of the furs collected by the Hudson's Bay company for the year 1823, which, according to a valuation made by one who has a thorough knowledge of the trade, amount to $394,379 75. The shares of that company have increased from £60, or 40 per cent. below par, to £240 sterling, or 140 per cent. above par. The profits of the company has continued to increase at the rate of from 60,000 to $100,000 annually. The prosperous condition of the Hudson's Bay company may be attributed, in some measure, to the advantages enjoyed by the British traders, who procure their manufactures without duty, while the American traders pay 40 per cent. to the American market, while our traders pay a duty in the British market. But the most important advantage enjoyed by the Hudson's Bay company is the admirable harbor at the mouth of the Columbia, which we virtually and unfortunately granted them by our treaty of 1818. That settlement at the mouth of the Columbia river is now the centre of an immense trade in furs, and, unless we take some step to place our traders on an equal footing with the British, we run the risk of the entire privilege of trading in safety within our own dominions at least, our Indian trade must decline, and we must make up our minds to surrender the whole Indian country to Great Britain." [See. doc. 1823-29, No. 67.]

Mr. Irving says:

"Though the [Hudson's Bay] company, by treaty, have a right to a participation only in the trade of these regions, [beyond the Rocky mountains], and are, in fact, but tenants in sufferance; yet have they quietly availed themselves of the original oversight, and subsequent supineness of the American government, to establish a monopoly of the trade of the river [Columbia] and its dependencies; and are adroitly proceeding to fortify themselves in their usurpation by securing all the strong points of the country.

"Nor is it likely the latter [the American traders] will ever be able to maintain any footing in the land, until the question of territorial right is adjusted between the two countries. The sooner that takes place, the better. It is a question too serious to national pride, if not to national interest, to be slurred over, and every year is adding to the difficulties which environ it.

"The resources of the country * * in the hands of America, enjoying a direct trade with the East Indies, would be brought into quickening activity, and might soon realize the dream of Mr. Astor, in giving rise to a flourishing commercial empire."

[Rocky Mountains, vol. 2.]

The plans of Great Britain in respect to this country are shadowed forth by sir Alexander Mackenzie, as follows:

"But, whatever course may be taken from the Atlantic, the Columbia is the line of communication from the Pacific ocean, pointed out by nature; as it is the only navigable river in the whole extent of Vancouver's minute survey of that coast. Its banks, also, form the first level country in all the southern extent of continental coast from Cook's entry, and, consequently, the most northern situation fit for colonization, and suitable for the residence of a civilized people. By opening this intercourse between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and forming regular establishments through the interior, and at both extremes, as well as along the coasts and islands, the entire command of the fur trade of North America might be obtained from latitude 48 degrees north, to the pole, except that portion of it which the Russians have in the Pacific. To this may be added the fishery in both seas, and the markets of the four quarters of the globe. Such would be the field for commercial enterprise; and incalculable would be the produce of it, when supported by the operations of that credit and capital which Great Britain so pre-eminently possesses."

[Travels, vol. 2.]

To which the same writer adds, that the effect of the development of those plans would be the complete exclusion of Americans from the country, and the most important political as well as commercial advantages to the United Kingdom.

The committee will have occasion to submit to the house additional information on these points, when they dispose of that part of their instructions which relate to the statistical condition and political value of the country of Oregon. It is sufficient for the immediate purpose to have demonstrated that the plan of the British to put an end to American enterprise in the valley of the Columbia has succeeded.

Still, this object has been accomplished under the shelter of a convention, which provides that the country of Oregon, together with its harbors, bays and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, shall for the time being be free and open to the vessels, citizens and subjects of the two powers; and which thus professes to give equal advantages to the people of each nation, and to pre-clude the ultimate rights of neither. But the practical effect of the convention is the reverse, in that nearly all the present advantages are enjoyed by England, and the ultimate rights of the United States are seriously endangered.

There is a peculiar organization of the Hudson's Bay company, which now in fact rules over the whole country, and has exclusive possession of its trade, just as completely as the East India company in Hindostan at the period of its early conquests there, when it was a close corporation, and independent of the control of the king's ministers. Individual traders and ordinary commercial companies cannot stand against it. They cannot compete in resources with this great empire corporation.— Besides which, a powerful incorporated company like this, having exclusive privileges of trade by charter, and those privileges conveying territory as appurtenant to trade—a monster and an anomaly in its nature as it is—such a company is in itself to all intent and purposes a territorial government. It has all the civil and all the military machinery of government. The act of parliament already referred to gives to the courts of Upper Canada the same civil jurisdiction, in all respects, within the parts of America not within the limits of Lower or Upper Canada, nor of any civil government of the United States, as they have within the limits of Upper Canada. England may appoint justices of the peace, or constitute other inferior courts in those parts. There is no provision in the act to except citizens of the United States, or country claimed by the United States, from this jurisdiction. And these provisions are precisely applicable to the country beyond the Rocky mountains, and to that only; and there is no other part of America to which they do apply. This, indeed, is well understood by American citizens in Oregon to be the fact, as the committee have been expressly informed. So that the Hudson's Bay company not only monopolizes the trade of Oregon, but may control the inhabitants, and even send them to Upper Canada to be tried for imputed offences.

The privileges of the Hudson's Bay company operate injuriously in another respect. Experience has shown the necessity of military posts among the Indians. The company accordingly has its great posts, and its lesser forts, all of them British military posts, in fact, but with the peculiarity, that its flag not being the queen's flag, the government is enabled to pursue the disingenuous course of claiming rights and territory in virtue of acts performed by it, while in the same breath disavowing all government responsibility for those acts. But the United States has no military post there. It has no gigantic company, like that of Hudson's bay, to be put forward to act the ambiguous and evasive part of a government, or of private individuals, as the policy of state may render most convenient. If it establishes a post, it must do so openly and aboveboard, in its own name. But this Great Britain objects to, so that still the monopoly of trade and of civil and military power shall be held by her indirectly, through the means of the Hudson's Bay company.

The committee are of opinion that this ground of distinction ought to be no longer admitted by the United States. So long as Great Britain takes to herself the fruits of the operations of these empire corporations, and the millions of subjects they conquer, and the vast realms they subdue, are governed and held for her advantage, she ought not to be permitted to set up any distinction, in her dealings with a foreign state, between their acts and hers. So far as regards the rights or the safety of that foreign state, a military post established by the East India company or the Hudson's Bay company is a military post established by Great Britain. It is not to perceive this, is to shut our eyes to the system of operations by means of which Great Britain has built up the stupendous fabric of her power in the east and the west.

The injustice done to the United States by the double use which Great Britain makes of the Hudson's Bay company, was strongly urged by Mr. Gallatin, in his conferences with the British ministers on the subject in 1826 and 1827. The British ministers were not insensible to the force of his objections. And the following passage of Mr. Gallatin's letter of December 20, 1826, is important in its bearing upon the question of what legislation congress may adopt without infringement of the treaty relations of the two powers.

"The establishment of a distinct territorial government on the west side of the Stony mountain would also be objected to as an attempt to exercise exclusive sovereignty. I observed that although the northwest company might, from its being incorporated, from the habits of the men they employed, and from having a monopoly with respect to trade, so far as British subjects were concerned, carry on a species of government, without the assistance of that of Great Britain, it was otherwise with us. Our population there would consist of several independent companies and individuals.— We had always been in the habit, in our most remote settlements, of carrying laws, courts and justice of the peace with us. There was an absolute necessity on our part to have some species of government. Without it, the kind of sovereignty, or rather jurisdiction which it was intended to admit, could not be exercised on our part. It was suggested, and seemed to be acquiesced in, that the difficulty might be obviated, provided the erection of a new territory was not confined exclusively to the territory west of the mountains; that it should be defined as embracing all the possessions of the United States west of a line that should be at some distance from, and east of, the Stony mountains."

It may deserve consideration whether this suggestion should not be acted upon by congress; since it would be doing no more than what Great Britain had already done by act of 1 & 2 Gen. IV.

The committee beg leave to submit, that in the course of this report they have not undertaken to raise any novel propositions in behalf of the United States. They have relied on the grounds of right alleged by every American statesman, who has had occasion to examine the subject, from the time of Mr. Jefferson to the present day; referring more especially to the instructions, correspondence and despatches of Mr. Monroe, Mr. Adams, Mr. Rush, Mr. Clay, Mr. Gallatin, and Mr. Lawrence, and the reports of M. Floyd, Mr. Baylies and Mr. Linn; and superadding only such further illustrations, facts and arguments, as the personal research of the committee has brought to their knowledge. They propose, in a future report, to present to the house the statistical facts and considerations called for by their instructions; and meantime, as the result of their immediate deliberations they submit the accompanying bill, the adoption of which they recommend to the house.

A bill to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States residing in the Oregon territory, or trading on the Columbia river or its tributaries.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the president of the United States be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to employ such portion of the army and navy as he may deem necessary for the protection of the persons and property of such citizens of the United States as may reside in the territory of Oregon, or as are employed in commerce on the Columbia river, its tributaries and on its marine coast.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of _____ dollars in treasuries appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the foregoing section.

[This bill was not acted upon by the house.]

Astronomical observatory. John Quincy Adams recommends that the interest of the money from the Smithsonian be most expended in founding at Washington an astronomical observatory.

Abattoir. The following sketch of a Paris abattoir is extracted from a letter from a European: "I visited yesterday an abattoir, or slaughter house, of which there are five, under the direction of the police. They are large, airy and remarkably clean. In this there were 23 piles of buildings within a walk of 645 by 570 feet. Cattle, on entering the city, are immediately taken to them, and kept at a stall, until the owner pays a duty, and is allowed for the right to kill their stock, with other duties on tallow, &c. produces one million of francs annually. In this single establishment the weekly return of killed is about 40 oxen, 300 cows, 600 calves, 2,000 sheep, considering which the cleanliness is remarkable. The same amount killed in private sheds and stables, as the butcher's cost, is much that was offensive, and perhaps, cause sickness. Here, stone floors, abundance of water, ventilation, flow of blood immediately from the neck to a subterranean conduit, with strict attention to cleanliness, leaves little to shock even a transient observer. Their dexterity in wielding the sledge, and opening the vital artery, is remarkable.

Beets. L'Impartial, a Valenciennes paper, gravely announces the following: "The manufacturers of beet sugar are triumphant than ever. The inhabitants of the Nord will indeed, make no more sugar, but they have just found out that beet root can make the most delicious wines. The beet root wines will be superior in quality to all the southern wines. The vine is not for, and beet root takes its place. There is not a mere invention. We know on good authority that the mayor of Arras is a member of the company which is about to turn to account this discovery, which is to prove a new source of industry to our district."

Hard currency.—"Musket balls full bore," were a legal tender in Massachusetts in 1655, "current for a farthing a piece; provided that no man be compelled to take above twelve at a time of them." In 1639 the town of Hingham paid its taxes in milk pails.

Emigration. The descriptions in Goldsmith's sweet poem of the Deserted Village, although at the time deemed to be fiction, have been found to be realized now. An English paper says that in Stockport, 2,000 cottages are vacant, and that 200 persons have left that town for South Australia within three months.

Mothers. "What is wanting," said Napoleon, "that the youth of France be well educated?" "Mothers!" replied Madame Campan. This reply, struck the emperor. "Here," said he, "is a system of education in one word!" Be it your care to train up mothers, who shall know how to educate their children.

Speed. A French scientific journal states that the ordinary rate is per second, of a man walking, 4 feet of a good horse, in harness, 12, of a reindeer, in a sledge, on the ice, 26; of an English racer 43; of a hare, 85; of a good sailing ship, 14; of the wind, 82; of a twenty-four pounder cannon ball, 1,300; of the air, which, so divided, returns into space, 1,300.

Thorwaldsen is about making a bust of himself for his rich patroness, the baroness Stampe, at whose country seat he is staying, and where, at his built him a new atelier. He has been visited at Hamburg and other places, and every where been received ex triumphe.—The landlords all refused pay from him, and the peasantry turned out to crown him with flowers.

Lord Brougham, it is said, designs visiting the United States the ensuing spring. No stranger could come amongst us that would be more cordially received. He has been one of the most useful men of the age. Every American delights to honor genius and integrity.

Population. The population of the world is estimated at 330,000,000. Of this 50,000,000 are Roman Catholics; 120,000,000 Christians of other sects; 9,000,000 Jews, and 140,000,000 Mahometans.

It will be seen that preparations have been made on a splendid scale for opening the famed Faunquier White Sulphur Springs establishment.

Slender. A young lady in Indiana has been obliged to pay $5,000 for slendering one of her own sex.

Geographical discovery. Mr. Schomburgk, the enterprising trader, has been at Lima, where he has been employed for the last four years as the agent of the Royal Geographical society, and at the expense of their funds, aided by a grant from government has just returned to England, after an absence of nearly 12 years. Following in the steps of Dr. Hancock, Mr. Hillhouse and others, he twice ascended the river Essequibo, which he explored in its course about 40 miles north of the equator, and examined the Berbice and Corentyne rivers. During his last journey, in which he was absent for two years in the interior, he crossed the boundary to Fort San Joaquim, in the Brazils, and by a westerly course travelled to Esmeralda, on the Orinoco; thence by connecting his labors with those of Baron Humboldt in 1819, he succeeded in changing the position of the sources of that river, as laid down in all our maps. From thence he again ascended the Rio Branco to San Joaquim completing a circle of 2,000 miles, a great part of which was through a country previously unknown. Mr. Schomburgk's communications have often formed matters of interest at the meetings of the Geographical society, and he has brought over with him to this country a valuable herbarium, and a large collection of rare specimens of natural history, the produce of a country almost unknown to Europeans. He is also accompanied by three Indians of different tribes from the interior, and has brought specimens of their arms, implements and utensils. Accounts have also been received from Mr. Gould, who has left Van Dieman's land for southern Australia, having already collected about 800 specimens of birds and 70 of quadrupeds, with many other objects of interest in natural history. [English paper.]

Fauntery. A most remarkable fact connected with the old police, we understand is likely soon to transpire in an official shape. When Mr. Plank, the officer, was on duty at Fauntery, who suffered for forgery, he was asked by the banker if he could not take his word for appearing to answer the charge. "It is impossible," was the reply. The banker then pointed to a box, and intimated that it contained £70,000, which he might call his own if he abandoned his duty. The answer and the result need not be stated. [Sunday Times.]

Oldest house. It would seem that the oldest house in the United States, so far as can be accurately ascertained, is now standing in Old Guilford, Connecticut, which was built in the year 1639; consequently it is now 200 years old. It is of hammered stone, and stands on a beautiful rise of ground, commanding a delightful view of the Long Island sound up and down, as far as the eye can reach. It is said that this house was built by Mr. Wood, the settler who led the settlers there and was the first minister at Guilford.

Steam communication. The extraordinary fact was happily commented on by governor Everett, in his speech at the opening of the Boston and Springfield rail road, that when the line of steamers shall be established between Boston and Liverpool, there will be a continuous length of artificial communication, almost wholly by steam, from the western shores of Lake Michigan to the eastern coasts of British India—a distance of one hundred and sixty degrees of longitude, including very nearly half the circuit of the globe, and the whole of its civilized portion.

Water. The vast improvement by means of pipes conveying water to every house, is but of comparatively modern date; to the ancients it was not in use, at least only in the more splendid habitations of the rich. The larger kind of iron pipes called mains, they had not discovered the means to fabricate. Water was conveyed through miles of pipes by means of those gigantic aqueducts whose ruins are the admiration of posterity. That at Rome, called Nuo Anio, according to Frontinus and Strabo, was six miles and a half in length, and formed of 1,000 arches. That called Aqua Martia was taken from the Tiber, and was thirty-eight miles in length, and brought the water in a wandering course, forty-three miles part of it having a subterranean channel. The nine earlier aqueducts distributed into Rome 14,018 quinaria, which is equal to 23,000,000 cubic feet, and when all the aqueducts were in operation the supply must have exceeded 50,000,000 cubic feet, would give above a hoghead and a half of water to each inhabitant.

Dartmouth college. We have received a catalogue of the officers and students of Dartmouth college, from which we learn that the medical students at present amount to 77—viz: 45 seniors and 32 juniors. The students in the college amount to 321—viz: 55 seniors, 80 juniors, 103 sophomores and 83 freshmen. Total, 395. The president of this institution is Nathan Lord, D. D. The expenses are as follows:

Tuition,	$37 00
Ordinary incidentals,	3 24
Library, according to the use of it.	8 50
Room-rent, average	9 00
Board, from $1 00 to $2 00 per week;	57 00
average for 33 weeks	19 00
Wood, lights and washing,	1 50
Lectures on anatomy and chemistry,	1 50

$106 24

Room-rent, wood and lights, are estimated on the supposition that two students occupy a chamber.

Other incidental expenses, such as books and stationery, furniture, expenses in societies, class-exercises, to their expenses, &c. vary according to circumstances, and the character and habits of the students.

Harvard university. From a catalogue just published for the academical year 1839-40, we copy the following summary of its students:

Theological students,	17
Law students,	55
Students attending medical lectures,	85
Resident graduates,	2—190
Under graduates.
Seniors,	41
Juniors,	50
Sophomores,	64
Freshmen,	76
University students,	2—236

Total, 486

Its number of professors is 21, besides 6 instructors and tutors, thus affording by much the largest source of instruction of any institution in the country. Its library, inclusive of society libraries, belonging to students is 50,703. Its funds, as taken from the treasurer's report of 1836, amount to $679,059 34, exclusive of all buildings and lands appropriated to the use of the university library, pictures, apparatus, furniture, &c. $223,392 71 of which is left for the unreserved use of the college.

A gentleman recently travelling in the country, called to a boy, "where does this road go to my lad?" "Well, I don't know where it goes, but it's always here when I come along."

Whitefield's eloquence. An officer in Glasgow who had heard Mr. Whitefield preach in a weaver with another man, at a charity sermon, though he went with prejudice, he would be compelled to give something. The other to make surer laid all the money out of his pockets, before he left the church, he was glad to borrow some and lose his bet. On another occasion, Mr. Whitefield preached in behalf of the inhabitants of an obscure village in Germany, which had been burnt down and collected for them six hundred pounds. After the sermon, Whitefield said, "we shall sing a hymn, during which those who do not chose to give their mite on this awful occasion may sneak off." No one stirred: he got down from the pulpit and ordered all the doors to be shut but one, at which he held the plate himself and collected the above sum.

Boat ship. A man named Charles S. Clark, with six others, recently went under the command of a captain White, in a schooner from Boston, on a month's cruise. Clark became tired of the sport, as in twenty days they had caught just four barrels. One night when it was his turn at the helm, and all hands had turned in, a fine breeze sprung up and he steered for Boston. When the captain came on deck the next morning, and had rubbed the fog out of his eyes, he found himself within sight of the city. White, on a rough result, but it became tried when the captain found him steering towards Boston he did not stop him; the court decided that the captain had not exerted all the authority vested in him, and Clark was discharged.

Chinese tree corn. There has been a great deal of speculation in regard to the distinctive character and value of the Chinese tree corn, and the expediency of introducing it into the country. Public opinion, without, however, subjecting the corn to any regular or rational test, has pretty generally been against it; and the result, but it is to be feared to be received into favor, will depend on future experiments.

An ear of the tree corn has been left at this office by Mr. Joseph Dickinson, of Chestnut Hill, who informs us that he raised 724 ears this season from one small ear of seed, for which he paid 35 cents; that many of the stalks bore a first and four ears; and that it was nearly ripe by the first of September. It was all very fine—the ear sent us is particularly so—while the space occupied by the rows was not greater than that of ordinary corn. Mr. D. thinks it a profitable crop to raise, and intends, another year, to give it a fair trial. [Germanstown Telegraph.]

Unparalleled speed. One of the most extraordinary feats ever performed by a human being, came off on the Hunting Park course, Philadelphia city, James Brown, proprietor, on Monday of this week. It was wangled that Abram Nastrud could not perform twenty miles in two hours and a half. He is aged 22 years, 5 feet 7 inches high, weighs 143 pounds, and is a native of Jamaica, Long Island. According to appointment he started, the bets being two to one against him. The following table will show the time of each and every mile.

Miles.	Min.	Sec.	Miles.	Min.	Sec.
1	6	52	11	7	20
2	7	03	12	7	19
3	7	11	13	7	18

8	7	17	18	7	51
9	7	11	19	7	53

Being added up, makes two hours, twenty-seven minutes and twenty-nine seconds, and is more than eight miles an hour, for two and a half consecutive hours.

Chicago in 1671. Charlevoix, in a letter dated May 21st, 1721, speaks of "a place called Chicago, at the south end of Lake Michigan," where there was a settlement of Mannis, fifty years ago, "which is also the name of a little river which runs into the lake, the spring of which is not far from that of the Illinois."

College catalogue. The annual catalogue of Yale college for the current year was published this day, and is happy to say it presents that excellent institution in a state of unprecedented prosperity and improvement. The whole number of students is 608, viz: theological, 73; law, 45; medical, 45; resident graduates, 2; seniors, 99; juniors, 86; sophomores, 123; freshmen, 139. The two last classes, we believe, are the largest ever known in this institution, or perhaps, any similar one in the country.

For the honor of the arts we feel bound to notice the great improvement—the beautiful execution of the catalogue from the press of Mr. B. L. Hamlen. It is an elegant specimen of letter-press printing, that will vie with the best productions of the kind.

THE COTTON CIRCULAR published in the present does not emanate from the bank of the United States or its agents, as some persons at first supposed—but is one of those tricks of trade to which speculators feel themselves justified in resorting in this unblinking age to protect their own interests at the expense of the over credulous and unsuspecting. The following paragraphs have appeared in the N. York and Philadelphia papers on the subject, but do not explain how, or by whom the circular was placed over the public.

From the (Phil.) National Gazette. "The writer of the circular mentions 'a great and powerful interest' which will sustain Messrs. Humphreys and Biddle in the enterprise, and other adequate and collateral aids. It is generally understood readers of the paper, and is expressly stated in several journals, that the United States bank is the principal interest secured for the object. Without taring at all into the merits of the question in its arings upon the future value of cotton to the planter or shipper, we think it proper to declare that the United States bank is not a party to the arrangement.—It was fully explained in Mr. Biddle's letter to Mr. Adams, that peculiar circumstances, requiring the suspension of specie payments, seemed to require the interference of that institution between American planters and British dealers in cotton; and the necessity of such a course had passed with at crisis, and that in future the bank would conduct its operations to objects of more immediate moment to this city and state. Although Mr. Biddle's ministrations has ceased since this declaration, we find grounds for asserting that the intention is fulfilled under his successor."

From the United States Gazette. With reference to the consure and the queries, we I authorized to say that the United States bank and purchasing, nor does it intend to purchase cotton. The United States bank is not making advances, nor does it intend to make advances for the purchase of wool.

the editor of the New York American: "perceive that in common with the other newspapers of this city, you have connected my name and bank of the United States with the cotton circular recently issued in this city. You will, therefore, mit me to state explicitly.—That the bank of the U. States has nothing whatr to do with it, so far as I know or believe. That this measure did not emanate from Messrs. Humphreys and Biddle. That with the view of facilitating the export of the ton now in this port, I offer to make the advances in the circular referred to. That the reasons assigned for making shipments Messrs Humphreys and Biddle, are those of some of the holders of cotton in this country, who seek to lect their own interests by a concert of action.

S. V. S. WILDER. New York, 11th June, 1839. The cotton circular. The New York correspondent of the North American, under date of Tuesday mnoon writes:—The cotton circular discussion seems to be drawn to a close, as the parties who were first consid as being the great ones in the business disavow it. It is attributed now pretty much to one wo southern gentlemen, and one or two here, o have rather written down what they would like o do, than that what they have provided the means ctually doing."

Like an authentic statement of the result of the recent election in Virginia, but nothing that can be relied on with entire certainty as to the choice of a senator in place of Mr. Rives.

The representatives in congress will stand as follows:

First district. Joel Holleman, (Ad.) in place of F. Mallory, (W.). For Holleman 1,921—for Mallory 1,777.

Second district. Francis E. Rives (Ad.) re-elected. For Rives 1,219—for Pegram (W.) 867.

Third district. John W. Jones, (Ad.) No regular opposition.

Fourth district. George C. Dromgoole (Ad.) re-elected. For Dromgoole (Ad.) 1,336—for Gholson (W.) 928.

Fifth district. John T. Hill (W.) vice Boulden (Ad.) who was not a candidate. For Hill 812—for Wilson (sub. T.) 703.

Sixth district. Walter Coles, (Ad.) re-elected. For Coles 1,144—for Witcher (W.) 1,043.

Seventh district. William L. Goggen (W.) in place of J. M. Stuart (Ad.). For Goggen, 1,497—for Stuart, 1,347.

Eighth district. Henry A. Wise, (W.) re-elected without any regular opposition.

Ninth district. R. M. T. Hunter, (W.) re-elected For Hunter, 1,2093—for Scott, 1,109.

Tenth district. John Taliaferro (W.) re-elected. For Taliaferro 1,334—for Johnson (Ad.) 1,262.

Eleventh district. John H. Botts (W.) in place of John Robertson (W.). For Botts 1,459—for Selden (Ad.) 1,251.

Twelfth district. James Garland (Con.) re-elected. For Garland 1,437—for Gordon (Ad.) 634.

The return is not complete, but Mr. Garland's majority over Mr. Gordon, the originator of the sub-treasury system, is 787.

Thirteenth district. Linn Banks (Ad.) re-elected. For Banks 1,463—for Slaughter, (W.) 1,071. Return not complete.

Fourteenth district. Charles F. Mercer (W.) re-elected. For Mercer 1,354—for Mason (Ad.) 931.

Fifteenth district. William Lucas (Ad.) in place of J. M. Mason (Con.). For Lucas 2,074—for Barton (W.) 2,070.

It is stated that Mr. Barton will contest the election, on the ground that two persons voted against him in different counties, and that two other votes were deposited by persons who had been convicted of crime, &c. But the Globe states that the greatest number of illegal votes was on the outside.

Sixteenth district. Green B. Samuels (Ad.) in place of J. S. Pennypacker (Ad.) who was not a candidate. For Samuels 1,826—for Steele (Ad.) 1,201.

Seventeenth district. Robert Craig (Ad.) re-elected. For Craig 1,781—for Moore (W.) 1,030. Returns not complete.

Eighteenth district. Geo. W. Hopkins, (Con.) re-elected. For Hopkins 2,355—for George (Ad.) 2,038. Returns not complete.

Nineteenth district. Andrew Beirne (Ad.) re-elected. For Beirne 2,715—for Wethed 1,721.

Twentieth district. Joseph Johnson (Ad.) re-elected. For Johnson 1,993—for Shinn (Ad.) 684—for Camden (W.) 1,450. Return not complete.

Twenty-first district. Lewis Steenrod (Ad.) in place of W. S. Morgan (Con.) who was not a candidate. For Steenrod 1,297—for Hayward (W.) 1,630.

According to the above there will be 12 administration, 7 whig and 2 conservative members in the next congress.

We have at least half a dozen statements before us, which result of the recent election—and give the following from the Richmond Whig and Enquirer, from which our readers may form their own conclusions: The "Whig" says—"We find the whigs had last year in the house of delegates 72 members—in the senate 10, including Mr. Poulson, making 82. But whether Mr. F. be added or not, it will be seen that the whigs have lost 4 delegates and gained 2 senators, making their actual loss but 2. The conservative loss is only one.

Joint vote last year.

	Whigs.	Con.	Adm.
In senate,	10	3	19
House,	72	11	51
	82	14	70

This year.

	Whigs.	Con.	Adm.
In senate,	12	3	17
House,	68	10	56
	80	13	73

In each case, Mr. Poulson is included in the whig list, representing a whig district.

The "Enquirer" of yesterday, per contra, says—"We have not yet collected elements enough to calculate with absolute precision, the political position of the house of delegates. There are a few members, about which the parties are squabbling; and when we obtain the information which we have sought, we will make out the political complexion of the legislature, and state the prospects of the senatorial election. For the present, we will only repeat the estimate which we made in our last:

	Senate.
Anti-Rives republicans		18
Whigs		11
Conservatives	3
House of delegates.
Anti-Rives republicans		61
Rives' whigs		57
Anti-Rives' whigs	10
Rives' conservatives	3
Doubtful	3

On joint vote, anti-Rives republicans 79—conservatives 6—Rives whigs 68—anti-Rives whigs 10—Doubtful 3.

The die is probably in the hands of the few conservatives, and of the impracticable whigs."

With the above statements our readers must be content for the present—for we find it impossible to form any conclusive opinion of the character of the next legislature from the statements of the respective parties, who are figuring with great zeal to prove that both have gained a great victory. Our venerable friend of the "Enquirer" has worked himself up into a paroxysm of fictions, and is so well content with the result of the election that he lustily cries out—"Hurra for good old democratic Virginia!"

FLORIDA ELECTION. Mr. Downing has no doubt been re-elected to congress from the territory of Florida over his competitor Mr. Baltzell. At the last accounts Downing's majority was 719. Majority against the constitution 118.

POLITICAL. The whig convention which assembled at Ellicott's Mills on Saturday last, nominated John P. Kennedy and Charles H. Pitts, esqrs, as candidates for congress from this district, and have appointed George Howard and Charles F. Mayer, esqrs, delegates to the national convention to assemble at Harrisburg in December next, to nominate candidates for the offices of president and vice president of the United States.

The hon. Benjamin C. Howard has declined being a candidate for re-election.

FLORIDA. The Tallahassee Floridian of the 1st inst. publishes gen. Macomb's general orders announcing the termination of the war with the Seminoles under the obituary head, preceded and succeeded by the words "shame!! shame!! shame!!!" From this we infer that the agreement has found as little favor with the Floridians, as with the public generally.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT. William Harrison Helier Griffiths, to be commercial agent of the United States for the island of Mauritius, in the place of Paul Froberville, resigned.

A NEW MODE OF PROPELLING SHIPS. By the following extract from a letter, dated London, May 17, which we find in the Journal of Commerce, it seems that the new plan of propelling vessels by means of screws, has succeeded:

"The ship Archimedes' has arrived at Portsmouth after a cruise in the channel, having beat a government steamer. The great value of the screw is now fully tested. The water thrown by it on the rudder makes the ship answer her helm to the astonishment of naval officers. She turns in double her length; her first action on starting is to answer her helm. The ship has encountered bad weather, but has met it beautifully. Paddle boxes of the ocean are now superseded, and as a tug, no known power can have such hold of the water."

General banking law of the state of New York. By a table published in the Albany Journal, it appears that forty-three institutions have been formed in this state under the general banking law—that up to the 30th of April, they had deposited $2,137,090 in state stocks, and $51,316 13 in bonds and mortgages, making a total of $2,996,406 13, as security for the redemption of their notes. Up to the same period, the notes delivered by the bank department, to these 43 banks, for circulation amounted to $1,559,818. The amount of notes ordered by them, was $4,251,111. It will be seen by this, that the whole amount added to our circulation by these institutions is but a trifle over a million and a half.

[Albany Journal.]
The committee appointed at the meeting of stockholders in the Commercial and Rail Road bank of Vicksburg, resident in Philadelphia, to make an examination of the affairs of the bank, have made an informal report, which the stockholders resolved to make public. The committee spent four weeks in the investigation, and found the amount of specie to correspond with the sum called for by the books, and the issues of all notes were duly accounted for. They carefully examined the bills and notes held by the bank, and they called in the aid of four gentlemen to assist them in determining their character, and whenever any one of these gentlemen considered a debt bad, doubtful, or when they were ignorant of its character, it was marked accordingly. The whole amount of such debts was put down as $690,180. The whole amount of notes and obligations held by the bank was $6,119,000, of which $900,000 were liquidated before the committee left Vicksburg. The committee also examined the rail road in all its particulars, and are favorably impressed with the belief that it will prove productive as soon as completed.

[Balt. American.]
The New York Journal of Commerce states that post notes of the Mississippi Planters' bank to the amount of three or four hundred thousand dollars, payable at the bank of America, are now running to maturity, but there are no funds to meet them, and they are of course protested. This is a new feature in pecuniary disorganization and bankruptcy, and one of the most alarming. These post notes were given a year ago, for the purpose, generally, of redeeming the issues of the bank, which could not then be met; but it would certainly be paid. They were issued with the notion of a sort of double distilled oil of honor. The bank, though it broke its other promises abundantly, did in this case promise to keep its promise.

But doubled and twisted promises, it turns out, are "attenuated threads" after all, and perish like a spider's web at the day of reckoning. The Planters' bank is a great institution, and one of the most respectable in the state; though we believe there are one or two that have been less before the public, which have not and will not break faith in this flagrant style. One of the most unpleasant features about this new defalcation is, that these post notes were most of them taken by our merchants as the proceeds of their debts collected in Mississippi, and were then sold in the street at a heavy discount; and now the men who by that process had obtained aittance of their dues, are notified as endorsers upon the dishonored notes of the bank, and holden to take them up at the face, or suffer a degree of dishonor, which the bank in a measure avoids.

The Exchange bank of Virginia, at a general meeting of the stockholders, adopted a resolution declaring it inexpedient to accept the act of the legislature passed April 4, 1839, authorising an increase of $200,000 to the capital stock of the bank, and the establishment of a branch at Falmouth with a capital to that amount, to be subscribed by individuals.

The objectionable feature of the law, in view of the stockholders, is that which requires a classification of the offerings for discounts. The resolution of non-acceptance was adopted unanimously by the individuals stockholders, the state proxy, alone, voting in the negative.

By the acceptance of the new charters, (says the Richmond Whig) the two old banks of the city are forbidden to issue or re-issue notes under the denomination of ten dollars.

The N. York American says—The loan negotiated by general McDuffie, of South Carolina, who returned in the packet ship Roscius, from Liverpool, has been placed in the hands of the United States bank. The amount now available is 350,000. The bank continues to supply the market with exchange on England at 9½ prem.

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO. From the Globe. The departure of Mr. Ellis from New York, in the Constitution, for Vera Cruz, on his way to Mexico, to enter on the duties of his appointment as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary, has given occasion to sunny remarks on the subject of our controversies with the government of that country, which have served to remind us that none of the latter executive communications to congress on that subject have appeared in the public journals.

It is known that diplomatic intercourse was broken off by Mr. Ellis, in the belief that the Mexican government had no intention to adjust the numerous complaints of our citizens against it, and that a minister was not sent to Mexico under an appropriation of an outfit and salary because it did not distinctly appear whether the approbation expressed by the government of Mr. Gorostiza's conduct in this country, did not include the preparation and circulation of his offensive pamphlet.

A convention having been formed, for the adjustment of individual claims, and the government of Mexico having made an explicit declaration on the second point, all just motive for withholding our minister has been removed, and in a manner which we cannot but believe will be found as satisfactory to the country as have been the measures adopted on other difficult and perplexing questions in our intercourse with foreign nation.

THE TEXIAN MINISTER TO MEXICO. The New Orleans Bulletin publishes the following extract of a letter from col. Bee, the Texian minister to Mexico, dated May 16th.—"I have been passing several days very pleasantly on board the La Glorie, a beautiful 32 gun ship, commanded by Bl. le Comte Laine. I landed today, as gen. Victoria expected an answer from Mexico by express, and I have not been disappointed; he is desired to allow me to remain in Vera Cruz, until they can consult upon the propriety of receiving me. The very fact of my having been permitted to land, and of being treated courteously by gen. Victoria, governor of Vera Cruz, is highly favorable to Texas."

This hardly corresponds with the following from El Censor, of May 9th, printed at Vera Cruz. But as the letter of col. Bee is seven days later, his statement is of course authentic:

"In one of the American vessels which arrived here yesterday there came passenger a Texian agent, or envoy, of whom we have already spoken."

"We know not what most to admire, the audacity of these usurping banditti in sending this factotum to us to demand peaceful and tranquil possession of their plunder, or the answer of the commanding general to the person so intrusted to him on the part of this farcical minister to notify him arrived. According to this answer, if Mr. Diplomatic agent set his foot on shore, he would speedily visit the prison until the government should decide on the manner of treating him. The general tells him that he knows of no such nation as the republic of Texas, and has merely been informed that there is a horde of adventurers who have risen against the republic in that portion of our territory."

LATEST FROM RIO DE JANEIRO. From the Baltimore American. The brig Ann, captain Smith, arrived at this port on Saturday afternoon, from Rio de Janeiro, whence she sailed on the 18th April. The Ann brings a full cargo of coffee. At the date of her sailing, business at Rio was not very brisk, owing to the scarcity of produce; but as the stock of the market was decreasing, hopes were entertained that the reinforcements were sent to Rio Grande. Further reinforcements were sent to Rio Grande, but though the towns were in the possession of the government troops, the country remained entirely in the hands of the insurgents. The communication with the interior had been facilitated, and light hides and produce were coming in to Rio Grande more freely than for some time past.

We are happy to learn that the vigilance of the British cruisers on the coast of Brazil, will very probably soon extinguish entirely the abominable traffic in slaves. Three slave vessels from Africa, having on board between 800 and 900 negroes, were captured and sent into Rio, between the 1st and 15th of April. This success had greatly increased the activity of the cruisers, and caused them to redouble their vigilance.

The advices from Buenos Ayres were to the 25th March. The success of the Chilians—the allies of the Buenos Ayreans—had so animated the party under Rosas, that very little hopes were entertained of an amicable arrangement with the French being speedily made.—Since the blockade, an immense quantity of produce had accumulated in the city, probably to the value of from three to four millions of Spanish dollars, which will be sent to all quarters as soon as the blockade is raised, or the difficulties settled.

Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. The bark Express has arrived at Boston from Montevideo, bringing Buenos Ayrean papers to the 6th of April and a Montevideo letter of the 13th, from which we learn that the American brigs Eliza Davidson and America, which were seized at Lobreria Chica by the French Corvette Perle, have been released by the French admiral, on demand of commodore Nicholson, and the American consul at Montevideo, Mr. Hamilton. The admiral appears to have become convinced that the grounds on which said vessels were seized were not tenable.

The captains and others interested, have protested against the government of his majesty the king of the French, and there cannot be a doubt but heavy damages will be recovered.

The U. S. ships Independence and Fairchild, were at Montevideo when the Express sailed, April 15th. The Fairchild had just returned from Buenos Ayres.

The blockade of Buenos Ayres still continued; having been in force more than a year.

The "war" between Banda Oriental, and the Argentine confederation, still existed on paper, but there had been no engagement of consequence.

Great rejoicings and illuminations had taken place at Buenos Ayres in consequence of the defeat of the protector, Santa Cruz, in Peru, by the Chilean forces. Proposals had been made by the Bolivian general, Velazco, for the restoration of peace between that republic and Buenos Ayres, and were accepted by the latter. The Buenos Ayrean government were about to send ministers to Bolivia, Peru and Chili, in order to concert measures for securing a permanent peace.

Several American ships of war, Calliope and Orsted, had arrived in the La Plata, making, with other ships of the same nation previously there, a force equal to that of the blockading squadron.

SOUTH AMERICAN POLITICS. From the Globe. In the late message of the president of Ecuador Don Vicente Rocafuerte, at the opening of congress, he alludes to the arrival of Mr. Pickett: Quito, the capital of the republic:

"The United States have, under all circumstances, given us proofs of friendship; and we have had the late arrival of a charge d'affaires from that innumerable nation with extreme satisfaction."

In the report of the secretary for foreign affairs which accompanies the message, Mr. Pickett's arrival is thus noticed:

"The term of twelve years, and for which the treaty between the United States and the former Republic of Colombia was to have force, expired on the 1st of May, 1837. A charge d'affaires in the United States, furnished with plenipotentiary powers, ad hoc, is now in this capital, and is in the possession with a plenipotentiary of this government for a renewal of the treaty."

In the same report of the secretary for foreign affairs, we are presented with a more comprehensive view of the objects and design of the proposed congress of Panama, or Amphictyonic assembly of the South American republics, than that which we lately published:

"If this treaty (with Mexico) had no other object of importance, article 35 would alone justify special and honorable mention. By this act, the contracting parties engage to urge upon the new states of America the necessity of appointing their ministers plenipotentiary to the great American assembly, as early as practicable, and at a point already selected for that purpose. Want of intelligence and light, the new governments of America have, for many years, acted separately, and with different systems of foreign relations, which have, sometimes, prompted them to a measure opposed to their true interests.

It is certainly to be regretted that the bright conception of an Amphictyonic congress, has once been realized at Panama, its useful labors should have been frustrated. It is equally so, at some of the American states failed to co-operate with this congress, although it was transferred to Tacubaya.

It is not, however, alone sufficient that the legislative body approve of this treaty. The principles must be established, and subjects adopted, for discussion and deliberation of the congress of Mexico or Texas, as proposed by the party of Pickett to the other republics of South America, and particularly to that of Chili, may be permitted here to submit:

1. Bases of negotiation with Spain, for the recognition of independence.
2. Principles upon which treaties between the new republics and foreign powers are to be formed.
3. Bases of relations of friendship and commerce among the new republics.

- 4. Means of avoiding controversies, and of settling them when existing by means of a friendly intervention of all the other republics.
- 5. Aid to be mutually furnished by the republics in the event of foreign war.
- 7. Means for determining the territory belonging to each republic; for guaranteeing its integrity, whether as amongst the republics themselves, or against foreign nations bordering on them.
- 8. The adoption of an international code of public law for the government of the republics, inter se."

CUBA. The editor of the Charleston Mercury has been furnished with a translation of an order of the captain general of Cuba, which order is published in the Havana Diario. The purport is: that on the representation of the American consul and of one Daniel Warren, (keeper of a sailors boarding house) it is ordained:—

"That no sailor can be admitted or employed under any pretence, nor be permitted to remain on board of any American vessel in the port of Havana, unless the captain of such vessel shall be perfectly assured that the sailor has been legally discharged from the vessel in which he arrived, and with the knowledge and consent of the American consul.

"That for every sailor employed in violation of said regulation, the captain employing him shall be fined fifty dollars, and should the vessel in which said sailor is found, have obtained clearances the fine shall be doubled. The said Daniel Warren is appointed commissioner for the strict enforcement of these regulations, and to report outsiders to the captain of the port, a third part of the fines to go to the informer, the rest to the chamber of justice.

An intelligent gentleman from Havana, just arrived at New Orleans, informs the editors of the Louisianaian, that great discontent prevailed among the natives of the island. They are said to be much dissatisfied with the European Spaniards, who have settled upon all employments, civil and military. There was some apprehensions of a revolt. Robberies, murders and burning of houses have recommenced in the city of Havana. It was feared that the governor general, Espletta, would find a difficult task in suppressing the effervescence that was beginning to manifest itself in the minds of the creoles.

LATE FROM THE PACIFIC. We learn from the New York Gazette, that letters were received in that city on Thursday, from Guayaquil to the 19th of April, via Jamaica, which state that Gen. Santa Cruz, accompanied by a few of his favorite officers, had arrived at that place from Islay, with a view of taking up his residence in the vicinity of Guayaquil. It appears that the Bolivians, on the receipt of the news of his detest at Yungay, revolved and dispossessed him of his authority as president of the republic. The last advices from Peru state that the Chilean troops under general Bulness, and the Peruvians under Gen. Lefonté, entered Lima without opposition, and that the castles of Callao a few days afterwards surrendered to the authority of the new president, GAZARRA. The affairs of Peru, Chili and Bolivia were to be settled by a general congress, which was expected to assemble at Lima.

FROM THE EAST INDIES. We have Singapore papers of the 25th of January, but their contents have been partly anticipated by the late arrivals from Canton and London. Advices to the 30th of November had been received from the British resident at the Barmese court, whose situation continued to be very annoying and unpleasant. He had succeeded at length, in obtaining an interview with the ministers, and a qualified recognition as the representative of the British government; but all intercourse between him and the people was strictly prohibited, and it was only with difficulty and at enormous expense that he could procure the common necessaries of life. [N. Y. Com.

CENTRAL AMERICA. We learn that Mr. JOHN L. STEPHENS has been appointed special agent to the government of Central America—the office to which the late Mr. Leggett was appointed, and which was left vacant by his death. The nomination of Mr. Stephens must give satisfaction to the country and to his friends—we hope also to himself. "The public will expect two rich volumes when he returns—including some account of the stupendous architectural remains existing in the little-known region he is about visiting." N. Y. Com. Adv.

FROM GUATEMALA. The brig Patsy B. Blount, capt Penderson, from Belize, brings news to the 13th of April. Several of the states of Central America, (Costa Rica, Honduras, and Nicaragua), under Carrera, have declared themselves independent of the general government. On the 13th, Carrera was in possession of Guatemala. The issue of this conflict is as yet uncertain. Belize papers brought out by capt Penderson, state that the British authorities had taken possession of the island of Riatan, on the coast of Guatemala, claiming it as a part of the British dominions. [N. Y. Amer.

TEXAS. Dates from Houston to the 22d May have reached New Orleans. Cordova, the Mexican bandit, had again approached the frontier with 108 men and 40 pack mules. He had cut off a party of surveyors on the Guadalupe and murdered them all but one. They are chiefly Mexicans. Cordova was carrying ammunition to the northern Indians. Colonel Burleson was in pursuit of Cordova. The government had placed at his command 400 men.

CANADIAN AFFAIRS. The outbreak upon the American schooner Weeks, at Brockville, U. C., still occupies the attention of the British authorities—and we learn from the Ostreezer (N. Y.) Palladium, that sir George Arthur has dismissed the collector of that port from office—but whether on account of the rigor or lenity of his conduct, is not stated.

MORE INDIAN BUTCHERY. We regret to find that the savages have not yet buried the hatchet in Florida, but are still at their murderous work.

On yesterday, we were favored with the perusal of a letter from a young lady in Florida to her uncle in this city, which is dated the 29th ult, and came by the Florida, from Gary's Ferry. The letter states that on the evening previous, about sunset, a body of Indians surrounded the dwelling of a Mr. James Osteen, * at Alligator, and shot him near his stable. He was instantly killed. An uncle of the writer's, Mr. Simeon Dell, who was in the stable, made his escape to the house. A sister of Mr. Osteen's was shot through the left side, and arm, but Mrs. O. and her children fled to the nearest neighbor's house.

Mr. Dell was now left in the house by himself and seeing the Indians approaching, he picked up a stick, (as he had no gun,) and pulled open the door—the Indians then fled. On searching the house, however, he found a savage, who had come up to the door and fired at the savages, who had come up. They also fired and hit him in the left side above the breast. The shot entered the left shoulder blade, and was taken out on the 29th. Mr. Dell was doing well. One of the Indians had a white feather in his head, and it was thought by the settlers, that they were a party which they had a fight with some time before at a place called the Natural Bridge.

After the Indians left Mr. Osteen's, he proceeded the plantation of Asa Roberts, about a quarter of a mile from Mr. O's—but that family hearing the report of guns, had left for Mr. Zachariah Roberts' place, where the Indians followed, and destroyed all the poor people had, even taking their only horse.

It was thought that Mr. Dell had wounded one of the savages, by their taking the horse.

It is truly melancholy to record these atrocities, and that, too, after we have been led to expect that the war was indeed over. We fear no treaty can bind these wretches—and that extermination alone will stay their slaughtering—merciless aros. [Savannah Georgian.

THE SAES AND FOXES. Governor Lucas, of Iowa territory, lately visited the Sac and Fox Indians. The Iowa Gazette thus speaks of the excursion:

Gov. Lucas has just returned from a visit to the Saes and Fox settlement on the Des Moines river (83 to 100 miles west of this place). He found them comfortable and contented. Keokuck and his chiefs received the governor with all the ceremony peculiar to these lordly sons of the forest. The interview was pleasant and interesting. There were hundreds present. Several speeches were made, in which the chiefs, in a friendly way dis criminate between the merits of a friendly visit upon this fact with the authority of law. They dwelt and one with the greatest earnestness—manifesting that while they highly appreciated the object of the visit and derived much pleasure from it, they were also familiar with the tactics of diplomacy and the arts of oratory.

Keokuck is gradually recovering the wound which he received from one of his chiefs.—The assassin left the settlement immediately, and is now on a war expedition against the Sioux.

Na-ce-as-co, son of Black Hawk, and the noblest Indian in the world, his mother, brother and sister were present. Na-ce-as-co appeared to be very affectionate towards his mother and sister, and seemed anxious to introduce the visitors individually. His mother is rather an extraordinary woman and devotedly attached to her family. She exhibited several portraits of her late lord and husband, Black Hawk, whose memory she continues to revere with unabated awe. Miss Black Hawk is decidedly handsome—and unquestionably the belle of her tribe.

Our enterprising settlers have extended their improvements into the very precincts of the Indian villages. Almost the whole of the country between this city and the Des Moines is taken up, and much of it highly improved. We would also inform our readers that the Indian country is even superior to any thing (this side of the Des Moines, and that they would be very apt to doubt our veracity. Not wishing to have our word doubted for a moment, we shall, not, therefore, say any thing about the matter at present.

SMUGGLING IN NEW YORK. The home manufacturers and the honest importers, have long suffered great injury from a system of swindling practised in New York in the city of woolen goods. We have seen several statements of the nature in which these frauds are practised. The following is from the Philadelphia National Gazette:

"The duty laid upon woolen goods is ad valorem estimated by the first cost, as it appears in the original invoice. This invoice may be false in several particulars; as to the kind of cloth, the quality of the cloth, the number of pieces in each package and the number of yards in each piece. Silk goods or those of which silk is the principal material, coming free of duty, the revenue is defrauded by passing under the latter head, cassimers which have in fact but a few silk threads. Fine cloths are invoiced below their value, and are carried out in pieces and yards misstated. The duty on the enterprise and industry of honorable men in the trade, the spurious invoices made to order in England are sworn to in the custom house, and the perjury is sustained on the one hand by the connivance of official officers, and on the other by the despatch of importers. Thus, among packages of various kinds of manufactures, some are made up to correspond with it, and the rest pass without inspection. These modes of cheating the nation are known, and we may well presume there are others which the smugglers in and out of the New York custom house practise without suspicion. The result is that the honest American manufacturer cannot compete with the foreign houses. We are ready to believe that those who have gone to England and purchased for cash at the lowest market prices, find, when their goods arrive and the duties are paid, that they are undersold and must consequently, instead of realizing a fair profit, suffer a serious loss.

It is said that since Swartwout's administration every article in New York, some reform has been effected, but it is still true that the merchants of Philadelphia, and Boston cannot report in competition with her, simply on account of the monstrous extent to which the knavish management and false oaths of certain foreign importers with the collusion of revenue officers operate upon the trade. Nor is this evil complained of only by merchants out of New York. The conscientiousness of our countrymen there, is so great and powerful that no proper exposure is made by the local press. For our own part, satisfied as we are, that the government has not taken proper measures to cleanse the Augean stable which Price and his accomplices heaped up with the moral filth of perjury, bribery and peculation, we are ready to offer our share of anxious suggestions, in laying before the actual authors upon the tariff regulations and the vast injustice of the consequences. It is in vain to display this fraudulent system, unless some efficient means be taken to suppress it. Those which appear to us as adequately corrective, may not coincide with the views of our merchants, whose experience should suggest a better plan, but we offer a few suggestions for what they may be worth."

RAIL ROADS. The Baltimore Chronicle of Monday states "that no difficulty, whatever, will occur in the procurement of funds to proceed, at once, to the prosecution of the contracts which will soon be declared for the making of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road to Cumberland. The banks of this city, with a liberality and regard for the interests of the public which evince the public spirit of those who control them, are about, we understand, to loan to the company, upon a pledge of a part of the city's subscription, the sum of half a million of dollars, which will enable the directors to proceed in the prosecution of themselves of the most favorable opportunities that may occur for rendering available the balance of the subscription of the city and state."

Good news for travellers—one link more of the rail roads running west finished. The Auburn and Syracuse rail road is now completed; and we were yesterday favored with an invitation from its directors, to join a large number of citizens in a ride to Syracuse. Every thing appeared to be in the best of order—the road to be well finished—the locomotives to be in excellent trim—and an appearance of good feeling and satisfaction to be visible upon every countenance. The trip to Syracuse (rather over twenty-five miles) was accomplished in one hour and nine minutes, travelling time—and the return in some four or five minutes less. An excellent dinner was prepared at the Syracuse House, of which a large number of the citizens of both villages partook; and the whole passed off with the best of feeling. His excellency governor Seward, was one of the company, by whom the party at the hotel, in answer to a toast, was addressed in one of those neat off-hand touches, for which he is so remarkable. In our next, it will be our endeavor to speak of this enterprise in a manner more worthy of those by whose energy and perseverance it has been completed, as well as of the many advantages which must flow from its successful completion.

[Auburn Journal and Advertiser.]

According to a statement of the operations of the Boston and Worcester rail road company, recently published, it appears that the total receipts of the year 1838 were $212,325, which with a previous surplus of $86,281, gave a total for the year, of $298,607. The expenses for the same period were $85,572, and there was reserved for extra repairs $13,000, making a total of $100,572, and leaving a net income of $198,035, from which two dividends of 5 per cent. on the capital stock had been paid, say $102,000, leaving an undivided surplus to the credit of the present year of $16,035. The net income from the commencement of this year cannot be accurately ascertained; there is an increase however as appears from the weekly reports of $4,343 on the passengers, and $9,716 on the freight, over the earnings of last year at the same period, making a total increase of $14,059.

THE ATMOSPHERIC RAILROAD. A second series of experiments, with models upon a modelled railroad, of Clegg's atmospheric principle of propelling carriages by means of exhausting a tube laid down the line of road to be traversed of the air contained in it, and creating a vacuum was made on Tuesday forenoon at the iron works of Messrs. Samuda, Southwark. The tube being exhausted by means of an air pump, the models, the leading one having a piston which forced open the valve of the tube, proceeded at a rate of extreme velocity along the line, a distance of thirty or forty yards, the next being one foot in thirty. The models were heavily laden, each carrying a couple of persons, and upwards of 15 cwt. of ballast being dispersed over the whole. There were present several members of parliament, railway directors, engineers, &c. The machinery appeared to give satisfaction.

NEW YORK CANALS. The Albany Argus contains the following statements of the trade of the canals.

The tolls collected on all the canals of this state, up to the 1st June, in 1838 and 1839, were as follows:

ARMY ORDERS.—Under the provisions of "general orders," No. 23, of May 20th, major general SCOTT, has selected the race ground near Trenton, New Jersey, for the proposed "camp of instruction," and has called it "CAMP WASHINGTON." Brevet brig. general ESTES is assigned to the immediate command.

The 4th artillery, lieutenant COL. FANNING, is under orders to reach the camp between the 1st and 5th of June.

May 31.—The resignations of the following officers have been accepted by the president, to take effect at the dates set opposite to their respective names:

1st Lieut. E. W. MORGAN, 2d artillery, May 31, 1839.

1st Lieut. J. M. WELLS, 7th infantry, May 31,

Assist. surgeon E. B. WOLOTT, April 15,

Assist. surgeon B. F. FELLOWES, May 30

June 1.—The six companies of the 2d regiment of dragoons, ordered to be withdrawn from the Florida service, will take post at fort Columbus until their colonel will remain and assume command until further orders. The horses of these discontinued companies, instead of being sent to Jefferson barracks, as directed in general orders of the 19th of May, will now be returned over to the quartermaster's department at Garey's Ferry, for such disposition as the quartermaster general may direct.

The 3d artillery ordered to fort Columbus, instead of being sent to the posts on the Gulf of Mexico, as previously ordered by the general in chief. This regiment (the greater portion of it) has been long serving in Florida, and will probably join the camp of instruction near Trenton, New Jersey, very shortly after its arrival in the harbor of New York.

NAVY ORDERS. June 1.—Capt. G. W. STOREY, command of receiving ship Boston, vice Lieut. J. B. Moxley, relieved.

Commandant W. K. LATIMER to the Mediterranean, to relieve commander PERCYVAL, in command of the Cyane.

THE MAILS. The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette states that an arrangement has just been completed between the postmaster general and the Georgia rail road and banking company, by which the mail from New York to New Orleans will occupy only nine days in its transit between the two cities. The arrangement is to go into effect on the first of July.

Travellers can go from New York to New Orleans in nine days, without unusual fatigue, and with only 290 miles of staging; viz: 70 miles in North Carolina, and 220 in Georgia and Alabama, and the remainder being by rail road.

FRESHET IN MAINE. A gentleman who left Augusta, Maine, on Thursday, informs us that the water had worn the bank away up to the beautiful mansion of Judge Bridge, and the house was demolished. The grounds were covered with fruit trees and shrubbery, which did much to heighten the regret which we felt at the loss. Half a mile below the dam several houses had been dismantled by their furniture, doors, windows, &c. and lashed to trees to keep them from washing away.

[Journal of Commerce.]

JOHN C. SPENCER being about to remove his family from Canandaigua to Albany, with the intent of making that city his permanent residence, the members of the bar and many of the most respectable citizens of the former place, with distinct intimation of party, to manifest their high respect for his talents, and his integrity as a jurist, and his many virtues as a citizen and a neighbor, tendered him a public dinner. The company was alike honorable to those proffering it and the recipient.

We copy below Mr. Spencer's beautiful and eloquent reply.

To the hon. Nathaniel W. Howell, John Craig, esq., Moses Atwater, esq., honorable Oliver Phelps, hon. Mark H. Sibley, Jared Wilson, esq., Henry B. Gibson, esq., Henry W. Taylor, esq. and others, citizens of Canandaigua.

Gentlemen: I have received, with deep emotion, your letter of the 11th inst., proposing to manifest your feelings on the occasion of my removal from this lovely village, by a public dinner.

It is now nearly thirty years since I made Canandaigua my residence; a generation has passed, and yet many remain with whom a delightful social intercourse has been maintained, and with whom it has been my pride and pleasure to co-operate in labors for the public good. To receive from them such a testimonial of their kindness, at a moment when all the endearing relations which have so long subsisted are about to be severed forever, oppresses my heart with a weight of grateful obligations, which cannot find utterance. The errors and faults of youth, of professional contest and of judicial strife, are in a moment forgotten by you, and you only remember the sincerity of purpose with which I have labored and contended.

Painful as is the event which separates me from the objects, institutions and a community, around which all my affections had gathered, and to which they yet cling with a tenacity that only convinces me how inadequate I estimated their strength; I cannot—I ought not to, disguise, that such an assurance as you have furnished of my having retained your kind regards as a neighbor, and your esteem as a citizen, is a solace of the pains of separation, which will ever be most fondly cherished.

Nothing could give me more pleasure than to meet my friends and neighbors, and worthy friends, at any time or in any manner, they might please to designate.

But the calls of official duty leave no more time than is absolutely indispensable to the arrangement of my private affairs, preparatory to a removal to Albany; and I trust, gentlemen, that the same generous feeling which have prompted the suggestion of a dinner, will induce you to persevere in declining to receive my sincere acknowledgements of my gratitude for the undeserved honor.

I can only say, that wherever I may be placed, my heart will be with Canandaigua—its inhabitants, its social, literary and religious institutions; and that my fervent prayers will be offered for the choicest blessings of heaven upon this our first and true fellow citizen.

JOHN C. SPENCER.

Canandaigua, May 31, 1839.

IMPORTANT TO IMPORTERS OF IRON. Recent instructions from the treasury department require officers "to ascertain with as much certainty as practicable, the value of the proceeds of the iron ore, on the voyage of importation—in which case only allowance can be made. In addition to the examination of the appraisers, and certificate of the port wardens, certificates of the fact will be required in all cases from the master and mate of the vessel, in which the importation is made." [New Bedford Register.]

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF PENNSYLVANIA. The fifth annual report of the superintendent of common schools, for this state, is published in certain of the Philadelphia papers.

The state, excluding the city and county of Philadelphia, is divided into 10,523 school districts. Of these, 840 were included in the proceeds of the previous year's common school law, of which 623 have made reports. Assuming the reports of the 623 districts as a standard, it is estimated that there are in the 840 districts, 5,269 schools, which are taught about six months of the year. The whole number of teachers employed in these schools is 4,753 males, and 1,574 females, at average wages of $19.95 per month for the former, and $11.30 for the latter. The whole number of scholars in these schools is 233,719. The average number of scholars in each school is 42, and the average cost of each scholar per quarter $1.29 1-2 or $5.55 per year. The appropriations from the state for 1839, is $508,919; of this sum Philadelphia city and county receives $39,573 for the 840 districts, and $214.9 for the city. The tax assessed in these 840 districts, for school purposes amounts to $385,783, making the whole sum raised $604,732, or $114 to each of the 5,269 schools.

DESTITUTE CONFLICT. The Apalachicola Gazette of the 11th ult. contains the annexed statement:—A desperate encounter occurred on Sunday last, between several individuals of the county, and a gang of runaway negroes, whose camp they came upon unawares. A Mr. Herring, Mr. Hollis, and another individual, residing about 12 miles from the city, on the east side of the river, while cattle hunting, came upon a settlement of runaway negroes. The first of the gang discovered was a fellow named Cesar, well known in this city as a desperate character, and belonging to the county of Columbus, Ga. He was immediately seized upon; but he proved to be well armed with knives and pistols. A deadly struggle ensued; others of the gang came to his assistance; during the encounter Mr. Herring was killed, being shockingly cut and mangled; another of the party had his arm broken with a badge, and was severely injured. Mr. Hollis was engaged with the fellow Cesar, and gave him many severe stabs in the side and back with his hunting knife, which he thinks must prove fatal. The sheriff of the county with a posse, has gone in pursuit of the outlaws.

STATISTICS OF CRIME. At the last sitting of the Academies des sciences morales et politiques, M. Guerry read a memoir by which it appeared, that from 1826 to 1835, inclusive, nearly 70,000 persons of both sexes were brought before the courts of assizes and correctional tribunals of France for various offences. During this period the annual list of criminals and delinquents had increased from 57,669 to 72,930. In the same interval the number of prosecutions for perjury and subornation of perjury had augmented, and the number of attempts to murder one-third and more—and for forgery nearly one-half. Blows and wounds given to parents and elder relations, and rapes upon adults diminished in number, but violations and attempts at violation upon young females under sixteen years of age were in 1835, double what they were in 1826, and persons severely injured. At the same time, crimes were committed by old offenders. In the year 1835, the number of crimes and offences committed by those who had been previously convicted was 9,652, while in 1828 they were but 4,760, showing an increase of rather more than double. Out of every 1,000 prisoners tried before the courts of assizes in 1825, there were 105 who had been previously convicted; and in 1835, there were 235, or nearly double. Out of every 1,000 offenders placed at the bars of the correctional tribunal in 1825 sixty had been there before, but, in 1835, this number was increased to 113.

THE VOYAGE ACROSS THE ATLANTIC IN A SHIP. A friend lately on a visit to New York, and who had on board the Robert P. Stockton, expressed great surprise that men could be found with sufficient daring to venture a passage across the Atlantic in so frail a sea boat. In a conversation with capt. Crane, he learned from that gentleman that the countryman ridiculed the idea of an enterprise so fraught with danger, and took on heavy wagers with the heroic captain, that he would abandon his daring adventure or fail in it. He did neither, however—both the courageous captain and his tiny vessel gallantly rode out the storm and buffeted the waves unharmed; and he lives to claim his bets, and to enjoy the glory of having accomplished, the most daring act of navigation on record. The New York Gazette thus speaks of this vessel and its crew.

Philad. Star.
We venture to say that the first voyage left in looking at the little craft that has just crossed the Atlantic, is that of thorough astonishment. We had heard her called a vessel of only thirty tons, and thought it extraordinary that so tiny a vessel should have navigated the ocean, but a glance at her increases the astonishment fifty fold; but she really looks like nothing that we can think of but a man-of-war's barge, and though she may be about thirty tons American measurement, she was only fifteen tons according to the steamboat admeasurement in England. We should almost as soon think of going to England astride a shingle set on edge as to go to sea in such a cockle shell as this. Capt. Crane would have been deified for such an exploit any where else but in this land of mere "business transactions,"—a country where the community is so used to the "march of enterprise"—so thoroughly imbued with the utilitarianism of the day, that if a man were to swim from the Cape of Good Hope to Sandy Hook upon a bamboo, about the first question asked him would be, how much his provision for the passage cost him.

So small a vessel as the Robert F. Stockton never before reached the United States from Europe. The least of the vessels which accompanied Columbus when he discovered the continent was not much larger, but she had conductors of a larger size. On the whole, this adventure of the Yankee sailor, we consider one of the boldest upon record. Almost bold enough to be called temerity as it was called in England; and still it was as much the result of cool judgment as of high personal fearlessness; for capt. Crane had tested the capacity of his craft by satisfactory experiments, and saw with a seaman's skillful eye, her qualities for bearing the surges of the sea. The Robert F. Stockton is about 70 feet in length on deck, ten feet beam, and draws about seven feet water. All save her deck and her bulwarks, are of wrought sheet iron, her sides being of plates five-eighths of an inch thick, riveted to an iron frame work, and most substantially put together. It will be seen from her dimensions, tonnage and draft of water, that she is exceedingly sharp, and of course she must be a most rapid sailer, and especially calculated to go close to the wind: With well proportioned spars and sails she must of necessity be one of the fastest sailers that ever was afloat. Nothing can be judged of by her present rig; for as her captain remarked, she has come all her way under jury masts.

Narrow as she is, she is stiff, and one of the snailers said to us, "Sir, it would be impossible to put her on her beam ends." Captain Crane has been kind enough to furnish us with his log book and we shall give it to the public on Monday. We consider the captain, mate, and crew of this vessel richly entitled to some honorable mark of respect from our countrymen, some memento of the admiration that belongs to so much skill and so much daring."

Captain Crane's adventure.

The editor of the Boston Mercantile Journal, who has himself had practical experience as a sailor—furnishes some reminiscences which show that the above feat of capt. Crane, has not been without its parallel in former years. He says:—

Why it is only a few years ago, that a little schooner, called the Missionary, of about the same size and tonnage with the R. F. Stockton, left Boston for the Sandwich Islands, in the Pacific ocean; and although deeply laden, and of an unfavorable wind, passed through the straits of Magellan, and reached her destined port in safety. We will say nothing of captain Shackford's adventure, who in a little sloop of thirty or forty tons, sailed from Gibraltar for Demarara, whither he arrived in good time, with no one but himself on board, for he was a little deranged in the upper story. But we were once one of three individuals, composing the officers and crew of a vessel of less than thirty tons, which sailed from New York for the Spanish Maine—and although we occasionally suffered for want of sleep, having to perform multifarious duties, we never regarded the trip as in the remotest degree perilous, or even unpleasant. We presume there are few sailors who would object to crossing the Atlantic in the R. F. Stockton, on the plea that such a vessel would be unsafe—and although captain Crane may be a very worthy, enterprising man, and a courageous and skillful seaman, we do not think the mere circumstance of crossing the Atlantic in a staunch vessel of thirty tons, well found, and with a good crew, is conclusive evidence of the fact.

ORIGINAL LETTER FROM COLUMBUS. Captain Baker of the Baltimore brig Helen McLeod, lately arrived from Genoa, has handed to us the following translation of an autograph letter from the great discoverer of this continent. It was given to captain B. by Mr. Campbell, the American consul, and though of little importance in itself, it will be read with some interest, as an original letter from Christopher Columbus, never before published.

[New York Gazette.

Translation from the Spanish language into the English of an autograph letter of Christopher Columbus, dated the 2nd April 1502, addressed to the Bank of St. George, at Genoa.

On the outside of the cover in which the letter was found folded is this description:

"MDII—Letter of the lord admiral don Christopher Columbus."

Address of the letter:
"To the most noble gentlemen of the most magnificent Bank of St. George."

Most noble gentlemen:—

Altho' my body be walking here, my heart is always with you. Our Lord has bestowed on me the greatest blessing, which since the time of David, he has conferred on any one. The affairs of my enterprise are already brightening up, and would shine yet more did not the darkness of the government cover them. I return to the Indies in the name of the most holy trinity, speedily to return again, and because I am mortal, I leave orders to don Diego, my son, that of all my income he is to account to you for the tenth of the whole, year by year, perpetually, in order to reduce the price of corn, wine and other provisions. If this tenth part be much, accept of it, and if not, accept the good will which I feel towards you. I beg earnestly to recommend to you my son. Mister Nicolo Oderigo is acquainted with all my concerns as much as I am myself. I have sent to him a copy of all my privileges and papers, that he may put them in safe custody, and I should be pleased if you saw them. Of the king and queen, my lords, deign to honour me with the view.

The most holy trinity guard your most noble persons, and increase the dignity of your office.

Done in Sevilgia, the 2d April, 1502.

The high admiral of the ocean, vice roy and governor general of the islands, of the Terraferma of Asia, and of the Indies of the king, and of the queen my lords, and their captain general of the seas.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSIONS. The Cincinnati papers contain the particulars of a fearful explosion on board the steamboat Buckeye, attended with the loss of several lives, which occurred on the 29th May, at midnight. We find the following account of it in the Republican of the 3th instant, derived from a passenger in the boat at the time of the explosion.

"The Buckeye left New Orleans on the 26th of May, in company with the gen. Brown, or within a few hours of her departure. There was a competition for speed, each boat claiming a superiority, which, we have no doubt, was a principal cause of the disaster which we have now the painful duty to record.

"The gen. Brown had passed the Buckeye above Vicksburg, the latter boat under a high pressure of steam had entered the chute of island No. 24, about six miles above Randolph, (Tenn.) a short distance from the Mississippi line, when an explosion took place, which made nearly as complete a wreck of the boat, as that of the unfortunate Moselle.

"The boilers were thrown up perpendicularly and in their descent, were broken into innumerable pieces and completely wrecked the upper works of the boat. The room of the first clerk, Mr. Charles Starkey, was almost annihilated, and himself considerably, although not dangerously, injured. The pilot at the wheel Mr. Charles Gretzinger, (commonly pronounced Cutsinger,) of Louisville, was thrown into the air thirty or forty feet, and instantly killed on alighting on deck.—The mate Mr. Thomas Rogers, of this city, is among the missing supposed to have been killed. A person on watch at the time, reported to be an engineer, Mr. Prentiss of Portland, Ky. was killed. The other persons known to be killed by this explosion, are one fireman, (colored), and one deck passenger, name unknown. The second pilot, Butler Randolph, is dangerously injured, and little hopes are entertained of his recovery.

"Captain Jacob Thompson was on the boiler-deck at the time of the explosion; he was thrown some distance above the wreck, into the water, much injured, though not dangerously. The carpenter of the boat was blown ashore, without a single article of clothing, and, as remarkable as it may appear we have the most unquestionable authority for the assertion, he was but slightly injured.

"The day previous to the fatal catastrophe, a dangerous accident, which liked to have proved fatal to the Buckeye, was experienced. A snag ran through the larboard guard, carried away two state rooms, and was in close proximity, in its ascent through the cabin into the steam pipe. The Buckeye was towed to Louisville by the Sultana.

One of the boilers of the steamboat Ponchartraburst on or about the 28th ult when off the Mexican coast.—No one was injured though the machinery suffered considerably. This vessel had recent ly been purchased at New Orleans for the service of the federalists, and was bound to Tampico at the time of the accident.

IMPORTANT QUESTION SETTLED. The following letter from Washington announces the happy termination of the negotiation for the shipwrecked slaves. It is very agreeable news for the owners—for the south, whose rights are thus respected—and for the whole union, because one of the difficult subjects in negotiation is thus adjusted and removed. The government has succeeded in settling a very delicate, difficult and protracted subject. The minister has finally settled it, to the satisfaction of our government, and at the same time to the ample security of the rights of our people. We congratulate our readers on this agreeable result.

[Richmond Eng.

Washington, June 3.

"The Great Western has brought news of an interesting character also as regards this country—at least the southern section of it. It is reported that our minister Mr. Stevenson, has succeeded in making an arrangement with the British government, by which it stipulated that the value of the slaves shipwrecked, some eight or nine years ago upon the Bahama islands, shall be paid to the claimants. This, if true, (and there is no reason to doubt it) is not only important, as regards individual claimants, but equally so in a national point of view, as it establishes a great and important principle. It will be seen, therefore, that our minister has been unjustly censured, by some of the southern statesmen, for a supposed neglect or inattention to this matter. So far from that, he is entitled to great credit for the ability and zeal with which he has conducted this delicate affair; and when the correspondence shall be published, I have no doubt he will receive the thanks of the country—particularly the slave-holding states. The arrangement is said to do ample justice to the claimants as it secures to them the full value of their property with interest. This arrangement secures to the claimants nearly $500 a piece for their slaves, including men, women and children—more than was ever allowed in any former occasion by the British government. Mr. Gallatin, succeeded, I believe in getting only about $200 for the slaves that were taken off by their ships of war, during the late war with that country."

TERRIBLE CALAMITY. Three or four years since a company was formed for the purpose of raising the water of the Kennebec river, creating an immense moving power, and erecting manufacturing establishments. A dam was thrown across the stream about a mile above the beautiful village of Augusta. The river, which runs in the center of the river, 600 feet in length, was built of henlock logs from one foot to three feet in diameter, locked together and well secured with iron bolts and iron nails, and the interstices filled with heavy stone. The base was 127 feet thick, the top was capped with stone, and the upper slope loaded with ballast and gravel, the height above the bed of the river, the whole length of the dam, being 42 feet, high ties at the foot of the dam 16 1/2 feet. On the west side was a lock of massive masonry, rising about 13 1/2 feet above the top of the rolling dam. At each end were sluices of heavy stone work, by which the water was to be drawn into canals and carried along the banks below to be poured on the wheels of machinery. The whole length of the dam from the abutments, locks, and sluices, could not have been less than about 1,000 feet. It raised a pond about 15 miles long, of the average breadth of 700 feet, and from 10 to 15 feet deep. The cost of the structure was very great; it has been estimated from 300,000 to $500,000. Extensive saw mills had been built on the west side of the dam, the manufacture of the lumber from it, from the northern townships. The plan was similar to that by which the waters of the Merrimack have been turned from their bed to operate the vast works at Lowell.

Had it been successful, in the capital of Maine, another city of corporations, with its streets of manufactories and miles of operatives might have been reared to rival the great workshops of production in Massachusetts.

The whole works were destroyed by a remarkable calamity. The Kennebec had been swelled by the recent rains, and on Friday afternoon the river began to sweep to rival the great workshops of production in Massachusetts. LIET. McKENZIE. We cheerfully give place to the annexed testimonial to the character and efficiency, as a naval commander, of lieut. Sidell Mackenzie.

N. Y. American.
Monticello March 24, 1839.
The U. S. brigantine Dolphin, Alexander Sidell Mackenzie commander, left way on the 21st instant, bound to various ports in Brazil and thence to the United States.

Although bound to his own loved home, where many and dear friends are anxiously waiting to greet and welcome him, we cannot allow the occasion to pass without expressing our sincere regret at the departure of this efficient and gallant officer. He has been eminently useful to his countrymen, and has afforded assistance to many of the natives who required his protection in the various political changes of these countries. He carries with him with scarcely a dissenting voice, the best wishes of all who know him, either personally or by reputation.

Without reference to the conduct of any previous commanders, we do hope that in future the "Brazilian station" may be favored with men, who like lieut. Mackenzie, will not allow the rights of their countrymen to be trampled upon with impunity. In no instance during his brief command here did he suffer a foreign power to obtain a single advantage, or suffer a single wrong to be done to any of our citizens. All who are conversant with, or interested in the business of the river La Plata, will remember his decision and firmness in the cases of the American bark Madonna and schooner Fleet, and the good results obtained by the steps he took in regard to those vessels.

As we said before, we are sorry to part with lieut. Mackenzie, and we wish him well wherever fate may lead him. We are no prophets if his future career be not a brilliant one, should circumstances call him to unsheathe his sword in defence of his country's rights.

BRANDING. The Army and Navy Chronicle, in noticing the account of the recent "branding and whipping" of two soldiers at Detroit, states that the branding, as it is termed, does not mean searing with a hot iron, but signifies merely the marking of each man with Indian ink, which is a part of the person so that recruiting officers may not be imposed upon hereafter. The infliction of corporal punishment by stripes or lashes, is allowed by the 7th section of the act of 1853, March 2, on any enlisted soldier who shall be convicted of the crime of desertion. This section should be repealed, and the punishment of branding more abhorrent to the feelings, more calculated to break the spirit, than the infliction of this description of punishment.

VISIT TO THE COUNT DE SURVILLIERS. From the New Jersey State Gazette. On Friday last the governor and court of appeals, the judges of the supreme court, senators Southard and Wood, the chief justice, the quartermaster general and a number of gentlemen engaged in public business in Trenton, dined with the count de Survilliers. The respect for the state authorities and our institutions, manifested as well by the previous invitation as by the cordial and unaffected hospitality with which the guests were received, and the elegant and hospitable manner in which the count de Survilliers has secured the highest place in our esteem by a long course of benevolence and urbanity toward private individuals, and of attachment to our public institutions, inferior only to his devotion to his beloved France.

It is painful to those who sincerely admire the venerable exile, to know that his mental vision is fast backward turning to the "past," and the recent decrease of a favorite daughter has added another to the sorrows which press upon his heart. He seeks to mitigate his griefs by amiable arts: by the personal superintendence of his wide and highly cultivated domains, by co-operating with nature to produce pleasing prospects and sylvan shades, by acts of munificent hospitality, and the gratuitous dispensations of a benefactor that knows no limit, and is more than the application of the benevolent inscription on one of his marbles.
"Non ignara mali, miscris succurere disco."

IMPORTANT DECISION. The circuit court of the United States has decided that the late law of congress, concerning steamboats, is not applicable to boats navigating the Mississippi river. There are nearly one hundred and fifty suits, to which this decision is applicable. The case before the court was that of the United States vs. Captain Price, on an information, that the said captain had not complied with the act of congress in procuring iron tiller ropes for the use of his boat.

This decision was founded on the following case: The United States vs. the captains of several steamboats. The suite against Captain Price, and other captains of steamboats, by consent of parties, was transferred from the Louisiana district court to this tribunal, on the understanding that the decision of the United States circuit court, in these cases, should regulate the several suits now pending on the same question.

A case agreed upon by the counsel for the several parties, admitted the facts, that these boats were engaged in the navigation of the Mississippi, but that some were merely running within the boundaries of this state, and that they had wheel or tiller ropes in place of iron rods or chains.

The law points, therefore, arising from the above case, were,
1. The constitutionality of this law, and
2d. The applicability of the law to the waters of the Mississippi.

Mr. Sidell, attorney for the United States, on the first question, namely, constitutionality of the law, contended at length, and cited authorities in support of his argument, that congress had a right to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, by the U. S. States, and that the intercourse of countries, that the waters of the Mississippi are waters of the United States, and can be acted on by congress wherever they are found; that vessels which have taken out their license to navigate, and are enrolled as coasters, are strictly under the authority of the United States, and subject to the laws of the United States. That by the law of the 18th February, 1793, coasting is held to mean intercourse, not only between different states by sea, but by navigable rivers running through several states to mean different districts in the same state, but different points in the same state, inasmuch as it has been decreed by the supreme court of New York, that a voyage from New York to Albany, by the Hudson, is not a coasting voyage as from New York to Bedford by sea. That these vessels having taken out a coasting license and enrolled themselves pursuant to the United States laws, are under the control of the general government, and if they accept of the privileges conferred by this license, cannot divert themselves of the restrictions of the law to the Mississippi river, counsel remarked that in this act congress had two objects in view, the safety of passengers, and preservation of property; and that though the title of the act (namely, passengers merely) was deficient, yet that this deficiency was cured by the body of the act, which related to passengers, navigation, commerce, &c. and that the section 9, contended that this defective title would swallow up the entire act. In referring to the laws of the last session passed by our state legislature, counsel contended they were incompatible with the rights of the federal government, who alone had control over the commerce of the country, and that any other supposing would be absurd, inasmuch as the act of congress on this subject, that from the difference of views, parties and local interests, the laws of each state would be at variance with those of the others.

In referring to the words of the steamboat law, counsel contended that though section 8 related merely to vessels at sea or on the lakes, yet that section 9, contained the words, "and the said congress enact universally, and to include all vessels and extend its enactments to the southern waters."

FOREIGN NEWS.

Further extracts from papers received by the Great Western.

The Glasgow Chronicle states that a company is forming in that city, for carrying passengers and merchandise between the Clyde and New York, in an iron steambot of great power and capacity, which shall go at the rate of 16 miles an hour, and make the voyage in 10 days. Capital £50,000.

The queen gave a brilliant ball—her first state ball in fact—at the palace on Friday. Every thing appears to have been conducted in a very magnificent style.—Four rooms were opened for dancing, and the rest of the state rooms were variously used for the reception room, drawing room and supper room. There were canopies in all the rooms, under which were placed thrones for the queen, and seats for the royal visitors—the etiquette being, we believe, that none but royalty shall sit in the queen's presence! There was an exhibition of statues from the antique, and the busts of Socrates, and other philosophers. There were portraits of George III, queen Charlotte, the duke of Kent, the princess Charlotte, and there were choice flowering shrubs and exotics, hired for the occasion. All was very grand—and, for all, John Bull pays.

Among the royal visitors were, the dukes of Kent, duchess of Gloucester, duke and duchess of Cambridge, and princess Augusta of Cambridge, the grand duke of Russia, countess of Cambridge, Henry of Holland, the duke of Wellington, earl Gray, lord Durham, lord Melbourne, and most of the ex-ministry, Bulwer, and so on.

John Van Buren was a guest, as were Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson, (of the embassy,) Mr. Benjamin Rusli, and Mr. H. B. Livingston.

From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

On Tuesday, the 7th of May, the whigs resigned, as our readers know, and both houses adjourned to Friday. The queen, according to the London Herald, was deeply affected when lords Cottenham and Melbourne definitively announced to her that the whig ministry was extinct—affected even to tears. Her majesty wished to send for lord Normanby, and entrust to him the formation of the new cabinet; but lord Melbourne honestly advised her to call in the duke of Wellington, and place the country unreservedly in his hands.

The duke waited upon the queen, and advised her to place the formation of the new cabinet in the hands of sir Robert Peel—thinking it most proper that the prime minister should be a member of the house of commons. On Wednesday, therefore, sir Robert was appointed first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer—receiving, of course, a carte blanche for the ministerial arrangements.

Thursday the cabinet was constructed as follows: Lord chancellor, lord Lyndhurst.

President of the council, duke of Wellington?

First lord of the treasury, and chancellor of the exchequer, sir Robert Peel.

Foreign secretary, earl of Aberdeen.

Colonial secretary, lord Stanley.

Home secretary, sir James Graham.

These arrangements were announced in the Morning Post of Friday.

But on Thursday night the Peel ministry was already at an end. The actual cause of this event are differently related by the whig and tory papers—the former alleging that sir Robert, with an amount of exaction that was scarcely courteous, and certainly not prudent, demanded the immediate dismissal of all the ladies composing her majesty's household; and that the queen indignantly refused to comply; with this demand, saying, "I would rather be reduced to the level of a subject, than be deprived of the society of those to whom I am personally attached, and who have been the friends of my childhood."

The tory journals, on the other hand, say that the demand of sir Robert was only for such a proportionate change in the household appointments as should give evidence to the country that the ministers enjoyed her majesty's confidence, and that parties who had ceased to be responsible could no longer exercise an influence upon the royal mind. The Times gives the names of the ladies whose removal was considered by sir Robert indispensable; namely, the dutchess of Sutherland and the countess of Burlington, both sisters to lord Morpeth, lady Charlemont, and the marchioness of Noroumby.

Be this as it may, however, both parties insisted, and sir Robert accordingly tendered his resignation, which was at once accepted, and the queen recalled lords Melbourne and John Russell to their posts. The "explanations" will tell the rest.

In the meantime it is clear that sir Robert has committed a blunder—unless indeed he was satisfied that he could not sustain himself, either with the present house of commons or with the result of a new election—which, perhaps, is the real truth of the matter.

But, if sir Robert was actually expected and intended to remain in office, his movement respecting such accessions of strength in the house of commons as time might give him, and by gradually effecting the changes he thought necessary, he would at once have spared the queen's feelings and gained the power to compel her acquiescence; as it is, he has given her majesty the advantage, by treating her with apparent barshness, and enlisting the sympathies of the country in her behalf—as is abundantly shown in the multitudes of addresses pouring in from all parts of the kingdom, approving and applauding her course, and expressing the warmest satisfaction with its result.

The explanations, it will be seen, were made in the house of commons on the 13th, and in the house of lords on the 14th; and both houses subsequently adjourned to the 27th.

The papers, as may be supposed, abound with rumors of approaching cabinet changes. We give the following, from the Standard (tory) as a specimen:

Lord John Russell, lord Palmerston, and Mr. Spring Rice, it is said, retire from the cabinet, and are to be raised to the peerage. Lord Morpeth succeeded lord John Russell, at the home office, and is leader in the house of commons; lord Durban to a foreign secretary; Mr. Charles Buller, under secretary; Mr. Poulet Thompson to be chancellor of the exchequer.

That lord Durban will come in we think not very improbable, as his quarrel with the court seems to be made up; for, we observe that he was present at the queen's first state ball for the season, in the evening of the 10th.

[N. Y. Com. House of commons—Monday, May 13.]

Sir R. Peel, lord Stanley, and other leading conservative members, entered the house at twenty minutes before 5 o'clock, and took their usual seats on the opposition benches.

Lord J. Russell entered the house at ten minutes before 5 o'clock. The noble lord was loudly cheered by the ministerial benches, which were met with counter cheers from the opposition side. The scene at this moment was one of the most animated descriptions.

Ministerial explanations.

Lord J. Russell rose, and, speaking in a very low tone of voice, said: Mr. Speaker, since I last addressed this house, stating the resignation of lord Melbourne and his colleagues, the right honorable gentleman opposite—[cries of speak out. At this moment considerable noise was occasioned by lowering the lustres, for the purpose of lighting the candles. The noble lord appeared somewhat disconcerted at the interruption, and at the suggestion of several honorable members, resumed his seat during the process of lighting the candles. The operation being completed.]

Lord J. Russell resumed: Sir, since I had the honor of addressing the house, the right honorable baronet, the member for Lancashire, received her majesty's authority to present to her a plan for the formation of a new administration. My attempt having failed, her majesty has been most graciously pleased to grant to the right honorable gentleman her full permission to state all the circumstances of that negotiation. What I now propose is, that the right honorable gentleman should take the opportunity of making his statement; and when he has done so, I shall state to the house the reasons which have induced me and my right honorable friends to take back those places which we recently tendered to her majesty. What I now propose is, that this house, at its rising, do adjourn to Wednesday next, and on that day it is my intention to move that, at its rising, it adjourn to the Friday in Whitsun week.

Sir R. Peel then addressed the house to the following effect:—

Mr. Speaker, I have reserved to this place and to this occasion, the explanation which I feel it to be my duty to offer, and to which I am bound to refer. I have indicated to me to relinquish the attempt of forming a new administration for conducting the government of the country. In the outset of this explanation, I trust that it is not necessary for me to discuss any sanction on my part of statements which have appeared before the public relating to this subject. Such statements were made without my sanction, and without my wishes, if my wishes could have prevented them. [Hear, hear.] I could most willingly forego all personal considerations on this occasion, and willingly bear any obloquy that might perhaps attach to me by my silence as to recent circumstances, but some of those circumstances were of so important and interesting a character, connected as they were with a pending change in the whole administration of the country, and the practice which has so long prevailed of forming the house of such matters, that my private feelings give way to what I feel to be the duty of entering into explanation of them in the face of this house and the country. [Hear, hear.] I am fully aware of the difficulties which attend all such explanations, and there are some which are peculiar to the present case. From a portion of these, which would otherwise be insuperable, I have been relieved by her majesty's most kind and gracious permission to give an explanation of the circumstances under which I relinquish the attempt to form an administration. For such permission I applied yesterday to lord Melbourne. It is unnecessary for me, I presume, to read my own letter on the subject. The answer to it I received from lord Melbourne, dated South street, May 12, was—lord Melbourne presents his compliments to sir R. Peel, and having already in expectation of such a request, taken her majesty's pleasure on the subject, he feels himself authorized at once to signify to sir R. Peel her majesty's full permission to explain the circumstances under which he relinquishes the attempt to form an administration, and with that view to make use of the correspondence with her majesty, that took place on the 10th of May." After this gracious permission, no one will, I presume, doubt that I am fully authorized to enter upon this explanation. In doing so, my chief anxiety is, that I may be fully mindful of the sacred obligations under which I am placed, to act with justice and impartiality toward the illustrious lady who is connected with these transactions.

Sir, under any circumstances, I trust that I should feel the full force of that obligation; but if any thing could add to the strength of that duty, it would be the relation in which I have so lately stood to my sovereign, and the intercourse which I have been graciously permitted to hold with her. Sir, it is well known, that in the progress of an attempt to form an administration much communication will pass, and many circumstances will occur, which necessarily enter into such an explanation as I am now making to the house; it is not, therefore, necessary for me to interrupt the statement of the more important facts of the case, by introducing matters which do not bear on those facts; but it, in the course of my statement, I should be thought to omit any important circumstance, or if the noble lord (John Russell) or any other member of the house will invite farther explanation on any point, I shall most readily give it, for I am most anxious that this house and the public mind should be most fully informed as to every material fact that has occurred. If the noble lord will put any question, or suggest any further elucidation as to any part of my statement, I shall most readily answer any question, or give any explanation that I can, with any reserve or qualification whatever. Sir, I will now proceed, therefore, to state those facts which appear to me to have the slightest reference to any matters requiring to be explained.

I waited on her majesty by desire at 2 o'clock on Wednesday, the 8th of May. Her majesty had previously seen the duke of Wellington and had invited him to assist her in the formation of a government. The duke of Wellington had informed her majesty that the chief difficulty of a government would be in the house of commons, and therefore, partly on other considerations, but chiefly on that, advised her majesty to send for one who would have the advantage of being heard in the commons as her majesty's minister, and at the same time, from me, the ministerial benches.] Her majesty in consequence, and was asked whether I was willing to assist her majesty in forming a new administration, that she had parted with her late advisers with great reluctance and regret. [Hear, hear, from the ministerial benches.] Her majesty added, that her late ministers had in all respects given her entire satisfaction, but that in consequence of their resignation, it became necessary to take steps to form a new administration. It is unnecessary for me to go into a detail of all that was said, but I must say that no one could have expressed more fully, more naturally, or more becomingly, the high sense she entertained of the services of her late ministers, and her regret at their loss, nor at the same time could any one have expressed principles more strictly constitutional with respect to the formation of a new government. [Hear.]

I did not hesitate to state to her majesty that I was not insensible to the great difficulties with which I had to contend in the performance of the task she had been pleased to confide to me, but that having been a party to the necessity of forming a new administration, I felt it a paramount obligation on me to render her majesty every assistance and power, as much as if I myself had been the cause of the difficulties in which she had been placed. I therefore, at her majesty's command undertook to form an administration, and I proposed to her majesty that I should return on the following day, hoping that in the interim I should be able to arrange such a list as would secure the administration of the chief executive offices of the state, and to show to her majesty and to the country that I was prepared promptly and energetically to perform the duty I had undertaken. [Hear, hear.] I conferred, in the course of the day, (on Wednesday), with those with whom I had the more immediate opportunity of so doing, and I requested that they would permit me to submit their names for her majesty's approval, and constituting a part of the government. The names I referred to were eight. They were the following: the duke of Wellington, lord Lyndhurst, the earl of Aberdeen, lord Ellenborough, lord Stanley, sir James Graham, Mr. Goulburn and sir Henry Hardinge. On the following day I waited on her majesty, and submitted those names for her approval, and at the same time stated to her majesty, that while the duke of Wellington placed his services entirely at her majesty's disposal, his own inclination would still be more gratified if he were permitted to hold a place in the cabinet without office, he taking the lead in the house of lords (as the right honorable baronet was understood to say). Her majesty expressed a particular wish that the duke of Wellington should hold some important office. [Hear.] I told her majesty that I should, of course, convey her wish to the noble duke, at the same time assuring her majesty that I had no doubt that he would readily forego any private inclination of his own, and consent take any office, however important, at her majesty's wish. [Hear, hear.] No question arose up to this time, either, as to the formation of the government, or as to its conduct, on which I feel it necessary to remark. Her majesty conceded at once without reserve, all that could be wished or expected, as far as related to offices in the household filled by noblemen or gentlemen holding seats in the or the other house of parliament. The difficulty related altogether to the situations in which I should be filled by ladies. In reference to this point, I think it much better on mature consideration, that I should, at the first instance, enter into no statements as to impressions of what passed, but that I should confine myself exclusively to what actually did pass. Because if I were here to state impressions, I should be stating only those which were my own, and arising from communications that passed where two parties only were present, and I must bear in mind that I alone am here to tell them. [Hear, hear.]

On the Wednesday evening, then, I had an opportunity of consulting at my own house with those friends whose names I was to present to her majesty's approval on the next day. I stated to them—and there are now four of them present, who heard what passed—they are my most tried and my best friends the members for the Cambray, my right hon. friend the member for the Cambray University, (Mr. Goulburn), and my right hon. friend the member of Pembroke, (sir J. Graham), and my right hon. and gallant friend the member for Launceston, (sir H. Hardinge). I stated to them and to the other friends already named the course which I intended to take with respect to the household. In fact, before this, I had very little considered the household, and had very little information respecting it. I now speak of that portion of its offices which were held by ladies. I took the red book, and there saw the several departments of the household:

I said to those who were intended to be my future colleagues that with respect to all those ladies of the household who were below the rank of a lady of the bed chamber, I should suggest no change to her majesty, [cheers from the opposition benches]; but with respect to the superior offices to be held by ladies, I expressed a hope that those of them who were in immediate connexion with my political affairs would immediately relieve the new government from any further trouble on the question of voluntarily resigning. [Loud cheering on the opposition side of the house.] At the same time I stated that I did think it of much importance, as conveying an intimation of her majesty's entire confidence and support, that some change should be made with respect to some of the higher offices of the household filled by ladies, and I did express the names of the ladies of the bedchamber. I said, that even in some instances of these, where there was not any strong political connexion, I did not think any change would be necessary. This passed on the Wednesday evening; and I mentioned it merely as an indication of my willingness that any blame arising from any imperfection of my explanation, or from any misconception as to that explanation, should attach to me only. I said, however, as respects the Thursday—and here I repeat, I shall confine myself, unless pressed to it, to the letters that passed between her majesty and me. Early on the Friday morning, May the 10th, I had the honor to receive the following letter from her majesty:—

“Buckingham palace, May 10, 1839.

“The queen having considered the proposal made to her yesterday by sir Robert Peel to remove the ladies of her bedchamber, cannot consent to adopt a course which she conceives to be contrary to usage and which is repugnant to her feelings.”

In three hours after the receipt of her majesty's note, I addressed the following letter to her majesty:

“Whitehall, May 10, 1839.

“Sir Robert Peel presents his humble duty to your majesty, and has had the honor of receiving your majesty's note of this morning.

“In respectfully submitting to your majesty's pleasure, and humbly returning into your majesty's hands the important trust which your majesty had been graciously pleased to commit to him, sir Robert Peel trusts that your majesty will permit him to state to your majesty his impression with respect to the circumstances which have led to the termination of his attempt to form an administration for the conduct of your majesty's service.

"In the interview with which your majesty honored sir R. Peel yesterday morning, after he had submitted to your majesty the names of those whom he proposed to recommend to your majesty for the principal executive appointments, he mentioned to your majesty his earnest wish to be enabled, with your majesty's sanction, so to constitute your majesty's household, that your majesty's confidential servants might have the advantage of a public demonstration of your majesty's full support and confidence, and that at the same time, as far as possible, consistently with that demonstration, each individual appointment in the household should be entirely acceptable to your majesty's personal feelings.

"On your majesty expressing a desire that the earl of Liverpool should hold an office in the household, sir Robert Peel requested your majesty's permission at once to offer to lord Liverpool the office of lord steward, or any other which he might prefer.

"Sir Robert Peel then observed, that he should have every wish to apply a similar principle to the chief appointments which are filled by the ladies of your majesty's household; upon which your majesty was pleased to remark, that you must reserve the whole of those appointments, and that it was your majesty's pleasure that the whole should continue as at present without any change.

"The duke of Wellington, in the interview to which your majesty subsequently admitted him, understood also that this was your majesty's determination, and concurred with sir Robert Peel in opinion that, considering the great difficulties at the present crisis, and the expediency of making every effort, in the first instance, to conduct the public business of the country with the aid of the present parliament, it was essential to the success of the commission with which your majesty had honored sir Robert Peel, that he should have that public proof of your majesty's entire support and confidence which would be afforded by the permission to make some changes in that part of your majesty's household which your majesty resolved on maintaining entire without change.

"Having had the opportunity, through your majesty's gracious consideration, of reflecting upon this point, he humbly submits to your majesty, that he is reluctantly compelled, by a sense of public duty, and of the interests of your majesty's service, to adhere to the opinion which he ventured to express to your majesty.

"He trusts he may be permitted, at the same time, to express to your majesty his grateful acknowledgments for the distinction which your majesty conferred upon him, by requiring his advice and assistance in the attempt to form an administration, and his earnest prayer that whatever arrangements your majesty may be enabled to make for that purpose, may be most conducive to your majesty's personal comfort and happiness, and to the promotion of the public welfare."

Sir, although I may not be allowed to enter into any statements as to what occurred at that time, yet I may be permitted to refer to the reports that have arisen as to the individuals whom I proposed for officers in the household. [Hear.] Sir, I can only say that these are the single names which I submitted to her majesty for any appointment in her majesty's household. The first was the earl of Liverpool, whom her majesty had wished to hold some office in the household, and the only two other names which I proposed, and which I declare I did exclusively from an impression that they would be most acceptable to her majesty, were those of my noble friend the member for Dorsetshire, if I could persuade him to lay aside his strong sense of public duty and accept of office, and of my noble friend lord Sidney, with the same motive. [Hear.] I have also heard it said, sir, that I proposed an universal dismissal of the ladies of the household, [hear,] and among them one of the earliest friends of her majesty—the baroness Lehzen. [Hear hear.] I heard that stated, sir, on the evening of Friday, but my answer to the person who informed me of the report was, that this was the first time for the last four years that the name of that lady had occurred to me, and that I had never mentioned it to her majesty—[cheers from the opposition;] and I must refer with respect to my intentions—still, however charging myself with all blame for the intentions which I held as to consulting her majesty's household—to the testimony of my honorable friends who are now sitting near me. [Hear.] Sir,

I did decline to undertake the duty of forming an administration on the understanding that the whole of the appointments in her majesty's household that were held by ladies should, without exception, continue unchanged. I did come to that conclusion—[hear, hear;] but I did it on public considerations, and from a sincere belief that it was impossible to encounter the difficulties with which I was encompassed in attempting to conduct public affairs, unless I had the most unequivocal proofs of her majesty's confidence. Sir it appeared to me, that never was there a time when a demonstration of that sincere confidence and support was more absolutely necessary than the present. [Cheers from the opposition.]

The duties of the office of prime minister are, as I conceive, the most arduous, the most important, that any human being can be called upon to perform, [cheers;] it is the greatest trust, almost without exception, in the whole civilized world, that can fall on any individual. [Cheers.] Sir, I was ready to undertake that office; but could I look around me in the present condition of public affairs, and not see that it was my absolute duty to myself, to this great country, and above all to her majesty, to require every aid that could possibly be given to me? [Cheers from the opposition.] What were the questions, sir, that immediately presented themselves for my consideration? The state of Lujo, the state of Jamaica, and the state of Canada, would all require my immediate consideration, and would call, perhaps, for some proportion of legislative measures. I should have had also to consider the state of this country, with insurrection rife in many of its provinces, rendering it necessary, according to the letter published by the noble lord, that all the respectable persons in the country should unite in endeavoring to suppress these disturbances. [Hear, hear.] But in addition to these public questions, was there ever a time when such duties were so peculiarly arduous? [Cheers from the opposition.] Sir, on seeing the present agitated condition of the country, I considered that it would be my duty to endeavor to conduct public affairs through the intervention of the present parliament. [Cheers.]

I did not think it would be advisable to follow the course pursued in 1834, and have a dissolution of parliament. On considering the state of the country, notwithstanding the balance of parties in the house, I thought if my duty in the first place to her majesty, the present house of commons. [Hear.] But what is my condition in the present parliament? I should be the government with a minority. [Cheers and counter-cheers.] I did not come from the functions that were proposed to me, but could I be insensible of the difficulties with which I must have to contend, or overlook this fact, that in the house of commons I did not commence with a majority? [Cheers and counter-cheers.] If, then I began the administration of public affairs without the confidence of the house of commons, could I ask for less than that I should have the entire and unqualified confidence of the crown? [Cheers and counter-cheers.] Her majesty's ministers retired on the question of Jamaica, with a majority of five. I should have had to undertake the settlement of the affairs of Jamaica with a minority of five; and that minority consisting, amongst others, of gentlemen on whose support most probably I could not place much dependence in future. [Cheers and laughter.]

But the conflict I should have had to fight would have been the selection of a speaker. On the very first day on which I took my seat as prime minister of this great country, and as a member of her house of commons, I should have had perhaps to risk the fate of the government, or been driven to a dissolution of parliament, on the choice of speaker [Hear.] Sir, all these considerations impressed me with the deepest convictions that it was my public duty, that it was an indispensable duty on my part, a duty I owed to the queen, to seek for every possible demonstration that I possessed her majesty's entire confidence; and I confess to you, sir, without reserve or hesitation, that it did appear to me that if some of the chief officers of the household were held by relatives of those ministers whom I had displaced [vociferous cheering from the opposition, returned by the ministerial side.] and who are my rivals for political power [continued cheering.] I say, sir, it did appear to me, that I never could improve the country with a conviction that I possessed her majesty's confidence. [Cheers and counter-cheers.]

Let me take that particular question on which my difficulty would particularly rest. Who can disguise from himself the conviction that my difficulty would not be the state of Canada—nor the state of Jamaica; but that it really would be the question of Ireland? [Cheers and counter-cheers.]

No, sir, I admit it fully. What would have been the facts? I should have undertaken the office of prime minister, wishing to carry on public affairs through the intervention of this house of commons, if possible; in order to save this country from the agitation, and perhaps perils, of a dissolution; and on the question of Ireland, I should have begun with a minority against a majority of twenty-two, who decided in favor of the policy of the present Irish government. The principal members of the present Irish government, whose policy was approved by a majority of this house, were the marquis of Normandy and the noble lord opposite, the marquis of Normandy. Sir, the two chief officers of the household that are filled by ladies are held by the wife of the noble lord and the wife of the marquis of Normandy. [Cheers.] I say not a word in reference to those ladies, that is not prompted by every feeling of respect, for they are persons who cast the highest lustre on the court, less by their rank than their own eminent merits, [cheers;] but I ask any one whether they think it would be possible that I could safely undertake the conduct of an administration and the management of Irish affairs in this house, consenting as a previous stipulation that the whole of the ladies who now form part of the household should continue to fill their present offices? [Great cheering and counter-cheering.] Sir, the policy of these things depends not upon precedents, not upon what was done at other times, but mainly rests upon the consideration of the present period. [Hear, hear.]

The household has assumed a political character [cheers from the opposition,] on account of the appointment that have been made to it by her majesty. I do not complain of it; it may have been wise to place in the immediate offices of the household ladies connected with the members of the government; but when a change of that government takes place, it does embarrass the government if those ladies are to remain. [Cheers.] I do not mean to say that any unfair use may have been made of such opportunities; those ladies may have attended only to the duties of their office; but does not that question equally apply to the lords of the bedchamber? [Cheers.] The true question is, whether, in point of public impression, it would be considered that a minister had the confidence of the crown when the near relatives of his immediate political opponents were in the highest offices of the household. [Cheers.]

My impression was, that according to public opinion, I should not have the confidence of her majesty. It has been said, moreover, that in the event of any change in the government, the marquis of Normandy is a candidate for the office of prime minister; [hear, hear;] and the noble lord has been designated as the leader of the house of lords, [hear, hear, and a laugh from the opposition;] and I know not whether the talents of the noble marquis might not justify his holding that position, [cheers;] but, sir, I ask you to look to former times—take Mr. Pitt, Mr. Fox, or any other minister, and let me ask this question—during the severity of contest, should you, being prime minister, not object to the wife of your chief political opponent holding an office that placed her in immediate contact with her majesty? [Cheers and counter-cheers.] I felt, sir, it was impossible that I could contend successfully with all the difficulties by which I was surrounded, unless I had a proof of the entire confidence of the crown.

As I said before, I should begin without any certainty of a majority in the house of commons, and I should have to rely on an appeal to the good sense of many members for their support, and to the forbearance of others, to enable me to carry on the government, being perfectly prepared, on the failure of my attempt to govern with the present house of commons, to advise her majesty to resort to the only means which might enable me to retain my post. But if the agreement, if the understanding upon which I was to enter upon my office was, that I should encounter all those difficulties, and yet that the ladies of those who preceded me, of those with whom I was to be in daily conflict, were to be in immediate contact with the queen, and considering the political character given to the household, that I was to acquiesce in that, there was something still stronger than any personal consideration, and it was this, sir, that although the public would lose nothing by my abandonment, although the public would lose nothing by my personal exclusion from power; yet the public would lose, and I should be abandoning my duty to myself, to the country, and above all, to the queen, if I permitted as an understanding on my acceptance of office, that the ladies connected with my warmest political opponents, should continue to retain offices in the household—there was something that told me I must not undertake the office of prime minister of this great country. [Cheers.] Sir, I have endeavored to give this explanation in as fair and unexceptionable a manner as I can, and I owe it to truth to state that intervening reflections have only confirmed my previous impressions. [The right honorable baronet resumed his seat amidst loud cheering.]

THE FLORIDA WAR.

Gen. Macomb's report of his proceedings in Florida. Head quarters of the army of the U. S. Fort King, Florida, May 22, 1839.

SIR: Agreeably to the instructions I had the honor to receive from your hands at Washington, on the 20th of March last, I lost no time in repairing to Florida, and arrived at Black Creek, the general depot of the army, on the 5th of April. There I had the good fortune to meet with brigadier general Taylor, the commander of the forces in the territory, then on a tour of inspection and review of the troops, and, at the same time, engaged in his plan of dividing the country nearest to the settlement into squares of twenty miles, and establishing posts thereon. This fortunate meeting enabled me to place in the hands of general Taylor a copy of your instructions, and to give him orders to co-operate with me in carrying those instructions into effect, directing his attention particularly to the protection of the settlements along the line from Garey's Ferry to Tallahassee, and west of the latter place, authorising him at the same time to call into service such a force of militia as mentioned in your instructions. General Taylor, having him in interview, and Indians connected with the hostile party by ties of consanguinity and intermarriage, was desirous to open, if possible, a communication with them and thereby make them acquainted with the fact of my arrival in the country, and my wish to see the chiefs and warriors at this post by the 1st of May inst. to hold a conference with them.

Colonel Twigg, who was then commanding at Garey's Ferry, having military authority over a considerable extent of country, was also made acquainted with my instructions, and he rendered a ready and efficient aid in furthering my view. Colonel Warren of Jacksonville, who heretofore had command of the militia serving in Florida, and was highly recommended to me on account of his efficiency and activity as an officer, was invited to raise and take command, as lieutenant colonel, of a battalion of mounted militia, to assist in the defence of the settlements west of the Suwannee, and expel the Indians. Although he was incontinent to him at that time, on account of his private affairs, the colonel very promptly complied with my wishes. In the meanwhile, gen. Taylor was making arrangements with the governor of Florida in raising, for the defence of the settlements on the west of Suwannee, a military force. Notwithstanding all these measures, the Indians dividing themselves into small parties, penetrated the settlements, committed some murders, and fired from their coverts on the expresses and passengers going from post to post.

Under these circumstances, it was the general belief that no communications could be opened with the hostile parties, especially as it had been given out that the Indians would on no account receive any messenger, but would destroy any person that might approach them with a flag. This threat having been made, and more than once, confirmed the opinion that it was worse than unprofitable to attempt to communicate with them. Finding at Garey's ferry a party of prisoners, consisting of one man, and two well grown lads, and a number of women and children, amounting in all to eighteen, it occurred to me that, by treating them kindly, I might, through their instrumentality, communicate with the hostile bands. Accordingly, I set them at liberty, and sent them into the country in search of their friends; that they might make known to them and the Indians generally the object of my coming among them. Gen. Taylor had sent out his Indians, in whose sincerity and honesty he had great confidence. This first attempt to open a communication entirely failed, general Taylor's Indians having left him and joined the hostile party below Tampa, and those sent by me returned without seeing any whatever. In the mean time, reports were received of the continued hostilities of the Indians, and of their attacking defenceless people and killing them. According to my previous notification that I would be at this post by the 1st of May, I left Garey's ferry on the 25th of April, with a guard of dragoons, taking with me the prisoners previously mentioned, and again sent them off in search of their friends; but it was not (after remaining here) until the 9th inst. that any Indians called to visit me.

Knowing the slowness of the Indians in performing any matter of national importance, I did not yield to the general belief that none would attend my invitation, and I had the gratification to receive a visit from a young chief of considerable importance, accompanied by seven young active warriors. I explained to the chief the object of my mission, telling him that his great father (the president) was sorry that there had been so much fighting between his white and red children, and that for their good he recommended to them to cease firing on each other and to make peace. The chief expressed himself greatly delighted with the prospect of peace. I told him that if the whole nation would retire below Pease creek, hostilities would cease, and that they might remain there until further arrangements could be made. He again expressed his readiness at hearing what I said, and promised that he would take my communication and spread it round, being persuaded that it would be well received by all his people. In a few days after he collected a considerable party of his people, consisting of men, women and children, and paid me another visit. I repeated to him, in their presence, the same talk, and they seemed all pleased with it. I then made them some presents, after which they departed much gratified, for they were all in a most destitute condition as to clothing and other necessities.

On the 17th instant, lieut. col. Harney, of the 2d dragoons, who had previously received my directions to open a communication with the Indians in the southern portion of the peninsula, near Key Biscayne, arrived with Chitto Tustenuggee, principal chief of the Seminoles, who had been recently elected by a council held by the Seminoles and Micasauees. Chitto Tustenuggee expressed a great desire that the business on which he was called to meet me might be speedily attended to. Accordingly, on the next day, a meeting was held, composed of Chitto Tustenuggee, attended by O-che-Hadjo, a brother of Blue Snake, who came with him to witness the proceedings at the request of the council of the nation, and Harlock Hadjo, chief of the Micasauees in this section of the country, and all his band that had not been despatched by him to call in the warriors who were out in detached parties. After going through the usual ceremonies among Indians of shaking hands and smoking, I explained to the meeting who I was, and the object of my mission among them, at which they immediately evinced great satisfaction.

I then dictated to them the terms of peace, which they readily accepted, manifesting great joy on the occasion, and they have since been dancing and singing, according to their fashion, in token of friendship and peace, in which many of our officers joined them, all being satisfied of the sincerity of the respective parties. The enclosed general order, announcing the result of the conference, exhibits the terms of the peace. Under existing circumstances, I did not think it necessary to enter into a formal written treaty—such an instrument, with Indians, having but little binding effect. Nor did I think it politic, at this time, to say any thing about their emigration, leaving that subject open to such future arrangements as the government may think proper to make with them. No restriction upon the pleasure of the government in this respect has been imposed, nor has any encouragement been given to the Indians that they would be permitted permanently to remain in Florida.

There is every reason to believe that when the Indians remaining in Florida shall learn the prosperous condition of their brethren in Arkansas, they will, at no distant period, ask to be permitted to join them.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, ALEX. MACOMB, Major general commanding-in-chief.
Hon. J. R. POINSETT,
Secretary of war, Washington city.

THE PRICE OF COTTON.

The following circular has caused considerable excitement among the dealers in, and holders of, cotton. But there appears to be some doubt as to its authenticity, and particularly whether it is or is not a movement of the U. S. bank of Pennsylvania. The New York American says: "United States bank is the principal party to the circular, and that it has taken pains to satisfy itself that Mr. S. F. S. Wilder is authorized and prepared to make the advances which it promises." The Journal of Commerce is of the opinion that the U. S. bank is the "backbone of the proposition," and the Courier and Enquirer says, it has reason to believe that "it proceeds from a source, entitled from its standing, to hold the commanding language which it does on the subject to which it relates," and then remarks: "Considered as an attempt, to obtain consignments to a particular house, or to carry out its particular views in regard to the future state of the cotton market, we should not consider it within our province to animadvert upon it; yet if it be regarded as a systematic plan to regulate the price of our great staple—and its tenor warrants the conclusion that it does—it becomes a question of high public interest, and as such ought to be taken into consideration. Taking this view of it, therefore, we do not hesitate to express the opinion, that its tendency is injurious, for it aims by a combination of "powerful interests" to counteract the natural influence of actual demand or consumption upon prices, and though this may be successful, once or twice, it must at last prove detrimental to the planter, by inducing production to an extent which actual consumption does not warrant, and ruinous to all who embark their capital in the visionary attempt."

The Express, on the other hand, says: "We hear it confidently stated by those that ought to know, that the U. S. bank has nothing to do with it. They are neither the promoters nor the sustainers of the plan. There are various opinions as to the advantages and disadvantages of a measure of this sort, and there is much to be said for and against. We are not the advocates of bank monopoly, as our course in relation to them has often been made manifest. If, however, an individual or a number of individuals, get together and offer to the public to make advance on any of the principal staples of our country, and if not injurious to the public, we see no reason why they should not have the privilege and the right. It is "free trading" which is in accordance with the principles of our government."

The Journal of Commerce, in its evening edition of Saturday, says that the only effect of the circular on the market, was to cause holders to withdraw their cotton from market at the late prices, and that they were delighted with the movement.

The New York correspondent of the National Intelligencer, under date of Saturday evening, after stating that in the opinion of Wall street, "the United States bank is the responsible mover" of which, however, he says "there is no proof;"—thus writes:

If the bank of the United States has taken this responsibility, there is much to be said for it, and much against. The interference of banks in mercantile operations is, as a principal highly improper; but when, as in the case of the bank of England, there is a direct attack upon the great staple of a nation, so as to exact from that nation its specie instead of its staple, a patriotic, if not a proper operation is performed by the power that meets foreign by domestic combination. The drain of bullion upon the bank of England has compelled it for its own safety to try to turn the exchanges in favor of England, and it looks to America as having bullion to spare. "The monster" chooses, it is stated, to pay in cotton at present prices, and it offers to draw for any amount at 109 1/2.

Such a bold step this, so characteristic of Mr. BRIDLE, if it be his, naturally excited the money circles. It is the great topic of talk to-day. The money market feels sensibly relieved. The cotton holders are as happy as kings. The stocks are so tickled that they hardly know where to stand, but they have all "jumped up," and "the monster (which never jumps) has taken a stride of one per cent. The fact is, the monsters of John Bull and Brother Jonathan are about to have a little fight, and the stocks have no doubt that Brother Jonathan's monster will carry the day."

CIRCULAR.

New York, 6th June, 1839.
You have doubtless received the very unfavorable advices by the Great Western in relation to the cotton market. These advices it is apprehended, do not disclose even to the full extent, the dangerous situation in which our great staple is placed.

The diminished demand for yarn and cotton goods on the continent; the short harvest of the last year; the shipment of bullion from the bank of England; must all inevitably tend to a greater and more accelerated decline in prices, if some steps are not promptly taken to prevent the remaining stock of cotton now in the country from being offered for immediate sale in the European markets.

If the consumption of raw cotton in England had only diminished some 10 or 15 per cent. still in consequence of the low now clearly ascertained deficiency in the last year's crop, (which has fallen nearly as low as the lowest estimate of past prices) would not only have been safe to the shippers, but profitable, and hence they are not obnoxious to the charge of unwarrentable speculation, which so often deprives the spirit of rash commercial adventure of all just claim to sympathy.

This extraordinary falling off of the consumption of the raw material is, perhaps, not a little aided by a determination on the part of the English spinner to have the residue of the crop at his own price, under the belief that as the great and tenacious holder of the last year is out of the market, there exists no serious difficulty in his way, by working short hours for a few weeks, to accomplish a desirable end. It becomes necessary, therefore, to supply the absence of this great protector by some co-operation among individual interests.

Now, it is quite obvious, that but two moths would be likely to counteract the result that must otherwise inevitable flow from the causes just indicated.

The first would be to organize through the aid of the bank of the United States and the banks of the principal emporiums of the different states, a combination sufficiently powerful to advance a sum on each bag of cotton on this side of the water, which would ensure it being kept in this country for three months.

The other scheme would be to concentrate in one house in Liverpool, the whole or the greater part of the cotton now to go forward, by an arrangement for untailing adequate and collateral aids, sufficiently powerful to enable the house in question to hold over until a greater part of the present stock of cotton in England is worked off at an advanced price; a result which the successful execution of this plan would inevitably secure. The first scheme however is liable (notwithstanding its direct and immediate power to produce the desired result), to the conclusive objection of arresting all our foreign exchange operations, which might hazard the ability of our banks, even in the Atlantic states, to continue to make payments, whilst the last would be entirely free from this objection, as it would at once arrest at the current of exchanges and enable us to weather the crisis, which the first plan would be too apt to produce.

These views are the result of a conference which yesterday was held with one of the most influential and intelligent merchants of Philadelphia, in conjunction with commercial gentlemen of equally high standing from other portions of the union.

It is therefore announced to you on the best authority that an arrangement of the best and most advantageous nature that has been made, on what may be estimated as the present market price of cotton, say 14 cents) will be made on every bale in this country at all our principal shipping ports, to all holders, if they desire to avail themselves of the advantage. The consignments are to go forward to Humphreys & Biddle, who, sustained by adequate means or both sides of the water, will be able to hold on till prices vigorously rally.

If the usual casualties of the season render a short, or any thing under an average crop, probable this plan must result in great profits to shippers and benefit to our country. If, on the other hand, the autumn should disclose the promises of an abundant harvest, the large stock of cotton which Messrs. Humphreys & Biddle, in case the shipments made to them would hold, would probably induce the great and powerful interest which sustains them, to enter the market in the first quarter of the new year, by advancing on this side of the water for a reasonable period, so as to make the final result of the short crop of 1833 entirely safe to all American shippers and holders.

A copy of this circular is enclosed to the principal cotton factors and shippers, and presidents of the banks in the southern cities, to whom with all propriety and deference it is suggested, in case the advance on the shipment to Messrs. Humphreys & Biddle should not cover the full convenience of the shippers, that the institution over which they preside do offer, on good personal security, the residue of the accommodation which may be required.

Your hearty co-operation in this plan is solicited of saving the interests of our great staple which must end in establishing, not its speculative value, but its fair price, according to the just relationship, supply and consumption of each other. An agent empowered to more fully to disclose these views will be in your city in a few days, on his way to the south, and will be prepared to carry them fully into effect.

P. S.—From the most authentic sources of information, you may take the following as the probable and entire stock of cotton in the United States, of the crop of 1833, on the 15th day of June next ensuing—either actually present in depot or to come forward from the interior markets:

New Orleans,	100,000 bales.
Mobile,	25,000 do.
Florida,	12,500 do.
South Atlantic states,	50,000 do.
New York,	75,000 do.
At unenumerated points,	12,500 do.

285,000 bales.

Of this amount the manufacturing establishments of the United States will require at least 75,000 bales before the new crop comes into market, leaving about 210,000 bales for foreign export. It ought to be remarked, that the bales this year are 15 per cent. shorter in weight from the now general use of smaller compressing boxes with a view of rendering the cotton packages more portable.

N. B.—For obvious reasons it is not desired that this private circular should appear in the public prints—make otherwise what use you please of it.

LETTER OF MR. B. W. LEIGH,

To the committee of invitation of the dinner given to Mr. Rives in Amherst county
Richmond, May 15, 1839.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 19th inst. inviting me to the public dinner to be given to the hon. William C. Rives, at Amherst court house on the 20th, has been delayed on the road; I did not receive it till yesterday.

I thank you for the polite terms in which you have communicated the invitation. Business, which requires my constant attention at home, would have prevented me from availing myself of it, if it had been received in time. But candor compels me to add, that that would not have been the only, or indeed, the principal reason which would have induced me to decline it.

I have seen much in Mr. Rives' recent conduct to respect and approve. I am most desirous to see every man sustained against that despotism of party, wretched by the patronage of the executive, which allows no independence of thought or action, and which after having destroyed so many public men, is now levelled against Mr. Rives in his turn, with its usual ruthlessness of vengeance. After having seen the senate of the United States humbled and degraded in a manner struck out of our political system, it has afforded me particular pleasure to see Mr. Rives asserting and maintaining, in that body, his own independence of executive control, and at the same time, the independence, the dignity, and the just authority of the body itself. Such conduct ought to redeem him from the blame of many former errors and faults. I am even disposed to admit it as a partial atonement for his concurrence in the expunging resolution. He is now an object of persecution to the faction, whose baleful power he has contributed to establish; and I am really happy to see public honors bestowed upon him by others who take a different view from mine of the present state of politics. But so long as Mr. Rives holds himself wholly unacquainted of the subject of the presidential election, I cannot in honor and conscience, commit myself to the support of Mr. Rives—and at the same time I am aware that my support or opposition is utterly insignificant and inconsequential to him and every body else but myself.

While the doctrine stands admitted, that the president is entitled by the constitution to the custody of the public treasure, it is, in my humble opinion, a question of comparative insignificance, whether the system of sub-treasuries, or the select state bank system, with general or special deposits, or any other scheme for keeping the public treasure, which the wisdom of the legislature or the ingenuity of the executive can devise, shall be adopted; for, in effect, the custody of the public money, will still be in the president's hands. The doctrine itself, which it behooves the people to explode and condemn, as the most false, the most impudent, and the most dangerous, of all executive pretensions.

As regards the presidential election as in truth the only important question, the great question of national interest, which involves and absorbs all others, in the present juncture of affairs. Nothing, in my sense of things, can stop, or even check, the transition of the federal government into a mere elective monarchy, and a monarchy elective through the instrumentality of the most malignant faction and the foulest corruption, but the dismissal of the present rulers from the public councils and confidence forever; rulers I call them, for they are no masters in fact, whatsoever they ought to be in theory; and hard masters too, who maintain and pay the army of partizans on which they depend for power, by openly and avowedly dealing on the honor and emoluments of office, without the least regard to any merit but party zeal and party services. In one instance (and I believe in many more) an officer, after having received and appropriated public money to his own use, has been knowingly permitted to retain his office, and to enjoy the spoils, in order to secure the continuance of his own and his friends' support of the administration, and the cabinet minister, who was president Jackson's instrument in this gross and indecent abuse of executive patronage, is still president Van Buren's secretary of the treasury. Corruption is raising her head without shame, without fear, and (so far as the dominant faction and the reigning dynasty is concerned) without reproach. The stimulus to the agrarian spirit administered by the government at Washington, through all its organs—the cry of the poor against the rich, which has been willfully and successfully raised—the clamor against all intemperance in the administration of justice, which is but the prelude to an assault on the principle of property—those disgusting professions of ultra-democracy, louder and louder, always in proportion to their conscious insincerity, and the success of these odious and dishonest arts; these are symptoms of degeneration from our republican institutions, the nature and tendencies of which are not to be mistaken by any man who has bestowed the least attention to the history of the progress and downfall of republican governments. And unless the practice of these arts can be signally rebuked, by discarding from office the unpopularity or the guilty man, who, willfully or by compulsion, is the leader, or the tool of the faction which practices them, I for one shall cease to have any hope of the republic. In fine, I must insist, that Mr. Rives and every honest man who thinks as he thinks of the merits of his administration, ought to stand forth with Mr. Tallmadge, and proclaim an unflinching hostility to the election of Martin Van Buren.

I have written this letter to avert the possibility of any misunderstanding of my own opinions by those who have thought proper to honor me with the invitation which you have communicated to me. Whether these opinions are right or wrong, as I entertain them, it is but honest to avow them. But I am by no means desirous that you shall publish them—though I have no objection to your doing so, if you think proper.

I am, gentlemen, with all respect your obedient servant,

B. W. LEIGH.

AGRICULTURE AND DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.

The annexed petition to the legislature of Pennsylvania praying encouragement to agriculture and domestic manufactures, justly sets forth the importance of a new enactment for this purpose. The act of 6th March, 1820, granted money to the agricultural societies to be bestowed in premiums for encouragement of the art. The act of 21st March, 1821, was for the same purpose, but more especially had relation to the agricultural society of the county of Philadelphia.

To the honorable the senate and house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the undersigned respectfully represent:

That having been appointed by the "Philadelphia Society for promoting agriculture" to request a revival of the law passed on the 30th of March, 1821, entitled, "An act supplementary to an act for the promotion of agriculture and domestic manufactures," they deem it respectful to state, very briefly, the reasons which recommend that measure.

To a commonwealth of farmers, as Pennsylvania is, and to a legislature like ours, consisting mainly of cultivators of the soil, it would be superfluous to speak of the importance and value of agriculture. It is admitted to be the basis of the prosperity of our country.

It occupies most of us—it feeds all of us,—and on its success mainly depends the comfort and happiness of the great mass of the people of Pennsylvania. Now it cannot be dis-embled that, while the other occupations of life have, within the last twenty years, received an impulse, which has driven them forward with unexampled rapidity, the pursuit of farming have been comparatively stationary. During that period there has come up among men a new power which has changed the habits and fortunes of the world.—The union of the two most hostile elements, hitherto deemed incapable of association has opened to commerce the most distant regions of the earth, and has given to manufactures the means of multiplying a thousand fold the power of human hands. By these improvements have not yet reached agriculture.—They pass down our rivers, they rush over the surface of our farms, but leave no trace on the soil.—This should not be. Agriculture must in turn receive her share of these advances. Nor should we be deterred from attempting to improve it by an indisposition to what are considered novelties—a sentiment quite unworthy of this age, and especially of this country, which, far more than any other, is the country of progress and of improvement. Nearly all the improvements of our age were derived as innovations until they were suddenly hailed as blessings. Nor is it at all extravagant to anticipate, that, by the inventive genius of our country-en, the gigantic powers engaged in transporting goods will soon be employed to create it; a function quite as vital, and to which it is undoubtedly best destined. There are, besides new powers, to be applied to the operations of husbandry, new processes of cultivation, new implements of farming, new animals, new plants, to be naturalized from foreign climates, every one of which could not fail to bestow real benefits on the state.

That the progress of these is slower in farming than in any other pursuits, is probably owing to the facts, that farmers are, from the nature of their residence, more insulated—less acquainted with distant occurrences—less excitable than crowded communities—with less communion of thought about their own interests, to invite improvements, and less accumulation of capital to reward them. These incidents inseparable from the farming interests, seem to justify a more active assistance from the legislature than other pursuits require. In truth since the commencement of Pennsylvania has expended nearly thirty millions of dollars in making canals and roads and means of transporting the productions of the soil, it should not be deemed unnatural, or inconsistent with true economy, to apply a very small portion of the public funds to the purpose of rendering these productions more valuable and abundant.

The legislature of Pennsylvania is judged in passing the laws of the 6th of March, 1820, and the 30th of March, 1821, avowedly giving the aid of the public funds for the promotion of agriculture and domestic manufactures. These laws proved highly advantageous to the farming interest during their existence, but being limited in their duration, it require the action of your honorable bodies to revive them. Such a revival, so far at least as respects the act of the 30th March, 1821, which is confined to the city and county of Philadelphia, is now respectfully asked on behalf of the "Philadelphia Society for promoting agriculture." They wish it under a deliberate belief that it will be greatly for the benefit of the Commonwealth, and an assurance that so far as the duties devolve on the society, they will be executed in a manner satisfactory to your honorable bodies.

SOUTH SEA EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Copy of a letter from Lieut. Charles Wilkes, commanding the exploring expedition, to the secretary of the navy, dated

U. S. Ship Vincennes, Orange Harbor,
Terra del Fuego, February 22, 1839.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you of my arrival with the squadron at this harbor, all in good health, on the 19th instant; this being the rendezvous I designated previous to carrying into effect your orders relative to exploring south in the antarctic circle, and the employment of the scientific corps in those regions.

Since my departure from Rio de Janeiro on the 6th of January, I have had no opportunity of communicating with you.

We had a long, although pleasant passage, owing to light winds, to Rio Negro, on the coast of Patagonia, where your instructions carried me.—Other duties have prevented my completing my report of the observations there; it shall be forwarded, however, to you the earliest opportunity, and will, I hope be satisfactory to you.

We experienced some detention at Rio Negro, owing to the exposed situation of the open roadstead, and regret to inform you that we lost four anchors and cables, one by the Peacock and three by the two tenders, all the vessels having been compelled to get under way and run off during a gale; the Peacock, Porpoise and tenders, were compelled to slip their cables.

On our return the next day the Porpoise recovered hers, but the others could not be obtained, after a diligent search, owing to their boys having broken adrift; and, having completed all that your instructions required of me, I left Rio Negro on the 21 of February for this anchorage. On my tract here I passed through the straits of La Maire, around and within four miles of Cape Horn, with the squadron in company.

I found the Relief here engaged in preparing for us, agreeably to my instructions to her commander. We have been also since our arrival constantly engaged in preparing the vessels for a cruise to the antarctic regions. Although I am fully aware that the attempt is hazardous, and may probably be unsuccessful, yet advantages may accrue from it to our future operations in any attempt we may hereafter make, and I cannot forego the opportunity which the season yet affords of making the trial.

I take leave also to enclose herewith the instructions I have given for this cruise, which will give you full information in regard to our intended movements.

I shall leave the Vincennes only in this harbor, safely moored, and proceed with the Porpoise and tender Sea Gull, to endeavor to gain a further knowledge of the extent of Palmer's land to the southward and eastward, as there may be less ice in that vicinity at this late season than at any other time, the new ice not having yet formed, which I trust will enable me to gain information for my future attempt.

Previous to leaving Rio de Janeiro I was apprehensive, as I informed you, that I should be very late in the season for this duty. I shall endeavor to improve our limited time to the best advantage, as will appear in the copies of my instructions herewith transmitted.

The Vincennes will await my return here as long as practicable, and, in the event of my detention by ice, she will proceed to Valparaiso, there to join the other vessels that may not be detained, with instructions to captain Hudson to carry out as far as possible, previous to an attempt to aid me on breaking up of the ice another season.

The Peacock, Porpoise, and tenders, have been filled with provisions from the Relief, and are well supplied with warm clothing, preserved meats, and antiscorbutics, for any emergency, to make us comfortable in case of detention.

I take with me the pendulum and other instruments, to employ my time if we should be detained, which it will be my endeavor to avoid, for I am fully convinced of the delays and disadvantages such a detention would cause to the more important duties and operations of the expedition; yet I trust, in the event of such an accident, our time will not be misspent or lost. I have the honor to be, sir, most respectfully,

CHARLES WILKES, Com. Exp. Ex.
Hon. James K. Paulding,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

OPERATIONS OF COMMODORE READ ON THE COAST OF SUMATRA.

From the Globe.

It will be recollectcd that an outrage was committed by the Malays off Quallah Battoo, in the island of Sumatra, on the ship Eclipse of Salem, which resulted in the murder of the captain, and one of the crew, and the plunder of the vessel of specie, and other property, to the value of about thirty thousand dollars. On hearing this, commodore Read, who had been instructed to visit the coast of Sumatra for the purpose of protecting the trade of the United States, immediately proceeded to that island, with a view to the recovery of the property, and enforcing the delivery of the principals in this daring act of piracy.

It appears from his report to the navy department, an extract from which we give below, that his first visit was paid at Quallah Battoo, for the purpose of acquiring accurate information in relation to the particulars of the outrage, and the persons concerned. The result of his inquiries corresponded with the details given in the protest of the survivors of the crew of the Eclipse, transmitted from St. Helena by the commercial agent of the United States at that island, which exonerated the rajah and people of Quallah Battoo from all participation in the outrage for which he had come to exact reparation, but that one of the pirates was now residing at that place. It appeared, however, from information derived from a native who came on board the Columbia, and who stated that he was well acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, that the whole affair was planned, with the sanction of the rajahs at another settlement called Muckie, situated at no great distance, where most of the money had been carried, and where the principals in the crime now resided.

Commodore Read demanded of the rajahs of Quallah Battoo and Muckie, in succession, the delivery of the pirates stated to be within the limits of their authority; but receiving only evasive answers, and finally, assurances of their inability to comply with his demands, he proceeded to execute the purpose of his visit, in the manner detailed in the following extracts:

"Having come to anchor three miles from the latter place, (Quallah Battoo), I deemed it my duty immediately to make the demand for the pirate and property said to have been conveyed to that place with him. Lieutenant Palmer, accordingly, was sent to the rajah, to make the demand, and to say to him that the government of the United States desired—that you had some as friends, but it would depend upon himself whether we should or should not leave him with the same sentiments. The rajah professed himself willing to comply with my wishes, but stated his apprehensions that the man could not be taken for the purpose of delivering him to me. The pirate had many friends, and the people generally feared him, but he would endeavor that night to have him taken while asleep.

"Commander T. W. Wyman was sent the following day and the same excuses were repeated. The hour of sunset of the 24th was named as the limit of the time which would be allowed for the apprehension of the pirate, and the bringing him on board the Columbia. The rajah was told that unless this was done in the time specified, I should be under the necessity of considering him an enemy, and of proceeding to treat him as such, assuming him that it was impossible for him to convince me that he could not secure and give up a pirate found within the limits of his command.

"The hour of sunset passed, and nothing further had been done by the rajah, in compliance with the demand; and I now conceived that all the rajah had promised had been done for the purpose of gaining time. If I had now left him without inflicting some chastisement, I feared he might hereafter question our power, or have an injudicious opinion of its existence. I therefore caused the ships to be dropped as near to the shore as they could swing with safety, and having sprung their main-decks to the forts, commenced a fire upon them. The fire of the ships was returned with but three shots. Two of the forts hung at white flags, and after a few shot well directed at the rajah's fort, I directed the firing to cease.

"As I did not consider the object for which I contemplated sufficient to justify the landing of a party of men to destroy the place, I directed the ships to be got under way, and to proceed to Muckie. We arrived at the common anchoring ground off that place on the 30th, and the demand for the offenders, who it was said were residing there, was immediately made. Excuses similar to those we had before heard, were now given for not having confined the persons claimed. I desired to obtain possession of the rajahs, and invited them on board, but could not prevail on them to come. Having sent another message to the rajahs on the succeeding day, and being satisfied that they did not mean to comply with my demands, for the persons concerned in the piracy, I directed all preparations to be made for hauling in the ships.

"On the morning of the 1st of January, we commenced towing and warping in, and by half past 10 A. M. got into an excellent position for sweeping with our fire the peninsula on which the town stood. The two ships now not being more than a cable's length from the edge of the town. No sooner had we commenced this operation than it was observed that the inhabitants were engaged in carrying off their property from the town. It was impossible to prevent this as early as I could have wished; but a few guns were soon brought to bear, and we saw no more persons employed in this business. A slow fire from a few guns on the main and spar deck was kept up, merely for the purpose of preventing any preparation for defence on shore, and for the protection of our own proceedings. By half past 12 M. three hundred and twenty seamen and marines were landed and formed on the beach, under the command of commander T. W. Wyman. The divisions from the Columbia were commanded by lieutenants Magender, Turk, Turner and Pennock. The marines of the squadron were led by lieutenant Baker. The two divisions from the John Adams were headed by lieutenants Thompson and Minor. The firing from the ships ceased, and the expedition moved towards the town, with order and regularity. Much anxiety was felt at the moment as to the result. The conduct of the rajahs the evening before being such, it was believed that a steady and determined resistance would be made; but, to my great surprise, the party entered without opposition. The town was soon after in flames; all the dwellings of the rajahs, and their fire-arms, were destroyed.—The guns of the forts 22 in number, found loaded and primed, and matches lighted, were spiked and thrown into the ditch. A magazine of rice, and storehouse filled with pepper, were destroyed; some valuable boats of large dimensions on the stocks, and several of less value, were consumed in the flames. In short, there was nothing left above ground, and by half past 2 o'clock, P. M. the officers and men had returned to their respective ships, without the occurrence of a single accident."

Commodore Read does full justice to the promptitude and decision of commander Wyman, and all the officers employed in these transactions who acquitted themselves to his entire satisfaction.

The navy department has furnished for publication the following copies of the engagement entered into by the rajahs of Soosoo, Quallah Battoo &c. with commodore Read:

We, the rajahs of Soosoo, for ourselves and the inhabitants of the town of Soosoo, on the west coast of Sumatra, sensibly affected by the clemency practised towards us on the late visit of the frigate Columbia and John Adams, do hereby pledge ourselves to suffer no American vessel to be molested hereafter, and, by all means in our power, to prevent all wicked designs for annoying or in any way injuring them. Should we ever hear of any plan being laid for the capture of an American vessel, we engage forthwith to give notice of the same to the commander, or whoever may be on board said vessel, in time to prepare themselves for the defence of their lives and the protection of their property. And we do further pledge ourselves that, in case any piratical expedition should hereafter at any time be attempted, or successful plunder be attempted upon any American vessel, and the plunderers should take refuge among us, we will secure their persons and the property taken in the best manner we can, and keep them until they can be delivered to the first vessel of war of the United States of America which shall arrive on the coasts, or to any merchantman who shall be willing to take them to the United States for their trial. But we profess our inability to comply with your demand for the delivering up of the pirates and the property brought with them to this place, belonging to the ship Eclipse, the pirates having fled from the place the moment that it was known that the United States ships of war under your command had come to Soosoo for the purpose of securing them. In that we promise to do all that lies in our power to cultivate the friendship of the United States, by doing all those acts which are necessary for the continuance of that friendship with us which we know to be our interest to preserve, and which we here solemnly pledge ourselves henceforth in every way to endeavor to maintain.

In testimony of these our desires and our solemn pledges, we hereto affix our several signatures and seals,

To commander GEO. C. READ,
Commanding the American ship of war off Soosoo, January 8, 1839.

PO QUALLAH, peder rajah of Quallah Battoo, having come on board the Columbia, with desires to make peace with the government of the United States, hereby declares, that henceforth he will use every effort on his part to assist the American ships which may be trading on the west coast of Sumatra, and bring all the means in his power to suppress all piracies on the coast. And in case any designed robbery or attack upon any American vessel should be known to him, he will use his power to stop it, and give immediate information to the captain and all who may be on board, for their defence and protection. And should any of his men be guilty of the crime of piracy against any American vessel, or should any pirates take refuge among his people, he pledges himself that they shall be punished by death, or given up to the government of the United States for trial, or the demand of the commander of any armed United States vessel, or to the captain of any merchantman who may be willing to take them to the United States.

AFFAIRS OF MEXICO.

From the New Orleans Courier, May 30.
The United States cutter Woodbury, arrived this morning, brings intelligence from Tampico to the 15th inst. and from Vera Cruz and Mexico to the 10th.

From Tampico, the news is that the centralists, under gen. Arista, were within 15 miles of the city, and it was believed would enter the place without resistance. One American, one English and one French sloop of war were lying at anchor near Tampico, and the merchants of those nations had sent off the most valuable parts of their effects on board of the vessels of war, fearing lest the Mexican soldiers might be allowed to pillage the place, after taking possession. Business was at a stand at Tampico, and many people had left the place.

From the capital, we learn that gen. Urrea has been taken and carried there wounded. Santa Ana was received with the most extravagant demonstrations of joy. It is said in the papers that he is taking the most active measures to recruit soldiers, and fill up the army skeletons. An official report gives the number authorised by law, viz: 9,600 cavalry, 3,600 artillery and 26,000 infantry. It appears the number actually under arms is a little over one-third of the force called for by law, say 2,800 artillery, 3,900 cavalry and about 8,000 infantry.

President Bustamante issued a proclamation on the 4th inst. in which he called on the people of the internal provinces, and those of the state of Tamaulipas, to submit and rally under the central government. He points to the Texans and savages on the eastern frontiers of Mexico, as the only real foes of the country, against whom the Mexicans may gratify their military ardor.

The accounts from the different cities and states of the interior of Mexico, as published in the papers of the capital, warrant the conclusion that tranquillity reigned, and no disposition was felt to oppose the central government. It may possibly happen that a collision will take place between Bustamante and Santa Ana for the supreme power, but it is evident that the liberal party in Mexico has been existing for years to come.

The general opinion among the best informed people is, that upon the fall of Tampico, Santa Ana will be declared dictator, and that his plan is to close all the Mexican ports against foreign commerce, with the exception of Vera Cruz.

Bustamante had issued a proclamation, inviting the people to their duty to the government party, which, if they did, the country would have no other enemy to contend with than Texas.

The New Orleans Louisianian has the following interesting letter relative to the execution of Mexico, and the effect of that unfortunate event upon Mexican affairs:

Mexico, May 11, 1839.

The recent defeat of the federalists in the vicinity of Puebla is a mortal blow to the liberal party. Thenceforward that party exists only by name. In fact it is annihilated, or at least reduced so low that it will be long before it will be able to do any thing for the restoration of the country.

Santa Ana has become the idol of the day. His name is the common word in the mouth of the people, and such is the frenzy of these backguards who are in a majority, that if his excellency chose to make himself king, emperor, dictator, in one day the central government would disappear and be replaced by a tyrant and a troop of slaves. I should not be surprised if such were the plan of Santa Ana. All the men in power are sold to him; the aristocracy are for him, body and soul. Against him are the clergy and the military, who are devoted to Bustamante. If it were not for the fear entertained by Santa Ana of the abdication of the federal president, and raised himself by a decree of congress to the dictatorial throne. But what he dares to do not openly, he plots in silence and darkness: he prepares the ground on which he means to contend. If Bustamante does not return here soon, his ejection from the presidency is not very uncertain, and if he returns at all, it will be to salute his sovereign master, if he wishes to escape the fate of the unfortunate Mexico.

To overthrow Bustamante, however, requires an effort of genius in his antagonist, of which I do not think him capable. Bustamante is very popular throughout the country. Besides the support of the priests and the army, he is the idolized chief of a party which is not spoken of, but which exists, nevertheless, and may take an imposing attitude, should the opportunity ever present itself. You will perceive that I allude to the Scotch masons. The principal leaders of the army belong to this party; and you are aware that they make common cause with Bustamante, and are ready to raise his standard whenever he gives the signal.

Bravo, who commands in the south, and who after Bustamante, is the most popular man in the army, also belongs to the Scotch party. The union of these two will suffice any time to destroy all the plans of Santa Ana. The last, however, is active in pushing his schemes, and sooner or later there will be an open rupture. We expect it every moment, and we are in hopes that from the struggle will arise a new order of things, in which correct principles of government will flourish. Such is my opinion at least—I hope it may be better founded than my opinion respecting the unfortunate Mexi-

Santa Ana repaired to Puebla in person to prevent the surrender of that place, and to put down all risings in favor of federalism. After Mexico's defeat, he dictated the order for the execution of that unfortunate chief, and superintended the execution, evincing in this instance all the cruelty of his nature.

The substance of the sentence was: "Whereas the citizen Mexia was found in arms, fighting against his country; it is ordered that he die the death of a traitor. He will be shot, with his back turned to the soldiers."

Mexia protested in vain against this ignominious sentence; he was obliged to submit, and prepared to die like a brave man. At the distance of twelve paces from the detachment that was to shoot him, he received the first fire of his executioners with the calmness which only belongs to true courage and a just cause. Three balls struck him and mangled his shoulder. He stood firm, but to end his sufferings and the horrors of his situation, he begged the soldiers to fire upon him with the muzzles close to his body. The soldiers complied with his request, and approaching nearer, fired a second time; his head was shot through, his head demolished, and his soul escaped to a happier region!

Such was the end of a man in whom the liberal party placed their last and dearest hopes; his death has terminated their noble enterprise. His memory is cursed by the enemies of good order and democratic institutions. But history will do him justice and assign him a distinguished place among the heroic martyrs to the sacred cause of national independence and happiness. I hope this reflection will soften the regrets of the numerous friends of Mexia in New Orleans, and assuage the bitter sorrow of his unhappy widow, who I now understand is now in your city. The last words he pronounced were for his country, his wife and his children! His memory will be dear to them all.

All the news received here relative to the battle of Puebla, agrees in representing Mexia as having acted in the bravest manner. But badly seconded by the other generals, and falling into an ambuscade he lost the victory after the most heroic exertions to obtain it. He was induced to enter a defile, which he was told was the highest road to the city, and was suddenly attacked by forces five times more numerous than his own. Notwithstanding this inferiority the battle lasted more than five hours. After these attacks, he made himself master of the enemy's artillery, and would have been victorious but for the unexpected arrival of 500 cavalry, who bore down upon his men, already overcome by fatigue, and their number greatly diminished. At this critical moment the flight of Urrea and other generals decided the fate of the gallant Mexia. In the midst of a handful of brave men, he still resisted the attacks of the cavalry. But seeing that all hope was gone, he put on the coat of a dead soldier, to avoid being taken prisoner; but fortune again betrayed him; he was recognised in his disguise by an officer of the cavalry, who made him prisoner, and carried him on the crupper of the same horse on which he rode, to Puebla, where he was forthwith tried, condemned, and executed by Santa Ana. I have been told that some minutes were allowed him to write his last adieu to his wife and children. Will Santa Ana allow the letter to go to its address? The bloodhound is base enough for such an act of wickedness and cruelty.

After what he calls a triumph, Santa Ana has returned to Mexico, where he was received with extraordinary honors. He had rejoicings, balls, illuminations, public plays, for an event over which every good man grieves. The populace admires the hero of Tampico, patriots deplore the miseries of civil war. One party weaves garlands for the victor, the other is filled with grief; on one side you hear songs of victory, on the other wallings for the dead. Time will shew us the end of this medley of things. Yours.

Matamoros which has been so long closed to foreign commerce has at length been opened by order of the Mexican government. The following regulations in reference to it have been issued by the Mexican authorities:

COMMERCIAL CONVENTION.

The committee of ten, to which has been referred the report of the convention, directing them to ascertain and report whether goods have not been exported and sold at the southern ports, upon as good terms, and at as fair rates, as they can be procured at the northern—and whether the country merchants cannot now procure at the southern sea-ports as full a supply and as good assortments, upon as good terms, and as favorable periods of payment, as they can be procured elsewhere—and whether there exist any and what advantages in making purchases from the direct importers at the south, carefully submit the following:

REPORT.

The inquiries to be made, in the foregoing resolution, are deeply interesting to all the friends of southern direct trade. If facts will justify affirmative conclusions to them the success of the enterprise, if per- rided, is unquestionable, unless defeated by the onward action of the general government, or an insensibility of Providence against which human industry is altogether powerless. The facts necessary to arrive at these conclusions are, however, com- plex, and exceedingly complicated, and require collection, consideration and arrangement, of time and opportunities than the present oc- casions; and your committee being composed of planters, dealers and planters, from the interior of the southern States, and labor under many difficulties in the investigation. In the result of which, the committee, in con- junction with all they represent, have a deep interest, in nothing less than the discovery of those mar- ket, where they can sell their staples for the highest price, and the goods they consume, at the lowest price—and the opportunities as they possessed, to be employed to the best of their ability, and submit the result to the consideration of the convention.

The southern States have at all times been the producers of staples of great richness and value in the market of the world, which from their earliest settlement, gave them a direct trade with the great nations, of an extent and importance greatly beyond their proportionate population. The growth and increase of this trade kept more than even pace the increase of population, and enriched them a prosperity, before unparalleled. Since the commencement of the period of free trade, it has developed and expanded to an immense extent, as has been fully already submitted to the convention. The settlement of new states, southwest and west, and the pursuits, institutions and staples, have swollen the products of their industry, until they are more than sufficient for the domestic exports, and com- pete to that extent, the basis of all the foreign com- merce of the United States.

The fiscal action of the general government in the taxation and disbursements of its revenue, has al- ways been unfavorable to southern commerce, and through the additional burdens of the protective system of duties, the disastrous effects were apparent be- fore the eyes of the people, and the spirit of the people, and broke the spirits of her people. Direct trade which was her own by every law of nature and equity, and which should have grown and increased every year, grew less and less until it disappeared, while the ports and people suf- fered to the north and south, and the people en- couraged by these burdens, our capital sought propitious locations for its employment, or en- gaged in other business—our merchants and capital- moving to the northern ports, with their funds, and employing from commerce and investing in manufactures, while the other ports, for example, were not found to supply their place. We attempt the business they had been forced to do. The importing merchants of the south are an almost extinct race; and her direct trade, in cotton, flourishing and rich, dwindled down to a few articles, and it would seem to be undeniable that if the same things by which these disastrous losses were wrought with such fatal effect, upon our direct trade, continues to exist, that the south cannot recover what it lost under their operation. It becomes therefore an important point to be determined, whether any and what changes or modifications of these cir- cumstances have taken place, which will enable the south again to enter into a struggle for her own direct trade with foreign nations, with any reasonable hope of fair success.

That such a struggle have for several years been in progress is most certain, slowly and gradually, but certainly and beneficially. The compromise laws have already produced great amelioration, and every bi-ennial reduction is an impulse to enterprise and trade, which has already caused much capital to return, and has opened new channels with something like its ancient status before the war. The legislatures of the planting States have, with prudent foresight, avail- ed themselves of the opportunity, and by wise legis- lation, done much to encourage the enterprise and aid individual efforts in the patriotic effort; and it is believed will yet do much more for this great and vital measure, by lightening the remaining burthens which oppress commercial capital in the heavy taxation on its employment. Lightened of much of this oppres- sive taxation imposed by the national legislation, and animated by the prospect of still further reduc- tions, and a well founded confidence in the fostering mercantile legislatures, the race of importing merchants has returned, and individual and part- nership firms, appeared in our cities, and in mar- ket-banked large capitals, with great spirit in the business. It gives the committee great pleasure to add, that they have every reason to believe, that their op- erations have been conducted with the energy and with a success as advantageous to them as it is beneficial to the country.

If we consider the general principles, which natu- rally regulate trade we see no reason why foreign goods used in southern consumption, could not be brought by our own merchants at the place of their production, and brought direct to our markets as by their merchants. If the cost of the transportation elements of cost, could they be clearly ascertained, might enable the committee to arrive at exact con- clusions, but it is impossible for the committee in the time permitted for the inquiry, to attain such cer- tainty in the multitude of circumstances which must be taken into account, and which are in constant change of circumstances, the fluctuations in mar- kets, and the thousand occurrences every hour, tend- ing to disturb the regularity of trade, the exchanges and the money market, would perhaps, the very next day, vary that statement and present another view. It is, however, so also, if all the foreign goods brought into the country for its consumption, were imported by regular importing merchants, more certainty might be attainable. It happens however so far from this being the case, that im- mense amounts of foreign goods are often poured into the United States, upon the great points of im- portation, and the fluctuations of commercial pres- sure and distress, produce the influence of price, and fluctuation of prices. At such periods, the man- ufacturers, if pressed for money, instead of at once reducing the price of goods, at their warehouses, (which is considered the last thing to be done), go to stock at distant places, and sometimes ship to for- eign ports and sell by their own agents, or their own account, in which case they can learn the price, and also escape the addition, which is put on the mer- chant by our revenue laws, for the expenses on the make loans from mercantile houses, having branches in other countries, and deposit their surplus goods as security, upon the agreement that they are sold for whatever they will bring, to refund the ad- vance, if they are not paid when due. Great quan- tities of these goods and also of falling merchants are sold for the northern markets, especially New York, and sold at auction, for whatever they will bring—great sacrifices are inevitable, and the pur- chases, may be at prices which would prove ruinous to the regular importing merchant whether northern or southern. Such instances should be considered as departures from regular trade, and as exceptions to the general, regular and steady course which it should naturally and necessarily follow, but control business and prices, such transactions are not fair examples for regular business—and whether they are beneficial in the long run to the trade and prosperity of a place may well be doubted, as regular importation to disturb commerce and destroy the trade.

Before proceeding more into detail, it will be proper to remark, that the report will be confined, after a few remarks on domestic goods, to those of foreign fabric and importation. The consumption of domestic goods has increased greatly and is still increas- ing, and it is estimated by the merchant to ex- tend already to 35 per cent of the whole consump- tion. That they can be bought upon better terms, where they are manufactured, than at the southern ports, is generally conceded, except where the man- ufacturers have agencies at the southern ports, and sell at manufacture prices, including freight, insur- ance, &c. This, to a limited extent, is done, and may, and probably will, in the course of time, be due to an extent commensurate with the demands of consumption. But if the southern merchant still goes to the northern manufacturer and buys and carries the goods back with him for sale, it is not the less a direct trade, and can be bought as cheap, and with the exception of the manufacturer himself, sell as low as any other competitor.

It is manifest that the merchant who buys his goods cheapest, and has fewest burthens and ex- penses at the lowest rates, will be able to sell his goods at the lowest rates. It is fair to presume, that what can be done in fair competition, by our merchants, in fair competition, will be done by trade, with their northern brothers. Let us see what are the elements which enter into the solution of the problem, which enjoys the greatest advantages in this honorable rivalry.

In carrying out this comparison, it will be most satisfactory to select places which may be consid- ered fair exponents of the two sections of the union, and the committee therefore select New York for the north, and Charleston for the south. In selecting that being there, the committee are influenced by the fact more information, and they are enabled to procure it, than of any other southern importing city; and it is believed that the same general principles, and its applicability to its trade, may, with such modifications as will readily suggest themselves in each case, be applied to the other southern importing cities re- spectively.

In the south, the ports are good and safe, and open all the year to ships. In the north, many and con- siderable obstructions exist during a part of the winter and cold and ice. The same may be said of their internal communications, the rivers and canals of the north being frozen, and the rail roads obstructed by the snows and often for considerable periods of time. In the summer, the southern ports are not so healthy, and their intercourse with the interior markets is less in amount and activity. The establishment of rail roads permitting the most rapid travel and perfect safety through the unhealthy districts adjacent, has greatly diminished the impediments of summer season, with other southern ports, to which similar improvements are extending. The great advan- tages from the perfect system of communi- cation with foreign parts and her customers at home, her commercial connections with Europe, and especially in the greater facilities her banks give her merchants for credits in Europe, and discounts at home for long periods, and on their cus- tomary notes. Were the only question, which city can sell its merchandise the cheapest in its own stores, the answer would probably be that New York can generally sell as low or lower than Charleston. But the true question for the southern country mer- chant is, can he buy the goods, at his home, cheaper from New York than from the north, or any other southern port? If he buys lower in New York, and the expenses of getting them home makes the expense more than he could get them at from the southern port, his own interest as well as patri- otism, will induce him to deal at his own ports. In coming to a correct view of the cost of the goods at the two markets, we must take into the circumstances which create cost, and go to the prices of merchandize. All the expenses attending traffic must be charged in the profits and taken out of them, and consequently enhance the cost of its merchandize. These expenses, in some important respects, are believed to be greater in New York than Charleston—and the following views are illus- trative of this opinion. The foreign goods imported into this country are paid for chiefly by southern produce or bills of exchange, drawn from it. To say this, the northern merchant must employ his own commission agent, and pay from one to two per cent commissions; the southern importer is on the spot where the produce is, and buys, in person, this produce or bills, saving that commission. In general, exchanges on Europe are lower by one to two per cent. at the south—at present it is not so, but the general experience has been that way; and the present difference in the exchange is not what is ascribed in a considerable extent to the amount of American loans negotiated through New York, creating a larger fund to draw on, a state of things temporary in character. House rents and store rents are believed to be twice or three times as high in New York as they are in Charleston; clerk's wages are higher; and the expenses of clerks and living, are considerably greater. Another charge, which is believed goes considerably to enhance the price of goods, grows out of the manner in which the mer- cantile business is done in New York. The import- ing trade, as a general rule, does not deal directly with the country merchant, but the imports in bales and packages, which he does not break up into bales and packages, quantities too large for country merchants. The business is divided also into almost as many distinct classes of importers, as there are distinct classes of goods. Assortments in quan- tity by had from the dealer or country merchant, can- only be had from another class of merchants, called jobbers. The jobbers, as they were called in retail, buy from the importers by the bale or pack- age, and breaking them, sell to the country dealers in quantities to suit their assortments. They are grow immensely upon the mind, prefiguring a career of prosperity which will add vast power and influence to the south, and I gave new guarantees for the stability of her institutions. The safety of investments and the certain profits in the trade will offer, when known, inducements to the superabundant capital of other sections and even of Europe itself, to seek a location amongst us in new mercantile firms, in partnerships or agencies of foreign houses or loans to our own merchants. In a portion of these anticipations be realized, advances will probably take place in the value of the commodities in the trade, and an invigorating influence will be produced on the arts, the industry, enterprise of the country, in all the benefits of which, no class will participate more largely than the country merchants. In the improved condition of their customers, new wants will spring up and a greater demand for goods arise, at the same time that a better market will be created at home, to buy from them whatever of the simplest products of the country they may have to sell, and larger stocks and wider ranges of goods will be offered for the selection of their assortments, at prices and credits more favorable, as capital and competition increases.

BATTLE OF KING'S MOUNTAIN.

Interesting revolutionary document.

We have never seen the following document in print which we now publish from the original manuscript, in the possession of a gentleman of this county. It was the property of a brilliant officer in our revolution, drawn up at the time by the chief actors in it, and expressed in the plain strong style that belonged to the period. This, with very many other battles in the south, has never attracted the applause, or attained the historical notoriety which have attended the revolutionary incidents of similar magnitude in other quarters; and, indeed, so much more has been written concerning the revolutionary incidents of the north, and so much more been done by the people and the states in that section to commemorate and signalize them, that the present generation in the neighborhood of Cowpens and King's Mountain know more about Bunker's Hill and Lexington, and more of Starke and Putnam, than of Pickens and Campbell.

"No monument, inscription-stone; Their race, their deeds, their names, almost unknown!"

We have always thought that those battle fields in our state which were illustiated by the gallantry and devotion of our ancestors should be marked by permanent mementos, at the cost of the state—every one, from Fort Mifflin to King's Mountain. And he who would carry such a measure through the legislature would himself deserve a monument.

A statement of the proceedings of the western army, from the 25th day September, 1780, to the reduction of major Ferguson and the army under his command.

"On receiving intelligence that major Ferguson had advanced up as high as Gilbert Town, in Rutherford county, we set out to cross the mountains to the western waters, colonel William Campbell, with four hundred men, from Washington county, Virginia; colonel Isaac Shelby, with two hundred and forty men, from Sullivan county, North Carolina; and lieutenant colonel John Sevier, with two hundred and forty men, from Washington county, North Carolina, assembled at Watauga on the 25th day of September, where they were joined by colonel Charles McDowell, with one hundred and sixty men, from the counties of Burke and Rutherford, who had fled before the enemy to the western waters. We began our march on the 26th, and on the 20th we were joined by colonel Cleveland, on the Catawba river, with three hundred and fifty men from the counties of Wilkes and Surry. No officer having properly a right to the command in chief, on the first of October we dispatched an express to major-general Gates, informing him of our situation, and requested him to send a general officer to take the command of the whole. In the mean time, colonel Campbell, was chosen to act as commandant till such general officer should arrive. We marched to the Cowpens, on Broad river, in South Carolina, where we were joined by colonel James Williams, with four hundred men, on the evening of the 6th of October, who informed us that the enemy lay encamped somewhere near the Cherokee ford of Broad river, about thirty miles distant from us. By a council of the principal officers, it was then thought advisable to pursue the enemy that night, with nine hundred of the best horsemen, and leave the weak horse and footmen to follow as fast as possible. We began our march with 900 of the best men, about eight o'clock the same evening, and marching all night, came up with the enemy about three o'clock, P. M. on the 7th, who lay encamped on the top of King's Mountain, twelve miles north of the Cherokee ford, in the confidence that they could not be forced from so advantageous a post. Previous to the attack, on our march, the following disposition was made; colonel Shelby's regiment formed a column in the centre, on the left; colonel Campbell's regiment another, on the right; colonel Cleveland's regiment, headed in front by major Winston and colonel Sevier's regiment, formed a large column on the right wing; the other part of colonel Cleveland's regiment, headed by colonel Cleveland himself, and colonel Williams' regiment, composed the left wing. In this order we advanced, and got within a quarter of a mile of the enemy before we were discovered. Colonel Shelby's and colonel Campbell's regiments began the attack, and kept up a fire on the enemy, while the right and left wings were advancing forward to surround them, which was done in about five minutes, and the fire became general all around. The engagement lasted an hour and five minutes, the greater part of which time a heavy and incessant fire was kept up on both sides. Our men, in some parts, where the regulars fought, were obliged to give way a small distance two or three times, but rallied and returned with additional ardor to the attack. The troops upon the right having gained the summit of the eminence, obliged the enemy to retreat along the top of the ridge to where colonel Cleveland commanded, and were there stopped by his brass and a flag was immediately hoisted by captain Depoisture, then commanding officer, (major Ferguson having been killed a little before) for a surrender. Our fire immediately ceased, and the enemy laid down their arms, the greater part of them charged, and surrendered themselves prisoners to us at discretion.

"It appears from their own provision returns for that day, found in their camp, that their whole force consisted of eleven hundred and twenty-five men, out of which they sustained the following loss: Of the regulars, one major, one captain, two sergeants and fifteen privates killed; thirty-five privates wounded, left on the ground, not able to march; two captains, four lieutenants, three ensigns, one surgeon, five sergeants, three corporals, one drummer and forty-nine privates, taken prisoners. Loss of the Tories: two colonels, three captains, two hundred and one privates, killed; one major and one hundred and twenty-seven privates wounded and left on the ground, not able to march; one colonel, twelve captains, eleven lieutenants, two ensigns, one quartermaster, one adjutant, two commissaries, eighteen sergeants and six hundred privates, taken prisoners. Total loss of the enemy, one thousand one hundred and five men, at King's Mountain.

Given under our hands, at camp,

BROUGHAM'S PORTRAIT OF FRANKLIN.

The following admirable sketch of the American philosopher is from a new work by lord Brougham, recently published in London, entitled—"STATESMEN IN THE TIME OF GEORGE III." It has not yet been published in this country.

"One of the most remarkable men certainly of our times as a politician, or of any age as a philosopher was Franklin; who also stands alone in combining together these two characters, the greatest that man can sustain, and in this, that having borne the first part in enlarging science by one of the greatest discoveries ever made, he bore the second part in founding one of the greatest empires in the world.

In this truly great man every thing seems to concur that goes towards the constitution of exalted merit. First he was the architect of his own fortune. Born in the humblest station, he raised himself by his talents and his industry, first to the place in society which may be said to have the help of every ordinary abilities; great application, and good luck; but next to the loftier heights which a daring and happy genius alone can scale; and the poor printer's boy who at one period of his life had no covering to shelter his head from the dews of night, rent in twain the proud dominion of England, and lived to be the ambassador of a commonwealth which he had formed, at the court of the haughty monarch of France who had been his allies.

Then, he had been tried by prosperity as well as adverse fortune, and had passed unscathed through the perils of both. No ordinary apprentice, no commonplace journeyman, ever laid the foundations of his independence in habits of industry and temperance more deep than he did, whose genius was afterwards to rank him with the Galileos and the Newtons of the old world. No politician born to shine in court, or assist at the councils of monarchs, ever bore his honors in a lofty station more easily, or was lost so soon by the enjoyment of them than this common workman did when negotiating with royal representatives, or carried by all the beauty and fashion of the most brilliant court in Europe.

Again he was self-taught in all he knew. His hours of study were stolen from those of sleep and of meals, or gained by some ingenious contrivance for reading while the work of his daily calling went on. Assisted by none of the helps which affluence lenders to the studies of the rich, he had to supply the place of tutors by redoubled diligence, and of commentaries, by repeated perusal. Nay, the possession of books was to be obtained by copying what the art which he himself exercised, furnished easily to others.

Next, the circumstances under which others succeed he made to yield, and bent to his own purposes—a successful leader of a revolt that ended in complete triumph after appearing desperate for years; a great discoverer in philosophy without the ordinary helps to knowledge; a writer famed for his chaste style without a classical education; a skilful negotiator, though never bred to politics; ending as a favorite, nay, a pattern of fashion, when the guest of frivolous courts, the life which he had begun in garrets and in work-shops.

Lastly, combinations of faculties, in others deemed impossible, appeared easy and natural in him. The philosopher, delighting in speculation, was also industriously a man of action. Ingenious reasoning, refined and subtle consultation, were in him combined with prompt resolution, and inflexible firmness of purpose. To a lively fancy, he joined a profound and deep reflection; his original and inventive genius stooped to the convenient alliance of the most ordinary prudence in every day affairs; the mind that soared above the clouds, and was conversant with the loftiest of human contemplations, disdained not to make proverbs and fables parables for the guidance of apprentices, youths and servile maidens; and the hands that sketched a free constitution for a whole continent, or drew down the lightning from heaven, easily and cheerfully lent themselves to simplify the apparatus by which truths were to be illustrated, or discoveries pursued.

His discoveries were made with hardly any apparatus at all; and if, at any time he had been led to employ instruments of a sort that less ordinary description, he never rested satisfied until he had, as it were, afterwards translated the process, by resolving the problem with such simple machinery, that you might say he had done wholly unaided by apparatus. The experiments by which the identity of lightning and electricity was demonstrated, were made with a sheet of brown paper, a bit of twine, a silk thread, and an iron key.

Upon the integrity of this man, whether in public or private life, there rests no stain. Strictly honest, and even scrupulously punctual in all his dealings, he preserved in the highest fortune that regularity which he had practised as well as inculcated in the poorest.

His domestic life he was faultless, and in the intercourse of society, delightful. There was a constant good humor and a playful wit, easy and of high flight, without any ambition to shine, the natural fruit of his lively fancy, his solid, natural good sense, and his cheerful temper, that gave his conversation an unspeakable charm, and alike suited every circle, from the humblest to the most elevated.

With all his strong opinions, so often solemnly declared, so impressively recorded in his deeds, he retained a tolerance for those who differed with him which could not be surpassed in men whose principles hang so loosely about them as to be taken up for a convenient cloak, and laid down when found to impede their progress. In his family he was every thing that worth, warm affections, and sound prudence could contribute, to make a man both useful and amiable, respected and beloved. In religion he would be reckoned by many a latitudinarian; yet it is certain that his mind was imbued with a deep sense of the divine perfections, a constant impression of our accountable nature, and a lively hope of future enjoyment. Accordingly, his death-bed, the test of both faith and works, was easy and placid, resigned and devout, and indicated at once an unflinching retrospect of the past, and a comfortable assurance of the future.

If we turn from the truly great man whom we have been contemplating, in his celebrated contemporary in the old world, (Frederick the great), who only affected the philosophy that Franklin possessed, and employed his talents for civil and social affairs, in extinguishing that independence which Franklin's life was consecrated to establish, the contrast is marvellous indeed, between the monarch and the printer.

CHRONICLE

Arctic land expedition. Letters have been received from Messrs. Dease and Simpson dated at Fort Confidence, Great Bear Lake, Sept. 16, 1833, giving a narrative of the unsuccessful attempt to explore the residue of the eastern part of the continent. The season was very much extremely unfavorable, and they were able to advance with their boats only to a point three miles from the site of Franklin's farthest encampment in 1821. Mr. Simpson, with a part of the company, advanced, on foot, 100 miles farther, to lat. 63, 43, 33, long, 105, 3. They propose to renew the attempt the present season, in hopes of finding a more open sea.

Diad. At Port-au-Prince, Hayti, in February last, Prince Saunders, esq., attorney general for the government of Hayti. Mr. Saunders was one of the best educated colored men ever reared in this country. He was born in Theford, Vermont, where he received a good English education.—About the year 1805, he was employed to teach the free colored school of Golecher, Conn. and subsequently, it is believed, graduated at Dartmouth, where it was that he taught in Boston. From Boston he went to Hayti, where he was employed by Christopher, "the first crowned monarch of the new world," as his agent to improve the state of education in his dominions, and was sent to Europe to procure means of instruction. In England he was treated as an extraordinary man, and his companion being mistaken for his title, he was conversant with the nobility, and admitted to the society of the king, and quite at home at the house of sir Joseph Banks, then president of the royal society.

From some cause or other, his conduct in Europe did not please his royal master, and on his return home he was dismissed from this employment. After remaining a short time in Hayti he returned to this country, studied divinity and at one time officiated in a church in Philadelphia.

How long he remained here the writer knows not, but he removed hence to Hayti again, and at the time of his death was the attorney general of the government. As he was an extraordinary man, it is hoped this notice of his death may be the means of calling forth further particulars respecting him.

Deaths in New York for the week ending on the 9th inst. The number of deaths in the city during the past week was 114—fourteen more than the week previous. 70 were men and 44 were women and 23 girls. There were 25 under 1 year of age, and but 1 between 60 and 100; eight—three were born in the United States and 11 in Ireland. Ten of the 114 were colored persons.

Interesting scene on the 4th of July. The New York Express says the teachers of the various Sunday schools have entered into an arrangement to have the children celebrate the day on Staten Island in a manner worthy of the occasion. At least twenty thousand will embark in steam and row boats, land on the island, and there in a rational and happy manner. Provisions will be furnished, and every arrangement made for their safety and enjoyment. This is a noble plan, and one that will give general satisfaction.

The legislature of Ohio have authorized the following loans to be made during the present year, to carry on the internal improvement system of the state:

Table with 2 columns: Loan description and Amount. Includes Washish and Erie canal, Missungum improvement, Hanging canal, Wabash and Erie canal, Western reserve and Maumee road, Warren county canal company, Zanesville work.

In all, to be borrowed this year, $1,730,000. These loans are to be paid in 1850, and are not to bear a rate of interest exceeding six per centum.

Mr. Wm. C. Keen, late postmaster at Printer's Row, (Pa.) has been sentenced by the U. S. district court, to ten years' penitentiary confinement, for purloining money from the mail.—an unsuccessful effort was made by his counsel to procure a new trial.

Crops in Mississippi. The Vicksburg Whiz of the 23d, states that the accounts from all parts of the state are most cheering. The cotton looks well, and if the weather should continue favorable, Mississippi will raise a better crop than she has produced for 7 years. The corn is likewise said to be in a flourishing condition. Mississippi sorely needs abundant harvests. It is by the ample produce of her soil alone that she can expect ever to extricate herself from her difficulties.

Indian murders. A letter from the Indian superintendent of the western territory, dated at the Choctaw agency, on the 14th ult. states, that two men named Crump and Backus, had just been murdered in that vicinity by the Indians.

Flour. It is estimated that the amount of flour shipped at Detroit this season, has been 150,000 barrels, and from Toledo, 25,000—making the value of the export of this article from the eastern side of the peninsula, about $1,000,000. The amount conveyed through various channels to lake Michigan, is supposed to have been 70,000 bbls. worth $5,000,000. The Detroit Free Press thinks that the surplus of the last year's harvest may be valued at $2,000,000.

A sheriff run away with. On the 23d ult. Mr. Brotherton, the sheriff of St. Louis, attached the steamboat Gen. Brady. On the night of the 24th, the deputy sheriff, Mr. Lacey, slept on board. About 4 o'clock in the morning, discovering that the boat was raising steam, he went to the pilot house and took possession of the wheel, but the pilot and hands overpowered him and put off with the boat, deputy sheriff and all, for New Orleans. A considerable distance below, Mr. Lacey was put on shore. On the 23d ult. the sheriff Mr. Brotherton, left St. Louis in pursuit of the boat.

Of course there will be a criminal prosecution against the officers of the boat.

Imports of Mobile. The following statement has been furnished to the editor of the Register by the collector of Mobile, and will show the state of the foreign import trade for the gloomy year of 1838.

Statement, showing the quantity or value of some of the leading articles of imports into that port for the year 1838—

Thomas J. Sutherland, ex-general in the Canadian patriot service, has been set at liberty by order of sir George Arthur. The Ogdensburg Times announces his arrival at that place. It is said that sir John Colborne refused to keep him in custody any longer.

Lynchers punished.—A good example.—In Yazoo, Miss. some time ago, a Mr. Harris, for some real or supposed offence, was severely lynched by H. W. Dana, C. W. Bain, and others. He prosecuted those two individuals for the outrage, and the case was tried at the late session of the circuit court of Yazoo county. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff of $2,000.

Luxurious travelling. The great southern rail road from Fredericksburg to Halifax, cars have been constructed with state rooms, berths, and all the necessary accommodations for lodging, "for single persons and families." They are also furnished with rocking chairs—only that the chairs are made fast, so that the faculty of rocking cannot be exercised.

A lesson from a horse. A large number of citizens of this city, on the 31st ult. received edification from a horse in this wise: a stray young one was dabbling in the mud in Chartres street, and a horse let loose to drink, which came capering by, actually lifted the child from the gutter in its teeth, and placed it on the sidewalk. Hundreds witnessed the circumstance with surprise.

New Hampshire legislature. We learn from a slip of a paper of the 10th ult. that the legislature organized on Wednesday, the 12th inst. The senate made choice of James M'K. Wilkins, for president.—Asa Fowler, clerk.—Peter Sanborn, assistant clerk, and Wm. Fisk, doorkeeper.

In the house, the whole number of votes for speaker, was 231. Moses Norris, Jr. received 150, and was elected. Thomas M. Edwards had 75—and there were 5 scattering. [Boston Merc. Journal.]

Connecticut. At a meeting of the wing members of the general assembly of Connecticut, previous to their adjournment, a series of resolutions were adopted, from which we extract the following:

Resolved, That the confidence we have ever felt in the integrity, patriotism and talents of Henry Clay, is confirmed and strengthened by the daily history of his public life, as well as by the constant and increasing attachment of his fellow citizens throughout the United States.

Resolved, That of all the candidates proposed for the presidency of the United States, we prefer Henry Clay. But as we regard principles more than men, and our confidence more than our party, we will cheerfully unite in the support of the candidate who shall be nominated by our political friends in national convention.

It is contemplated at Savannah, (Ga) to build a bridge over the Savannah river at that place. The object of the improvement is to secure a larger amount of the trade between the western states and the southern ports of the Atlantic.

Early fruit. The editor of the Mæcon (Georgia) Post was shown on the 3d inst. a large ripe peach, from the plantation of a gentleman near the city.

Hill corn. On the 23d ult. at Grand Gulf, on the Mississippi they were already reaping upon early ripe corn, at the season of growth.

Cat catches mice. A western paper, styles Mr. Fitzgerald, who in his capacity of bank treasurer, has displayed such commendable activity in exposing the impious operations of wild cat banks, "the Van Amburgh of Michigan."

The Globe contains an official statement denying that lieutenant E. W. Moore and fifty American midshipmen had entered the service of the Mexican republic. The denial is contained in a letter of Mr. Moore, in reply to an inquiry of the secretary of the navy. The original false statement was promulgated through a New York newspaper.

Death of Wm. Brooks. William Brooks, a native Flathead Indian, aged about twenty years, died in New York a short time ago. The deceased came to this city about two months since, with the rev. Jason Lee, a Methodist Episcopal missionary to the Flathead tribe of Indians. The denial is also traced through a considerable portion of the eastern states, he was a very estimable youth, and gave great promise of future usefulness, particularly to the natives of the Oregon country, to which he was about returning with Mr. Lee and the reinforcement of missionaries soon to sail for that territory. [Portland Courier.]

A letter from Livermore, in Oxford county Maine, published in the Boston Atlas, states that col. Andrews, of that county, has absconded with county funds to the amount of $4,000. He was treasurer of the town where he lived.

American silk. The Lancaster (Pa.) Union, of this week, notices a number of beautiful pocket handkerchiefs, made of Lancaster county silk, and reeled and spun by the Messrs. Carson, of that city. The editor is quite confident that he "never saw a better article of the kind." The handkerchiefs were woven in Philadelphia, and are said to be woven as hard as imported ones of similar size, with all the softness which characterizes the fabric. Some samples of sewing silk from the same establishment had also been submitted to a competent judge, and were found to be unsurpassed for evenness, strength and color. The Messrs. Carson, it is said, have an extensive cooconomy in operation, and feed a great number of silk worms. One leaf of the multicaulis grown in their this summer, measures 15-3-8 inches across.

The life boat. The packet ship Memphis was launched on Saturday afternoon, from the ship yard of Messrs. Smith, Denon & Comstock. We have seen one of Francis's life boats, built for this ship, which will support from two to three hundred persons. We think that every ship going to sea with passengers should have one or two of these extraordinary boats. They are certainly as safe as the ordinary boats, and are believed, by competent judges, to be what they profess to be, life preservers. We are told that captain Gedney, of the United States navy, was at Stryker's bay last week, and made a number of experiments—fully satisfying himself of the utility of the boats. Captain Gedney anchored the Washington in Stryker's bay, being the first time a public vessel has been above the city since the war of the revolution. [N. Y. Com. Adv.]

Slaves captured. The British ship of war Buzzard's captain Fitzgerald, and two vessels, the Eagle and the Clera, captured by her on the coast of Africa, on suspicion of having been concerned in the slave trade, have arrived at Havana.

The vessels, it appears, are both American built, and the officers were all Americans. When taken they had the Spanish flag flying. The vessels were fitted out at Havana. One of the captains is, it seems, a native of New York, and the other of Philadelphia.

The object of the vessels is, to detain the negroes to be sent to authorities for sale, and for this purpose negotiations are now pending between the British officers and the magistrates here—says a New York paper.

A divorce case. The scandal-mongers have been much gratified at the report of proceedings before a committee of the legislature of Connecticut, on the application of a Mrs. Jarvis, for a divorce from her husband, the rev. Dr. Jarvis, of the ground of malconduct in bed. The report of the committee was unfavorable to the prayer of the petitioner, and recommended, says the New Haven Herald, that she "have leave to withdraw her petition, on the ground that there were not sufficient allegations proved to authorize the committee to recommend a divorce. The committee also report that the most of the allegations in the answer of Dr. Jarvis were unsupported by the evidence. In regard to the personal character of both parties, (respective of the unhappy controversy subsisting between them) honorable testimony was born by the chairman of the committee on the part of each house in their remarks accompanying the report, and which, as we expected, and as we have no doubt is probable that Dr. Jarvis and his lady could live happy with each other, it was the duty of Dr. Jarvis to make a just and suitable settlement for her separate maintenance. They further declared that they found nothing affecting the moral character of either party, and that both in the judgment of the committee and of the public, the best policy would be to respect, as if the difficulties subsisting between them had not occurred." The report was adopted.

It has been decided in a court of justice in Rhode Island, that to drink strong drink in a tavern subjects a man to divorce.

The court of inquiry in relation to eom. Elliott, which had been sitting for some time at the city yard, Philadelphia, adjourned on Friday the 7th inst. at the instance of eom. E. until the 27th inst.

Thus, of those whose terms have not expired, the whigs have 13, and the administration 10. As 17 constitutes a majority, we have but 4 to elect to secure such majority; or, with the casting vote of the lieutenant governor, 3 will equally secure a whig ascendancy upon every question, as, where there is a tie, the president of the senate has the casting vote.

UNITED STATES CONSUL AT MARTINIQUE. From recent statements respecting the conduct of our government at foreign ports, it would seem that some of these dignitaries consider their offices created for almost any purpose but that of giving protection to American property, or assistance to American citizens when either may chance to come within their consular jurisdiction. A letter from a respectable ship master to his owners at St. Pierre, Martinique, early in May, makes serious and aggravated charges against Peyton Gay,* American consul at that port. The captain states that while in port, with a portion of his men sick and in the hospital, the remainder of the crew were inveigled away from him, and received into the consul's own house, the latter being dissatisfied because the vessel was not consigned to him. The ship was thus left with only the officers and cook attached to her, in a port where it was impossible to ship a new crew, the consul also retaining his papers, and demanding one hundred and twenty-five dollars, for the papers and men. By advice of others, however, the captain was induced to pay him seventy-five dollars as a bribe, besides all legal fees, which he did to prevent detention, &c. The consul then turned upon the men whom he had sheltered four days, had them taken up by the police as deserters, when they were soon restored to the ship. A statement of the above has been forwarded to the proper authorities at Washington, and it is further stated that the merchants and masters at Martinique, connected with the American trade, had forwarded a petition to our government exposing some of the consul's proceedings and praying for his removal from office. [Boston Courier.]

WASHINGTON BANK ROBBERY. We learn from the Intelligencer of Friday, that the trial of A. W. Goodrich, who was indicted for a collusion with Dennis G. Orme, the teller of the bank of the Metropolis, at Washington city, to rob the bank of a large sum of money, came on Thursday last, and after a patient investigation before an intelligent jury, he was acquitted. The jury were absent but a few minutes. The defence set up was that in receiving the money from Mr. Orme, he did it with no criminal intention, but the rather to preserve it, and he kept it for the time he did, in order to screen Mr. O. from whom he had formerly received favor and kindness. The trial of Orme was by consent of the counsel on both sides, postponed until the ensuing term of the criminal court.

PROTESTED POST NOTES. The notes of the Mississippi Planters Bank to the amount of three or four hundred thousand dollars, payable at the Bank of America, are now running to maturity, but there are no funds to meet them, and they are of course protested. [N. Y. Jour of Com.]

MISSOURI RIVER. The Globe states that information has been received at the engineer department from the superintendent of the improvement of the Missouri river, that the steam snag-boat Helipolis had worked 280 miles up from the mouth, and removed all the most dangerous snags from the main channel. The river is represented as being much changed in its appearance, and the navigation so much improved, that, up to the point reached by the snag-boat, steamers are now enabled to run in the night, which was not attempted by any of them previous to the commencement of the work.

TACTICS AND REGULATIONS FOR THE MILITIA, by major Cooper of the United States army. This is the title of a work published by R. P. De Silver, Philadelphia, which has already received the patronage of several of the states, and the legislature of New York at its last session appropriated money to purchase 2,500 copies. Since its publication, upwards of thirty thousand copies have been printed and sold. The following states have subscribed to the work: Pennsylvania 10,000 copies, South Carolina 5,000, Louisiana 2,000, Ohio 1,000, Mississippi 1,000. The book is to be had at the principal bookstores in this city. [N. Y. Post.]

ESPY'S THEORY. The Philadelphia Gazette contains a very remarkable fulfilment of a predition of Mr. Espy, in the announcement of a storm. On the first of April, (a clear day in Philadelphia), he stated, "that at this moment a storm is raging at the south, in the latitude of Charleston." Memorandum was made of the fact. By a careful examination of the papers of the next fortnight, it was seen that there was frequent mention of marine disasters around the precise locality indicated by Mr. Espy. This is certainly curious; although the first of April was a capital day for the storm, in event of a failure, it would have been a capital April joke.

CHARLESTOWN NAVY YARD. The Charlestown Aurora represents the Charlestown navy yard as in a most excellent condition. The Constellation in the dry dock is nearly ready for coppering. She will come out of the dock equal for a new ship; two of her decks have been put in new, and some of her planking, &c. Her beautiful model has been entirely preserved, and we presume she will prove one of the finest ships in our navy, of which the gallant Tuxton, her early commander might well be proud. The sloop of war Concord is lying at the wharf, in beautiful trim, waiting for orders. The Marion, another fine sloop of war recently launched, is nearly rigged, and may soon be got ready for sea.

THE BRITISH NAVY. The London correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce writes as follows under the date of April 24:

"Sir Edward Codrington last night brought forward his motion in the house of commons, on the inefficient state of the navy, in the shape of a resolution to the effect that the system of reducing the crews of vessels of war, during the time of peace, below the number required in war, is injurious to the best interests of the service, and that for the future only one complement of men should be the rule of the service. The gallant admiral contended that ships ought to be sufficiently manned at all times; and that it would have been a fatal affair had a collision taken place between Sir C. Douglas and admiral Baudin, entirely owing to a scarcity of hands. The secretary to the admiralty, Mr. Charles Wood, opposed the motion, on the ground that it had invariably been adopted and even sanctioned by lord Howe in 1773—and by the most distinguished officers in the British navy. The motion was lost by 90 to 27—the majority against it being 63."

DR. HOLMES, the alleged murderer of Tasche, who is now in jail at Montpelier, Vt. awaiting the decision of the proper authorities whether he shall be given up to the authorities of Canada, came very near making his escape last week, some one having furnished him with files, saws, aquafortis, &c.

TECUMSEH. A short time before the battle of Tippecanoe, a talk was held between general Harrison and Tecumseh. The general arrived first at the appointed place, which was an open spot, carpeted with green sward, and covered only by the canopy of heaven. He was accompanied by his suite, arrayed in full regimentals, and presenting a gay and imposing appearance. Soon after, Tecumseh approached the spot, clothed in splendid Indian military costume, which was well calculated to display his athletic form. His manner was not that of a suppliant. His bearing was as haughty as if worlds were at his disposal; and as he advanced towards the spot where Harrison awaited him, his step was firm, his form erect, with the head slightly thrown back, his features stern and rigid, and his nostrils were distended like those of the warhorse, when he scents the battle from afar. Indeed his whole appearance was that of one who asks no favor, but who, goaded on by contempt and hatred, breathes nought but defiance upon his enemies.

As Tecumseh proudly approached, general Harrison rose to receive the chief, and pointing to a bench prepared for the purpose, said "your white father requests you to be seated."

Tecumseh cast upon the American general a look of unmitigated scorn and indignation, "you my father?" said he. "No. The sun pointing to that luminary in the heavens) is my father! The earth (pointing to the ground) is my mother! And throwing himself on the ground,) I will rest no where but on her bosom!"

The annals of Roman or Grecian history will hardly furnish a reply to equal, in grandeur and sublimity, this of the untutored Indian. [Boston Mer. Jour.]

THE COTTON CIRCULAR. We find the following letter from Mr. Wilder in the New York Express in relation to the late cotton humber.

"I had supposed that my former communication on the 11th inst. relating to the cotton circular, would have satisfied the editors of the Journal of Commerce, but in this expectation it seems I have been mistaken. Had this journal confined its remarks to statements founded on inference, I should have disregarded their assertions as unworthy of notice, but as they have assumed the responsibility of using the expression "we know," it cannot be submitted to with impunity. In their paper of yesterday is an editorial article containing the following extract:

"Lastly Mr. Dunlap, the president of the bank, Mr. Cowperthwait, the cashier, and Mr. Bevan, of the Philadelphia house of Bevan & Humphreys, were all here and spent the day on Thursday, and were in consultation with Mr. Wilder and Mr. Rockwell, and we know that Mr. Wilder was in consultation with Mr. Dunlap, with one of these circulars in his hand."

In relation to the above, I deem it my duty to say, and I do it in the most explicit manner.

1st. It is utterly false, that Mr. Cowperthwait was in this city on Thursday as stated above, or at any other time for several weeks past.

2d. It is utterly false, that Mr. Bevan spent the day here on Thursday. He was here, I am informed, on Friday, but I did not see him, nor did Mr. Rockwell see him, nor did either Mr. Rockwell or myself know that he was here.

3d. It is utterly false, that there was any consultation whatever on any subject between Mr. Bevan, Mr. Cowperthwait and Mr. Dunlap, or either of them and Mr. Rockwell, and myself, or either of us.

4th. It is utterly false, that I was in consultation with Mr. Dunlap with one of the circulars in my hand. Mr. Dunlap, it is true, was in this city from Wednesday afternoon until Thursday afternoon, but I did not know he was here until about an hour and a half before his departure. I saw him then only accidentally for a few minutes, but at that time I did not know of the circular—had never seen it and had never heard of it. I did not know it was in existence or in contemplation until Friday morning, when printed copies of it were presented to me.

In conclusion I now repeat what I stated in my former communication, that the Bank of the United States had nothing whatever to do with the circular so far as I know and believe. S. V. S. WILDER.

RELEASE OF A STATE PRISONER. Some time during the last year, Reynolds, alias David Deal, son of David Deal, of Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, a promising youth of 19, visited Buffalo, in the state of New York, where he was persuaded to enlist with a company of volunteers to join the patriots, for the invasion of Canada. Young Deal, with several others, was soon captured by a company of British lancers, was tried and sentenced to death. His situation was made known to his friends, by whose entreaty sir George Arthur was induced to suspend the execution of the sentence for a time, and the young man was sent to England and committed to prison, there to await the approval of the sentence passed upon him in Canada, and its final execution. The rev. Mr. Cockman, judge McLean and Dr. Sewall, who were informed of the situation of young Deal, and the distress of his family, addressed letters to Mr. Stevenson, setting forth the circumstances of the case, and requesting his influence with the authorities of the British government, to save, if possible, the young man's life. Mr. Stevenson made every effort in his official capacity, but in vain; when he applied to the queen, and requested his release as a personal favor, upon which she promptly granted a free pardon, and the young man is now on his passage home. And thus an aged father and mother, and a large circle of other family connexions are made to rejoice in the restoration of a favorite boy, who, we hope, will learn a salutary lesson from the consequences of his indiscretion, and long live to thank Mr. Stevenson for his disinterested exertions, and bless queen Victoria for the exercise of his clemency. [Globe.]

FROM BRAZIL. The Portuguese schooner Eliza arrived at Rio de Janeiro about the 26th April, having on board the chevalier De Figaniera Morao, minister of her most faithful majesty to the court of Brazil.

The Rio de Janeiro Journal of Commerce of the 27th April says—

We have been informed by a person of respectability, who we know to have good sources of information, that on the departure of the English schooner Orestes, from Montevideo, negotiations for the arrangement of the French question were on foot, and that every thing gave promise that they would have a successful result.

The ship Louisiana, at Philadelphia from Rio de Janeiro, brings papers to 1st May. The United States Gazette says:—We perceive that a considerable excitement had been caused by a circumstance connected with the British ship, which had brought in three captured slavers. The papers do not give a full account, but so far as we can learn, the capturing of such vessels is not sufficiently popular, and one of the slave captains was rescued by the mob. Subsequently, a steamboat was passing near the British ship, and was hailed—no answer was given; whether the silence was intentional, or whether the noise of the machinery prevented the captain of the steamer from hearing, is not known.

A gun was fired from the British ship, and the ball struck a passenger of the boat in the forehead, and killed him; his wife, to whom he had been, and was cently married, was standing at his side, and was wounded slightly in the nose. This caused a terrible commotion on the boat. The English captain attempted to land, but was driven back; he then brought from his vessel an armed force, but was unable to get on shore. We see by one of the latest papers that a demand had been made upon the British commander for the persons who discharged the gun.

The Montevideo and Buenos Ayres dates are to the 6th April. The British packet has a notice of the death and funeral of Mr. John Benito Zimmerman, second son of Mr. J. C. Zimmerman, of Buenos Ayres.

Correspondence of the U. S. Gazette.
Montevideo, April 6th, 1839.

GENTLEMEN: Our frequent advices of late have us but little to say by the present opportunity, and the continuation of the blockade of Buenos Ayres, whence our accounts reach the 1st instant, gives no chance of general improvement in our market. The supplies of flour have been confined of late to the receipts of various small parcels in coasting vessels from Rio de Janeiro, which have all been sold at $22 per barrel, which is the value of it at present.

Of lumber, we received lately two cargoes from the United States, bringing together, 250,000 feet—but which, though a large quantity, both sold for at $45 per 1,000. The direct arrival from Batavia, with so large a cargo of rice, has supplied us with this article.

Plain domestic cottons are in large supply and only saleable at losing prices. Drills and osnaburghs answer better, but must not be sent in too large quantities. But few articles of American import are scarce or wanted, viz: wood and cane seat chairs, cordage, leaf tobacco, yellow soap and sperm candles. Salt keeps abundant and dull, at 9 rls. on board.

THE PERU-BOLIVIAN CONFEDERATION DISSOLVED AND GENERAL ANDRES SANTA CRUZ, SUPREME PROTECTOR, ABDICATED. From Peruvian papers lately received, we copy the proclamation of Santa Cruz, made at Arequipa in South Peru, after his defeat by the Chilean expedition in January:

Recent events in Bolivia and at Puno demand of me every sacrifice, to avoid the evils of civil war; I, therefore, decree—

"I. I abdicate from this moment the protectoral authority, which I legally exercised, over the states of the confederation."

"II. The state government of south Peru, and the local authorities, will continue to preserve order and enforce the existing laws, until a national convention shall decide upon the future state of the country."

By another decree, general Santa Cruz resigns the presidency of Bolivia; and in an address to the people of the republic, he says:

"Do not scandalize the world, Bolivians; by excesses, which must bring odium upon our country. Anarchy will destroy you if you be divided among yourselves, and yield to the counsel of evil passions. Wherever Divine Providence may conduct us, I shall not cease to hope ardently for your prosperity, which has been my only object for the last ten years."

Whilst general Santa Cruz still remained at Arequipa, his troops mutinied, and he retired to Islay a port on the Pacific. He was there lodged with the English consul, Mr. Crompton. An attack was apprehended from the populace, and seventy men were lauded from her Britannic Majesty's ship Samarang, to protect Santa Cruz. On the 13th of March, he embarked, taking with him generals Miller, Cerdana, Riva, Augero, Senor Garcia del Rio, Senor Irsarri, late Chilean plenipotentiary, and other persons of distinction. [Globe.]

A NEW MODE OF PROPELLING SHIPS. By the following extract of a letter, dated London, May 17, it seems that the new plan of propelling vessels by means of screws, has succeeded:

"The ship Archenedes has arrived at Portsmouth after a cruise in the channel, having beat a government steamer. The great value of the screw is now fully tested. The water thrown by it on the astonished of naval officers. She turns in double her length; her first action on starting is to answer her helm. The ship has encountered bad weather, but has met it beautifully. Paddle boxes of the ocean are now superseded, and as a tug, no known power can have such hold of the water."

NAVAL. The United States' steamer Poinsett, recently fitted out at this port under the direction of the war department, left here yesterday afternoon for Norfolk, to complete her armament and crew, whence she will proceed to Florida, to co-operate with the army in that quarter in the suppression of Indian hostilities. [Balt. Amer.]

Before the same board examinations were held for promotion in the case of assistant surgeons, J. B. Wright and John B. Wells, and in the deference case of surgeon Burton Randall, all of whom we approved.

Before another board, subsequently organized and which adjourned on the 17th instant, examinations were held for promotion in the case of assistant surgeon John B. Porter, and in the deference case of surgeon H. L. Heiskell, both of whom we approved.

Engineer orders, No. 5. Engineer department Washington, June 17, 1839. It has become painful to the chief engineer to announce the corps of engineers the death of a brother officer captain Wm. A. Eliason, who expired suddenly Alexandria, D. C. on the morning of the 15th inst.

As a testimonial of respect for the deceased, officers of the corps and those of the military a demy will wear the usual badge of mourning thirty days.

STEAM VESSELS OF WAR. The Army and Navy Committee states that the board of engineers and naval constructors at the late session, had under consideration the model, size, form and location of machinery, of two steam vessels of war, which the government have determined to build. The dimensions of the vessel are not stated. The board was composed of captain M. C. Perry, of the navy, president; Messrs. W. Kemble, one of the proprietors of the V. C. Point foundry; S. Humphreys, chief naval constructor; S. S. Hart and G. Lenthall, naval constructors; and C. H. Haswell, engineer of the United States ship Fulton.

MR. WEBSTER. The New York correspondent of the Boston Atlas, who has, evidently, the means of procuring information upon the subject, makes the following important statement in relation to the designs of Mr. Webster:

"I perceive a paragraph in some of the papers, stating that Mr. Webster had accepted a nomination as vice president of the ticket with general Everett. This is not correct. On the contrary, I myself wanted in saying that Mr. Webster had declined from the field. I am assured that he was determined, previous to his leaving the United States, to address a letter to his Massachusetts friends."

ing his views and wishes, but on his reaching this city he was persuaded to suspend the letter until his arrival in England. My impressions, therefore, are, that before this day, that letter has been written and is probably now on its way to this country.—Nor is my information derived from street rumor, but from a highly respectable and confidential friend of Mr. Webster, who conferred with him on the subject, previous to his sailing.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT. From the N. York Evening Post. It having been understood that the president of the United States intended to visit his native state this summer, our general committee have been making arrangements for his reception. In answer to a communication in behalf of that committee, the following letter has been received from him.

Washington, June 14, 1839.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter, in which, on behalf of the democratic general committee, you ask to be informed of the probable period of my arrival at New York, with a view to a public expression of regard for myself and approbation of my official conduct.

In intending to travel by private conveyance, I cannot fix a certain name the day on which I shall reach there, but I hope to do so by the first of July, the interchange of personal civilities with my fellow citizens in the course of my journey, will afford me the most lively gratification, and the only sentiment in regard to it that I desire to express is the hope that it may be attended with the least formality that is consistent with entire respect to the wishes of my friends.

As your letter leads me to believe that the committee design to invite me to a public dinner, and I have been apprised that a similar kindness is contemplated in other places, I trust I shall be pardoned if I express, in advance, of more formal terms, the obligation I shall feel myself under, to decline such compliments.

I am not insensible of the apparent indelicacy of us anticipating the intentions of my friends; but feel that in so doing, I may safely throw myself on their indulgence, and I need not assure them that I can never be unmindful of any manifestation of their regard or confidence.

Do me the favor to make these sentiments known to the committee, and to accept for yourself my thanks for the obliging manner in which you have conveyed their request. I am, sir, very respectfully, your friend and obedient servant.

M. VAN BUREN.

WHIG STATE CONVENTION. Delegates from twenty-five counties of the state of Pennsylvania, met at Chambersburg on the 13th inst., for the purpose of nominating delegates to a national convention, and framing an electoral ticket. George Haubers, of Franklin county, was chosen president; William Clarke, of Dauphin; J. Price Wetzel, of Philadelphia; Alexander Reed, of Washington county and J. G. Palmer, of Schuylkill county, were presidents. Resolutions strongly in favor of Henry Clay were adopted, although, not without a strenuous opposition from a respectable minority.

Resolutions were offered by C. B. Penrose, esq., a speaker of the senate, who proposed that the convention should adjourn, and a new one, composed of all the elements of opposition to Mr. Van Buren, be assembled at Harrisburg, on the fourth Monday in August next. Mr. Penrose's resolutions were negatived by a vote of 50 to 25. After a minority had used their utmost exertions to prevent the adoption of the resolutions favorable to Mr. Clay, reported by the committee, seventeen of them, among whom were Messrs. C. B. Penrose, John Dickey and William Clark, entered their solemn protest against the proceedings, withdrew from the convention, and after organizing, passed a preamble and resolutions, recommending the assembling of a state convention of delegates of the Democrats of Mr. Van Buren, on the fourth Monday in August next, to elect delegates to the whig national convention which is to meet in Harrisburg on December next. The majority of the convention adopted an address, and nominated J. Andrew Tulz and Joseph Lawrence as senatorial delegates to the national convention.

DIRT. Circular of the whig central committee. The democratic whig central committee for the state having been strongly solicited to call a convention of a limited number of delegates from the several counties in the state, in proportion to their representation in the general assembly, for the purpose of appointing delegates to the national convention, which is to meet in December next, to nominate candidates for president and vice president. This method of appointing delegates to the national convention has been also recommended by a public meeting recently held in Miami county. However proper this method may in itself be, the central committee, after an interchange of opinion with several of the most discreet and influential whigs in various parts of the state, deem it improper to advise its adoption. They consider this question to have been settled by the great whig convention of the 31st May last. Those who were present at that convention will recollect that the subject then elicited considerable discussion and some warmth of feeling, and that the vesting in each congressional district the right of appointing its own delegate was adopted by a large majority, as being most democratic, and best calculated to bring out the real sentiments of the people. Any attempt to substitute a different course at this time, would, it is feared, excite jealousies among the friends of the illustrious persons whose names are most prominent as candidates for the presidency, and add to the difficulty, already too great, of reconciling conflicting opinions. Whatever course shall be adopted to select the delegates of the national convention, it is to be presumed that Ohio will with one voice, present to that convention her own illustrious son as her favorite candidate, agreeably to the successive decisions of three of the most numerous conventions ever held. But should the union of the opposition to misrule and executive usurpation, throughout the union, render it necessary to recede from this stand, that her delegates will with equal unanimity and cordially, give their voice for that individual who will be most likely to effect that union, and render its object successful.

MEXICO AND TEXAS. The Charleston Mercury contains the following letter from colonel Bee, the Texan envoy to Mexico. This may be deemed an official account of the colonel's reception. It was before stated that he had left Vera Cruz for Havana.

Havana, June 9, 1839.

To the editor of the Mercury:

SIR: I arrived here on the 6th, in the French steam frigate Phœton, M. Goubin, commander. We were eight days on Vera Cruz—having had head winds the whole voyage. An arrival from New Orleans yesterday brought papers of that city to the 1st June. They contain remarks founded on the first ebullition of feeling evinced at Vera Cruz on hearing that an agent from Texas was on board a United States vessel of war, in their waters. But it is due the citizens of Vera Cruz, and more especially his excellency general Victoria, commandant of this department, that I should correct an improper impression upon this point—as, after being a few days on board the beautiful fifty-two gun ship La Gloire, Monsieur Le Conte Laine, commander, to whose hospitality and kindness, an everlastingly indebted—I landed under the sanction of general Victoria, and remained in his city ten days, in the perfect enjoyment of my liberty; and receiving at his hands the most distinguished courtesy. It is true, that after several communications with the authorities at Mexico, it was decided that I could not be received as the representative of Texas. But there was no indignity offered "the rebel," and unlike king David's ambassadors to Nabum, I returned on board the French fleet, without my head being shaved.

It was perhaps expecting too much of Mexico, to suppose she would receive me—inheriting as they do, all the pride of the Spaniards—Mexico herself having but recently been acknowledged by Spain, after years of separation—but Texas is a forward "banding," and I thought the sooner the mother's eye was met the better—if she was to be rejected with frowns, she would deplore it—if received with smiles, be gratified. The result is, (or has been), that I have not been received as the bearer of the olive branch from Texas. But the ice is broke—we have done our part, and I flatter myself the day is not distant, when a definite treaty boundary will be established between Mexico and Texas, consecrated as it must be by a lasting peace. I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

BARNARD E. BEE.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT CALAMITY. The John Bull a valuable steamboat, was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 19th inst. whilst on her way to Montreal, and a large number of passengers (estimated at twenty) were either drowned or burnt to death. The event occurred between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, when the boat was off Larabee, about eight miles above Sorrel. The Montreal Gazette contains the following particulars of the calamity.

"Mr. Thomas, the purser, was the first to discover the fatal event. He was in bed in his berth, on the foot of the main stairs, leading from the lower to the deck, and was awakened by the crackling noise of fire on the same side of the boat, being the larboard. Upon going on deck, Mr. Thomas discovered, to his horror, that almost the whole of the boat amidships was in one blaze of fire, and that the flames were making such rapid progress to the stern, that it would be difficult to rouse the passengers from sleep, and get them on the main deck in time to save them. He immediately gave the alarm to the captain, and by throwing billets of wood through the skylights of the gentleman's cabin, called the attention of those below to their dangerous situation.

From both cabins, the passengers immediately began to issue in their night dresses, and without being able to carry any of their luggage or property with them, owing to the stifling smoke and heat, all the passengers did not succeed in making their way to the upper in the stern of the boat. Immediately upon discovering that the boat was on fire, captain Thomas, whose conduct throughout was beyond all praise, ordered her to be steered toward the shore, where she grounded at the bow in about eight feet water, but with her stern aloft. The great object now was to save the passengers, for which the boats of the John Bull, and the vessels which were in the harbor, immediately employed, the masters and crews of those vessels working them with zeal and activity, and otherwise giving every possible assistance in saving the passengers from the burning bog. By this means, many of the passengers were got ashore; but we lament to state that it is supposed about twenty of them have been lost, either by falling into the water, or by throwing themselves into the river to escape so dreadful a death. Among the latter was a Miss Ross, of Quebec, who it is said, was there conveyed by her brother; but no one on board was acquainted with her, or knows to what family she belongs.

Many were the narrow and hair breadth escapes which were made by a number of the passengers; and much valuable property has been lost, the amount of which it is as yet impossible to ascertain. The second engineer of the John Bull, a fireman, and one of the crew, are missing, and are supposed to have been either drowned or burnt to death. These three individuals were on duty when the fatal accident happened; but were the other persons on board who could give any information as to the vessel, or which the fire originated. Both the engines of the John Bull were in full operation until a short time before she struck overboard, in consequence of the hull being burnt to the water's edge. The remaining portion of the boat then rose about two feet out of the water, when she a second time burnt to the water's edge.

Immediately after the dreadful event had occurred, the purser came to town with the intelligence, when Mr. Mulson despatched the Canada for the purpose of bringing up the passengers of the John Bull, and affording them such other relief as they may have stood in need of. We have been unable to obtain a list of the John Bull's passengers, but the following were among those on board: Messrs. Rhynas and Mr. Robertson, Merchants of Montreal, Messrs. G. Nepean, Upper Canada, captain Fraser, of Quebec, Mr. James Dickson, of Three Rivers, and Mrs. W. K. McCord, formerly of Quebec. These have all since arrived here, by land, or by Canada steamer, this morning. The body of Miss Ross was also brought to town.

It is more in sorrow than in anger that we are compelled to state, that the conduct of the Canadian habitans to the unfortunate passengers on board the John Bull, was of a description which reflects the utmost disgrace upon their ancient character for good feeling, humanity and hospitality. They could not be prevailed upon to lend the least assistance, or make any payment to an amount beyond reasonable compensation; and when they did lunch their way, it was evidently, more for the purpose of plunder than with the view of saving life and property.

As an instance of their misconduct, one gentleman, who was clinging to the stern of the John Bull, cried to some habitans for assistance; but they cruelly refused to comply with his request, unless he would promise to give them ten dollars. One of the passengers asked for a glass of water, but was harshly told that there was plenty in the river. And, shocking to state, it is said that such were their avidity for plunder that the ear-rings of Miss Ross were torn away. A considerable quantity of baggage, and articles which floated from the wreck, were found secreted in the neighboring houses; and even some of the re-delivery of them proved fruitless, until returned by a body of two or three of the passengers at once. Much property of value still remains concerned in the possession of the country people; and we are truly happy to learn that a body of police has been despatched from town to the spot, in order to protect all that can be saved from the wreck of the unfortunate John Bull."

CAUSES OF PATRIARCHISM. The overseers of the poor at Portland, Maine, have found that of the twenty-four brought there either directly or indirectly by intemperance. They have ascertained that of the eighty-eight families partially assisted out of the almshouse, seventy-four were reduced to want by intemperance; that of the sixteen belonging to Portland, who became chargeable in other towns, thirteen were in consequence of intemperance, and that of the three hundred and ninety-one who were during the year, in mates of the almshouse, three hundred and eighty were brought there directly or indirectly by intemperance.

The summary of the whole then is that there were inmates of the almshouse during the year,		331

WHEAT AND MARRIAGES. The Massachusetts Spy has gathered up the following as one of the modern discoveries of the politicians of the day, that the high price of agricultural production diminishes the number of matrimonial contracts. The proof is sought in the statistics of England, and a table was exhibited by Mr. Rantoul in one of his lectures, showing that love rose and fell with the market value of living. The evidence is contained in the columns of figures below, showing the price of wheat and the number of marriages in the United Kingdom of Great Britain.

The average price of wheat in each year above stated is 73s.; of marriages, $1,791. [N. Y. Express.]

The imports of the previous year, ending 31st September, 1837, amounted to $140,999,217, and the exports to $117,419,376. It will be observed that while parts of 1837-8, are less by $27,000,000 than in the imports of 1837-8, are less by only $9,000,000 more. The tonnage of American shipping which entered in 1837-8, is greater than in 1836-7, by 3,254 tons, while the foreign tonnage is less by 173,593 tons. This again is a favorable indication. The actual tonnage owned in the United States has increased within the year, from 1,895,835 tons, to 1,994,798; or 93,113 tons. Rather less tonnage was built in 1837-8, than in 1836-7.

GERMANIC POWERS. The following is an account of the military forces of the Germanic powers and confederated states, more correct than what we published, some ten days since, from a Frankfort paper, and which is supplied us by a correspondent in that city:—

The Austrian navy is composed of 8 sail of the line, 8 frigates, 4 corvettes, 6 brigs, 7 schooners, and several smaller vessels; besides a flotilla of 25 armed boats on the Danube.—The Russian navy is composed of 36 ships of the line, 28 frigates, 8 cutters, 10 brigs, 61 schooners, 27 galleys, 142 gun boats, 30 floating batteries, 32 steamboats, making in all 874 sail, having together 7,400 guns, 36,000

THE BRITISH MINISTRY.

The following table will show the names of the present ministers who constitute the British cabinet with their titles, salaries expressed in pound sterling:—

Wm. Lamb, Viscount Melbourne, first lord of the treasury, £5,000

Charles C. Pepys, baron Cottenham, lord chancellor, 14,000

Henry Petty, marquis of Lansdowne, lord president of the council, 2,000

J. W. Ponsbury, viscount Duncannon, lord of the privy seal, 2,000

Right hon. Thomas Spring Rice, chancellor of the exchequer, 3,000

Lord John Russell, secretary of state for the home department, 5,000

Henry Phipps, marquis of Norwunby, colonial secretary, 5,000

G. E. Kynmond, earl of Minto, first lord of the admiralty, 4,000

Sir J. C. Hobhouse, president of the board of control, 3,000

Sir Charles Poulett Thompson, president of board of trade, 2,000

Viscount Howick, secretary of war, 2,000

H. R. Vassal Fox, baron Holland, chan. of duchy of Lancaster, 3,000

The marquis of Normandy has lately been removed from the government of Ireland, where his salary was £20,000, to succeed lord Gleichen in the colonial department. His administration in Ireland is severely censured by the opposition.

The ages of ministers are as follows:

Viscount Melbourne 61

Lord Barnton 56

Lord Cottenham 5

Viscount Duncannon 4

Marquis of Normanby 5

Earl Minto 5

Lord Holland 6

We have not the means at hand of ascertaining the ages of the other members of the cabinet.

It may be interesting to know how far some of the leaders of the opposition have got along in life, therefore set down some of them.

Lord Wellington is 70 years old.

Lord Lyndhurst, who is son of John Cople the distinguished portrait painter, was born in Boston, 1772, and is 67 years old.

Lord Brougham is 60.

Earl Durham, J. G. Lambton, 47.

The oldest peer of England is baron Schlabach, who was born in 1751, and is consequently 88 years old. The earl of Westmoreland is one year younger. [Salem J.]

LONGEVITY. Marshfield, (Mass.) vs. rough, (Me.) We find in the Bangor Whig a notice of a long life from Mr. Adam Rogers, whose pride appears to have been aroused by the publication of the case he refers to.

The editors of the Whig & Courier:
 DEARS: Having seen in the Wesleyan Journal of 25th ult. a notice of a case of remarkable longevity in a family that originated in Scarborough in your state, the children of which were eleven in number, two of whom are still living, eight having died at the age of eighty years, I take the liberty to send you a notice of another case, which though exactly of the kind, is in my belief, more remarkable.

My father's family were all born and brought up in Marshfield, Massachusetts, and consisted of six brothers and four sisters. The following died at the ages set against their names.

Timothy Rogers	105 years
Israel Rogers	103 "
Poleg Rogers	107 "
Amos Rogers	85 "
Zachus Rogers	97 "
Adam Rogers (my father)	104 "
Lydia Lewis	90 "
Bethia Tolman if living, is about 110	" "
I have not heard of her death.
Eunice Ford died last year	100 "
Jane Oldham if living upwards of	100 "

Adding their aggregate ages 988 " it is probable that Betsey Tolman and Jane Oldham died a few years since. If so it will reduce to a amount somewhat. Will some one in Massachusetts who may happen to find the fact inform me if they can deal, when they die, by letter addressed, Bangor, Maine, directed to me. ADAM ROGERS.

FIRST ARKANSAS CARAVAN TO MEXICO. About the 1st of May, a caravan with 40 men and 18 wagons, besides a number of mules, led Van Buren, in the state of Arkansas, fitted out by Messrs. Pickett & Greig, of that place, bound on a land voyage to Chihuahua, in the republic of Mexico, with an assorted stock of merchandise, principally dry goods, about 40 U. S. dragoons, under the command of Lt. Bowman, were to meet them at camp Holmes, the Canadian, 150 miles west of Fort Gibson, to escort the caravan a portion of its journey through a country of the wild Indians.

The distance from Van Buren to Chihuahua is not 700 miles; but as that town is not a port of tray, the caravan will necessarily first perform a journey to Santa Fe, nearly 600 miles out of its way, in order to enter their goods at the custom use. Suitable representations were made to the Mexican minister at Washington during the late session of congress, and there is every prospect of Chihuahua being soon made a port of entry, which will greatly facilitate the transmission of merchandise to that portion of the Mexican dominions, where they are so greatly needed—the recent blockade by the English having been the means of keeping the whole country destitute of the necessary and ordinary goods of wearing apparel. [Arkansas Gazette.]

THE FIRE AT PORT GIBSON. The following account of the late disastrous fire at Port Gibson, is taken from a letter written by a gentleman at Grand Gulf, to a gentleman in New Orleans.

"The fire occurred about eleven o'clock, on the morning of the 1st inst. and originated in a kitchen, the rear of, and adjoining the store and dwelling of Messrs. Andersons. Commencing near the ceiling, it spread in both directions, and the flames being very high at the time, it was soon found possible to stay its ravages. Its progress was rapid, most beyond conception; and in a few hours the whole business portion of the town, together with most of the public buildings, were one complete mass of smoking ruins. The sufferers are the Messrs. H. and A. Andrews, Moore, Burroughs & Co., Wells & Person; Bush & Elmer; R. Parkinson; Kelly & Lyd; Thomas & McGill; Moody & Man; T. D. Squires; A. J. Bodewell; Merrifield and Dillon; and R. Wright, merchants. The goods were saved in some instances almost without loss. The Messrs. Andersons, and Moore, Burroughs & Co. being the principal sufferers at that time, the value on the real estate, among them, burned, but saved all her books, papers, and every thing of value, as also, did the court house and post office. The principal loss in buildings will upon J. Loring, esq. Passamore Hodges, Mr. Waller, Pierson & Co. and the Messrs. Andersons. The surance, we understand, was only partial, not extending perhaps one-third of the real value on the real estate. The private residences burned, did not exceed five or four, and those comparatively but of moderate value. It is impossible at present to estimate the real loss; but it probably will not fall far short of $300,000, and may exceed it.

SULLY'S VICTORIA. The controversy between Mr. Sully and the St. George's society of Philadelphia, relative to the property of the portrait of Victoria, as we announced some time since, has been settled by arbitration. As the case is one of interest to artists, we copy some particulars in regard to it. The facts admitted are:

1st. That Sully contracted, for a stipulated sum, to paint a picture of queen Victoria for the St. George's society of Philadelphia.

2d. That upon the examination of witnesses on general usage was established proving the right of an artist to exhibit a picture taken on such a contract. Mr. Sully on his return from Europe attempting to exhibit the picture for his own benefit, an injunction was obtained, which ended by submission to an arbitration composed of Messrs. Horace Binney, Wm. Rawle, and T. I. Wharton, esqrs.

The complicated questions arising, were— 1st. Does an artist contracting for a specific piece of art, for a specific person or society, own the idea of it, so as to multiply copies himself, and to prohibit the purchaser of it from taking an engraving from it, or multiplying copies of it?

2d. Can the artist have a copy right of a picture, he thus contracted to take for another?

3d. Has he the right to exhibit what is called the original picture, after the time when it is ready for delivery, and when he is by contract bound to deliver it.

It was contended for the St. George's society, that in ordering the painting they ordered it for a charitable exhibition, and contracted for full property in it. One of its elements of value was that it should be unique. Copies of it would diminish its value. The suggestion of the subject was by the society. The idea was theirs.

It was contended for Mr. Sully, that he had as much right to a copy right of his picture as a writer of his book, or a patentee of his patent, and granting that the original was theirs, the study was his, of which, it being his idea, he had a right to make as many copies as he chose.

A majority of the arbitrators, Mr. Wharton dissenting, decided—

1. We do award, and adjudge, that the society of the Sons of St. George shall forthwith pay to Thos. Sully, the sum of five hundred dollars, and the said Thomas Sully shall thereupon forthwith deliver to the society of the Sons of St. George, the full length picture of queen Victoria, in her coronation robes, painted by the said Thos. Sully for the said society.

2. And we do further award, order, and adjudge that upon such delivery, the said corporation shall procure to dispose of the same as they shall see fit, and that they are not, and shall not be deemed to be the assignees or owners of the design or invention of the said picture, and shall not have authority to obtain a copy right for an engraving thereof.

3. And we do further award, order, and adjudge that the full length picture of queen Victoria in her coronation robes, painted by the said Thomas Sully, for his own use, shall be retained by him, and that he is and shall be and remain the absolute owner thereof, to dispose of the same as he shall see fit; and that he is and shall be deemed to be the author and exclusive owner of the invention and design of the same, and also of the design and invention of the picture to be delivered as aforesaid to the society of the Sons of St. George, with all the rights incident to the said authorship and ownership.

JEWELRY. The Salem Gazette remarks that scarcely any branch of manufacture has advanced more rapidly and steadily in this country, during the last twenty years, than that of articles of jewelry.

In 1820 it might be said, with almost literal truth, that nothing of the kind was manufactured in the United States. But now, much the larger part, of all the more rich and solid articles are made in this country. There are very good and extensive assortments in the stores, were not a single specimen of foreign jewelry to be found. Articles of English manufacture are entirely superseded by the superior skill and taste of our workmen; but there are some sorts of work done by the French jewelers, which cannot be equalled here. Those are all the mock and counterfeit articles which make the show of solid gold, with an incredibly small quantity of the precious substance. The English and American workmen excel in the more rich and solid fabrics, while the French excel in the more specious and fragile commodities.

BLUE LAWS. An individual was convicted yesterday morning at the police court, of violating a law of the commonwealth, which forbids the performance of any work or labor on Sunday, which is not a work of necessity or mercy. It appeared that the defendant did dig about forty or fifty holes in his garden on Sunday the 2d of June, in which potatoes were afterwards planted. The complainant, named Dilloway, lived next neighbor to him, and had a sink or drain emptying into the premises of the defendant, which had been stopped by the digging, and yet the complainant proved no right to drain his water in that direction.

It was proved for the defendant that he was a respectable, hard working man, employed as a teamster in Ager's foundry, at south Boston—that he had to work from four o'clock in the morning until night and often in the evening—that his family had been sick, and that he was reduced in his circumstances. Notwithstanding this, judge Simmons ruled that the digging might have been done on some other day, and as the law was peremptory, he could do not otherwise than find the defendant guilty, and find him as low as possible, two dollars and costs. The complainant admitted on the stand that he had inimical feelings towards the defendant. According to this law there is no printer of a daily paper in this city that is not liable, with all his journeymen and boys, to be brought before the police court every Monday morning and fined. WASHINGTON ENCAMPMENT. We learn from the Trenton Empirum that on the 11th inst. a mounted detachment of the United States dragoons, numbering between 80 and 90 men from the Carlisle barracks under command of capt. E. V. Sumner of the 1st dra, goons arrived at the encampment. They are fine looking men and had noble horses.

There are now about seven hundred men in the encampment. It is rumored that the troops in expectation of Florida, will not arrive. The ability of the renewed attacks from the Indians, will perhaps detain them.

The Trenton State Gazette of Friday the 14th inst. states that the troops drill in companies twice a day, and parade about half an hour before sundown. At the parade on Monday, a soldier whom the spectators observed to be lame, and who was in the ranks of the troops drawn up in a line, and an officer read that he had been found guilty of deserting his post while in Florida, and that he was sentenced to be shot in the presence of the army. The spectators who had visited the camp for amusement, began to think they were about to see a tragedy until the officer announced that the president had commuted the punishment, and that he had labor at hard labor for the said army, during the whole term of his enlistment, to have an iron chain and ball fastened to his leg, to be allowed no more clothing than was absolutely necessary, to receive no pay, and at the expiration of his term to be dishonorably discharged.

FREE NEGROES. The New Orleans Bulletin states that the law of Louisiana which prohibits free negroes from entering or residing within the limits of that state, under severe penalties, was enforced a few days ago, under the following circumstances:

A free woman of color named Jane Richardson, was indicted for being found within the state after receiving a license to remove to another state. The attorney general conducted the prosecution in person. He recited the law to the jury, and introduced evidence to prove the allegations of the indictment. On the part of the prisoner it was shown that she had been several years in the state, during which time her department had been correct and praiseworthy. Upon these facts a motion was submitted to the jury, to acquit the prisoner, which they brought in a verdict of guilty—in accordance with which she must be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for one year. This is the first trial of the kind and at the request of a humane officer to the criminal court, we are induced to give publicity to the proceedings, in order that the numerous class of persons now in the city liable to similar conviction, may make their escape before it is too late.

The law provides that for the second offence the punishment shall be imprisonment for life.

THE LATE DR. COOPER. From the Charleston (S. C.) Telescope. We announced, in our last, the death of Dr. Cooper, and must now say something in regard to him. His name has been before the public, attracting a good deal of attention, for sixty years, during which time there is scarcely any department of intellectual exertion with which it has not been connected. For the extent and multifariousness of his knowledge, he was indeed a very extraordinary man. He published works on law, medicine, medical jurisprudence, political economy, and was a liberal writer upon the current politics of the day. Justice de Broussais. He received an honorary diploma of doctor of medicine from the university of Pennsylvania, and was a judge of the court of common law of that state. He was at one time professor of chemistry in the college of Carlisle—was offered the same chair in the university of Virginia, by his friend Mr. Jefferson, and subsequently filled it in the college of South Carolina. Of the last he became president, upon the death of Dr. Moxey; and by order of the trustees, lectured on chemistry, geology, and political economy. To these encyclopaedia acquirements and occupations, he added a large acquaintance with elegant literature.

The predominant qualities of Dr. Cooper's intellectual character were industry and activity. He had pursued the whole field of learning with untiring rapidity. It incessantly sought for knowledge; not with any apparent drudgery or toil, but up to the last moments of his life, with that youthful and fresh alacrity which belongs to the pursuits of pleasure. He did not hesitate to follow his reasoning wherever it led, and what he thought he said. Authority had but little weight with him. He always endeavored to apply the touchstone of reason to every proposition, and to judge of it by that test alone.

His military studies, and his uncommonly wide observation of society, had enriched his memory with vast stores of useful and agreeable topics; and these, combined with a cheerful temper, a social spirit, and a most pleasant style of conversation, rendered him a most delightful companion. He was an admirable talker— terse, epigrammatic, gay, and instructive. He was rarely in a company in which he did not say the best thing that was uttered. His conversation was illustrated by well turned anecdotes, ornamented by sparkling classical allusions, and enriched by sensible and judicious remarks. His temper was most agreeable, and his whole maniere d'être distinguished by a pervading bon homie, and kindness of nature. He was benevolent, friendly, and unobtrusively prompt to do a good turn, "to spread friendships and to cover hearts." He was fond of children, addicted to pets, and kind to servants. Throughout his whole behavior there was a winning simplicity and directness; always agreeable but in one of his age, learning and abilities peculiarly captivating. He resided amongst us for twenty years, and we doubt whether he has ever been known to manifest a feeling of personal unkindness towards any individual.

Whether his labors in the cause of science and liberty shall give a lasting memory to his name, we shall not undertake to judge; but we confidently say that he will long be remembered by those who knew him with affection and respect. As he honored us with his friendship, and received in return our love and admiration, it was gratifying to us to see the firmness and equanimity with which he sustained himself through a long and painful sickness, and the resignation with which he watched the slow and certain approach of death.

NEWSPAPER CREDITS. From the Cincinnati Chronicle. We observe a notice that the newspaper convention is to be held, or has been held, at some time, or some where. It is no matter. Conventions are of no moment anywhere.

But this reminds us of one small matter, which publishers, editors, printers, readers and all should join hand in hand about. It is the substitution of cash for credit, in the newspaper system. This change would do more for the interests of all concerned in the periodical press, and would do less harm, than any other would save many publishers from ruin, and would increase the remuneration and respect paid to the newspaper press.

Some of the evils of credit for newspaper subscriptions are these.

In the first place the sums to be collected are too small and too much scattered to admit of collection without very great expense in the collection, even when promptly paid.

In the next place, during the time for which credit is given, numerous changes take place among the subscribers by which a positive loss accrues. According to the postmasters' brief epistles some are dead, some are gone to Texas, some to Illinois or Iowa, and have not told where, and some are seized with a very short memory, and forget they ever subscribed. In most newspaper establishments, in the interior, this class of persons amount to one-fourth the whole number of subscribers. As an example of the effects produced by this system, we are told there are two newspaper establishments in one of the cities of Iowa, which have $100,000 of bad debts accumulated in this manner, and the other $60,000.

But the evil effects of this system, are not confined to one side of the question.

The people lose a great deal in this way. Many publishers often send their papers to gentlemen who never subscribe, and who are unwilling to tell the proprietor, they will not take his paper; and because the cash is not called for, let it slip along from day to day, till by and by, he is saddled with a bill, without ever ordering the paper. Had it been the cash system, he would have given a decided no, as he now does to a further continuance of his paper.

But, further, some who are willing to tell the proprietor, that the publisher can always afford a trade discount to the subscriber, than the money is worth to him. This is usually 20 per cent, and the loss to the bona fide subscribers to papers in the United States, is, in the aggregate, an immense sum.

There is every reason, then, both to the proprietors and the public, why newspaper credits should be abolished.

The true plan is to sell papers as any other article is sold, and if credit is to be given, let it be given wholly to the responsible agents who may undertake their distribution.

INHUMAN ACT. Yesterday morning a small negro boy, said to be owned by a Mr. Bertram of the third municipality, slipped and fell on a part of the asphaltum pavement, spilt salt, but in pursuing his way, leaving the slight impression of his hands, on the surface of it.—One of the men, employed in preparing the bitumen, perceiving the lad prostrate, and probably irritated at his carelessness, clutched him in his arms, and running with him to that portion of the street, where the molten liquid was being poured, thrust both his hands into it!

The agony of the young negro must have been excruciating; for he roared at the utmost extension of his lungs; ran through the streets, as if deprived of his senses; and in his hands, to no purpose, as the boiling substance, acted on by the cool air, only adhered the closer! Where he fled to we could not ascertain; his shrieks still ring on the ears of those who saw and heard him!

A gentleman who was a witness to the transaction immediately went for the police, for the purpose of securing the molten bitumen, and calling the perpetrator arrested, but seeing one of the aldermen of the municipality, on his way to the guard house, he detailed to him the circumstances, when the alderman requested him to keep watch on the ruffian, while he repaired to the police station. This was done; but the fellow became apprehensive of the consequences, and bolted; he ran some distance, and then after him, still in the Royal street, when he met the alderman accompanied by some of the police, and pointed out the perpetrator to them. Chase was given but to no purpose, as he succeeded in effecting his escape, either by entering a house or secreting himself in some back place.

We know not by what process the bitumen can be raised from the hand of the man, and an attempt is only made of accomplishing it will be, by tearing it off, and bringing the skin of the hands with it. For the sake of humanity, we hope the unfeeling scoundrel may not escape the punishment that such an atrocious act so justly merits; indeed, one of the witnesses of it is so indignant, that he has determined on keeping a strict look out for, and having the ruffian, still under to justice. [Louisiana.]

PRINTING. A curious legend exists relative to the discovery of printing. On an evening of the fifteenth century, Faust was travelling towards a town in Germany. Just before him rode a traveller on horseback. The shoes of his horse led on the stones, and he made every regular impression repeated with exactness each step. Faust observed this. The next day printing was invented.

There is a similar account given of the discovery of lithography, which took place only forty years ago.

One night Aloys Senefelder, chorist of the Munich theatre, entered his small room, with three things in his hand, a piece of zinc, a stone, and a printer's ball charged with printing ink, for it was he who made on the theatre checks the little mark changed each time to prevent fraud. Scarcely had he laid the order on the mantle before it was blown off, and fell into a basin of water. Aloys snatched up the precious paper, wiped it, and replacing it on the mantle, he put the ball on the stone, and blew away the new mark, which on the way had rubbed against the ball. The black marks made by this contact were observed next day, transferred with admirable precision to the damp paper. The chorist, Aloys Senefelder, observed this, and lithography was invented.

EARL OF STIRLING. We noticed recently, among other items of foreign intelligence, that a gentleman, calling himself the earl of Stirling, and assuming the possession of the Canadas and part of Maine, with power to create baronets, under a charter granted by Charles I, in 1629, was under trial for forgery, some of the documents to authenticate this claim, having proved false. The result of the trial was, that the man, who assumed an extinguisher on his claims, without its having appeared that he had been privy to the forgery. His chief claim was founded on a document written, (or said to be written) in 1706, on the back of an old map of Canada, published 1703. But this map was one by De Lesle, who was appointed geographer to the king of France in 1718, and still taking impressions from the plate of 1703, added, under his name, the words "geographer to the king" retaining the date of 1703, to fix the commencement of his copyright. The earl of Stirling's map was one with the addition of "geographer to the king" to De Lesle's title, and could not have been published until 1718. Of course, then it could not have been in existence in 1706, and the writings on its map, thus dated, must have been forgeries.—One curious part of the affair was that the earl of Stirling, on the failure of a trial in the Scottish court, had gone to Paris and made acquaintance with an ancient-forteller, named Mademoiselle Le Normand. It was she who had procured him the additional documents on which he again brought forward his claim. This she had said, had been forwarded to her through the post. To her he had given a bond for 400,000 francs, payable in case that he obtained his property, and the recognition of his title. It is suspected that she forged them. She was upwards of 70 at the time. The forgeries are said to have been imitated. [Potsville Journal.]

THREAD. On a late visit to Pawtucket, we called at the thread manufacturing establishment of capt. N. E. G. Dexter & Son, and were astonished to see to what perfection the manufacture of thread had arrived in this country. The whole of this extensive concern is under the control of capt. Dexter, who by his personal supervision, and the judicious management, has brought this branch of American industry so near to perfection. They employ five cotton mills in the manufacture of thread, which gives employment to 200 hands, exclusive of those under their immediate control. They manufacture $130,000 worth of thread per annum, of the finest and most beautiful texture, equal in every respect to any made in this country. The manufacture of thread in Pawtucket, of which there are several excellent establishments, has almost entirely displaced the place of the threads formerly imported from England. [Providence Journal.]

LAW OF COPY-RIGHT. U. S. circuit court—judge Betts presiding. An application was made to the court last week to obtain an injunction to restrain Mr. Collier from selling a cheap edition of captain Mariatt's new novel, "The Phantom Ship," on the ground that the copy-right had been purchased from the author by Carey & Hart. It was contended in favor of the application that captain Mariatt was, at the time that the right of the copy-right, a resident of the state of Pennsylvania, and therefore had a right, under the law of 1831, to dispose of his works in the same manner as any other American citizen.

Against the application it was urged that captain Mariatt was not a resident of the country, and therefore not entitled to avail himself of the provisions of the law. Captain Mariatt, it was stated, came to this country in the spring of 1837, and travelled over a considerable part of the country. He visited Philadelphia during his stay in the country, and while there, filed a declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States. It appeared that during the whole of the time he was in this country, he not only considered himself a British subject, but was an officer in the British navy, and that during the trouble in Canada last year, he offered his services to be employed as an officer in the provincial army.

The judge said that the only question for the court to decide was whether captain Mariatt was a resident of the country. The term resident had been decided to mean a permanent inhabitant of the state. It was evident that a man, who was a mere transient visitant, whose family, business, intentions and relations were all abroad could not be considered a resident, and the filing a declaration of an intention to become a citizen, could not make him one. The court therefore decided against the application. [N. Y. Express.]

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THE WEST. There are constructing in the five western states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan:

Of slackwater navigation,	1,750 miles.
Of rail roads,	1,540 "
Of McAdams roads,	1,400 "

Total, 4940

Making in the general aggregate of work to which the states are parties, about five thousand miles of artificial communications.

Of laborers directly employed on the works, there is supposed to be, at the lowest estimate, not less than twenty thousand, during the greatest portion of the year. If to these we add the numerous body of public officers, engineers, contractors, agents, storekeepers, and all other persons employed on the works, we find a population of not less than one hundred and fifty thousand, who are dependent upon the public works of the western states. The expenditures now annually amount to between four and five millions of dollars and the sum total of money solemnly pledged by legislative enactments to the completion of these works with what has already been expended on them, is at least the enormous sum of forty-eight millions of dollars. To this sum we may add at least five million pledged on the part of individuals, and large sums for the completion of the national road. Of this aggregate about ten million have already been expended and it is within bounds to say, that an amount fully equal to the sum total will be expended on these and other similar undertakings within the next eight years.

THE LICENSE LAW OF MASSACHUSETTS. On Friday the 14th inst., the case of GEORGE C. Jacobs, who had been convicted in the police court of Boston, for violation of the license law, fined $10. On appeal to the superior court, the case came before the court, on some legal objections, raised by the defendant's counsel, to the legality of the process of imprisonment, which had been issued for the non-payment. The case created great excitement, and several thousand people were collected about the court house to learn the result. On a full hearing the court were unanimous in the opinion, that the defendant ought to be imprisoned in default of paying the fine, but deferred the expression of a final opinion on one point in the case, until the following Monday—when the defendant would have to pay the fine, or go to prison, or have the benefit of a writ of habeas corpus before one of the judges of the supreme court. Meantime, the defendant was discharged on his own recognizance, with a bond for $50 for his appearance, on Monday at 10 o'clock. The defendant left court and was received into a barn with four horses, which was in readiness for him.

MUNICIPAL EXPENDITURES OF NEW YORK. From a report made to the common council of New York, by a committee appointed to enquire into the city expenditures, it appears that within the last eight years, the taxes levied to meet the expenses incurred by the city council have nearly trebled. In 1830, the taxes assessed amounted to $569,178, and in 1835, they amounted to $1,436,993—an increase, says the Evening Post, proportioned to the increase of population, nearly as 2 to 1.

Both real and personal property is taxed in New York, and pays the proportion of 60 cents on every hundred dollars. In Boston real and personal property pays a tax of only 49 cents on the hundred dollars, and in Philadelphia, if personal property were taxed as in the other two cities, the taxes would be but 30 cents on the hundred dollars. On real estate, which alone is taxed, it is 65 cents on the hundred dollars.

This vast increase in the expenditures of the city of New York, and the great disproportion between the taxes of that city and those of Philadelphia and Boston, are attributed to the wasteful extravagance of those to whose hands the affairs of the city have been trusted. The Post concludes an article on the subject by saying:—

"The only cause of all this is sheer extravagance, sheer waste, sheer tossing about the public money in wantonness, as monkeys toss about nuts when their appetite is satisfied. The larger a city is, the cheaper should its municipal affairs be administered, in proportion to its riches and population. Thus the municipal government of Philadelphia is less than that of Boston, and the municipal government of New York ought to be administered more cheaply than that of Philadelphia.

"The people look upon the present common council for an economical reform. The report of Mr. Talmadge shows that it is practicable, and points out the objects in regard to which it is most needed."

BANKS IN PENNSYLVANIA. The subjoined bill, entitled an act to prescribe the mode of application for banks, passed both branches of the legislature.

Whereas, by the twenty-fifth section of the first article of the amended constitution, it is provided that the corporate body shall hereafter be created, renewed or extended, with banking or discounting privileges, without six months previous public notice of the application for the same, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law—therefore,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania in general assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that whenever any citizen or association of citizens of the commonwealth intend to make application to the legislature, for the creation, renewal or extension of any corporate body with banking or discounting privileges, it shall be their duty to cause a notice of such intended application to be advertised in one paper printed in Harrisburg, and two newspapers printed in the county in which such corporate body is, or is intended to be located, at least once a week in each paper, for six months before the meeting of the next legislative session; and the notice of such application shall specify the name and style, the location, or intended location, and the amount of capital of such corporate body, and in the case of the renewal or extension of any such corporate body, such notice shall also specify the amount of increase of capital, if any increase be intended. Provided, that it there be only one paper printed in the county in which such corporate body is, or is intended to be located, the publication of such notice in one paper shall be deemed sufficient.

COMMODORE PREBLE. In Cooper's Naval History of the United States, recently published, is the following anecdote of commodore Preble, illustrative of his merits in the character of that distinguished naval officer:

"Commodore Preble was a man of high temper and a rigid disciplinarian. At first he was disliked in his own ship—the younger officers in particular, feeling the effects of the discipline, without having yet learned to respect the high professional qualities for which he was afterwards distinguished. One night when the Constitution was in the Straits of Gibraltar, she suddenly found herself alongside of a large ship. Some hailing passed without either party's giving any answer. Commodore Preble, who had taken the trumpet himself, now told the name and country of his ship, and his own rank. He then demanded the name of the stranger, adding he would fire a shot unless answered. 'If you fire a shot I'll return a broadside,' was the reply. Preble sprang into his mizzen rigging, applied the trumpet and said, 'this is the United States ship Constitution, a 44, commodore Preble, I am about to haul you for the last time, if not answered, I shall fire into you. What ship is that?' 'This is his Britannic majesty's vessel, razee of 60 guns, the Prince of Wales.' He then demanded the name of the stranger he doubted his statement, and should be by him till morning in order to ascertain his real character. He was as good as his word, and in a short time a boat came from the other vessel to explain. It was an English frigate, and the Constitution had got suddenly and unexpectedly alongside of her, that the hesitation and unexpectedly alongside of her, that the suddenness of the answer and the fire which he proceeded from a desire to gain time in order to clear the decks and get to quarters.

"The spirit of commodore Preble on this occasion," says Cooper, "produced a very favorable impression in his own ship." The young men pithily remarked, that if he was wrong in his temper he was right in his heart."

The Army and Navy Chronicle notices the following action of Mr. Cooper as omitted in Naval History. An action, it says, occurred during the revolutionary war, on the eastern shore of Virginia, between a flotilla of barges, &c. fitted out by the state of Maryland, and a detachment of boats belonging to the British squadron in the Chesapeake. One of the barges was sunk in the action, and such as probably never occurred in any other on land or water, was that every person on both sides was either killed or wounded—not one escaped injury or death.

CRIME IN FRANCE. Out of every 100 persons accused, 61 are regularly condemned. Out of the whole number, in every 100, 45 are acquitted, 14 are acquitted on every 100 crimes, 25 are against the person, 75 against the property. Experience shows that the number of murders is annually nearly the same; and what is still more singular, that the instruments, or means employed, are also in the same proportion. The inclination to crime is at its maximum in man about the age of 25; in women, 5 years earlier. The proportion of men and women accused is 3 to 1. The seasons have an influence on crime; in summer, more crimes are committed against the person—fewer against the property; the reverse is the case in winter. The development to the inclination to crime agrees very perfectly with that of the passions and physical strength; and, on the other hand, the development of reason tends to restrain the inclination. The greatest physical strength of man is developed between the age of 30 and 35; and the greatest mental powers between that of 45 and 50. At this age the greatest number of chefs d'œuvre of the French theatre has been produced. It is a singular contrast that about this age we find mental abatement most frequent and difficult.

Moscow. It appears from the official statement of the chief of the police of Moscow for 1838, that the ancient capital of Russia contains 343,502 inhabitants; that there were 1,250 marriages, 8,486 deaths, and 7,600 births the suicides amounted to 19, but the causes are not given; there were 11 murders, the perpetrators of which were all delivered up to justice. The city contains 12,653 public and private buildings, besides 400 churches, 21 convents, and 637 chapels. The value of property stolen during the year is estimated at 166,000 roubles of which about a quarter was recovered and restored to the owners.

FINANCES OF RUSSIA. During the wars of Russia with the Persians, Turks and Poles, her revenues were not equal to her expenditures.—Loans and paper money were resorted to. Catherine II, and the emperors Paul and Alexander, extended their resources by this method. The paper rouble declined in value twenty-five per cent.

The receipts of the empire for a late year are stated thus:

1. Revenue of the state.	Prussian dollars *
Capitation tax	23,125,000
Tax upon capital	5,310,000
Duties	26,136,000
2. Revenues of the crown.
Crown lands	6,927,500
Monopoly of spirits	35,733,333
Post office	1,511,667
Crown woods and fisheries	1,002,683
Crown factories	1,079,167
Mines	4,625,000
Other receipts	1,079,000
3. Receipts in the kingdom of Poland, whose financial concerns are separate	13,063,179

Total revenue 119,631,929
 The emperor has, besides, for his private chest a revenue of $1,600,000.

The expenses of the state are stated as:

1. The emperor's household	$5,000,000
2. Department of foreign affairs	2,000,000
3. Home department	33,000,000
4. Department of public instruction and religion	5,000,000
5. Army	20,000,000
6. Navy	12,000,000
7. Treasury department and interest of public debt	20,000,000
8. Other expenses	3,000,000
9. Government of Poland	12,000,000

Total of expenditures $122,000,000
 The public debt of Russia in 1834 amounted to 496,472,655 Prussian dollars.

The public debt of Prussia is about the one-third of this sum; that of Austria is $160,000,000 greater; that of France three times as large; and that of England ten times greater. [Globe.

STEEPS GRADES. In referring to the opening of the new track over Parr's Ridge, the city papers have unconsciously done injustice to the enterprise of the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road company and the skill of Isaac Treadwell, esq. in referring to the inclination of the plane as steeper than has heretofore been passed by locomotive power. We avail ourselves of the following explanatory statement which we find in the York, Pa. Gazette.

Without wishing to detract from the merits of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, we must say that they are certainly not entitled to the credit of being the first to prove the practicability of passing high grades with locomotive power. We have made enquires, and learn that the road in passing over "Parr's Ridge," ascends at the rate of 80 feet per mile. Now on a portion of the rail road between this and Baltimore, there are two miles, where the grade rises, coming from Baltimore at the rate of 84 feet to the mile, over which the passenger and baggage cars of the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road have been passing by locomotive power, regularly since September last. Indeed so far back as January 1833, a large party comprising many members of the legislature of Maryland, of and the city council of Baltimore, paid a visit to this country, and passing over the high grades at the summit, came to within 16 or 17 miles of the borough of York. An account of the trip was published at the time in some of the Baltimore papers. It would appear therefore that to the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road company, and to Isaac Tremble, esq. their able and scientific chief engineer, who planned the location and construction of this road, is due the credit of having long since proved the practicability of using locomotive power over high grades; and we are confident that the talented chief engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, would be the first to acknowledge that this practicability had ceased to be a matter of theory, having been tested by actual experience, before the route of the rail road over Parr's Ridge was altered.

INTERESTING FACTS.—The first decked vessel ever built within the limits of the old United States, was constructed on the banks of the Hudson, by Adrian Block, in the summer of 1614. She was called a yacht, and her first voyage was made through Hell Gate, into the sound, and as far east as Cape Cod, by the Vineyard passage. It was in this voyage that Block Island was discovered. Within the first 46 years after the settlement of Massachusetts, there were built in Boston and its vicinity, 730 vessels, varying from 6 to 250 tons in burthen. One of these the Blessing of the Bay, a bark of 30 tons, was built in 1631. The celebrated English patriot and divine, Hugh Peters, caused a vessel of 300 tons to be constructed at Salem, in 1641. The first schooner launched is said to have been built at Cape Ann in 1714. Her name is not known. In 1733, Connecticut had but 2 briggs, 20 sloops and a few smaller crafts, employing but 120 seamen, while Massachusetts, about the same time, had 492 vessels, the tonnage of which was 25,406, and employed 4,493 seamen. The first ensign ever shown by a regular American man-of-war was hoisted on board the frigate Alfred, in the Delaware, by the hands of Paul Jones, in the latter part of December, 1775.—What this ensign was is not precisely known, as the present national colors were not formally adopted until 1777. The first regular American cruiser that went to sea, was the Lexington, a little brig of 14 guns, commanded by captain John Barry, of Philadelphia. She sailed sometime in the winter of 1776. The first American man-of-war that got to sea after the adoption of our present form of government, was the Ganges.—She was originally an Indian man, but was purchased by the government and converted into a cruiser, having an armament of 24 guns. She sailed in May 1798, under the command of captain Richard Dale, who was first lieutenant of the Bon Homme Richard, when that ship captured the Serpis. The Constellation was the first of the new built vessels—(built in Baltimore)—that went to sea, under captain Truxton. She sailed in June, 1798, and was followed by the United States, and a little later by the Constitution, both these latter sailing in July, the same year. The first prize made under our present naval organization, was the French privateer Le Croyable. She was a schooner of 14 guns, and captured by the sloop-of-war Delaware, captain Decatur. The above historical facts we have gleaned from Mr. Cooper's excellent Naval History of the United States. [Boston Post.

A CURIOSITY.—A few days since a gentleman left at the office of the Philadelphia Ledger, three pieces of silver of a very antique appearance, the one the latest stamped being 200 years old. Ten of them, all of the same country coin, though of different dates, were turned up by a plough four or five weeks since, in a meadow which had never been ploughed, on the farm of Mr. B. C. Timmins, Chester, Burlington county, New Jersey. Three of the pieces shown us were dated 1555, 1647, 1677, and some others were still older. They are the size of a dollar, and the workmanship upon them shows that the art of stamping coin had not reached any degree of perfection when they were executed. Through the politeness of a gentleman whose antiquarian knowledge made it an easy task to explain them, we are indebted for the following description of two of them:

No. 1. Dated 1647, coined under Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange, in the Belgian city of Campen, in the province of Over-Yssel. Motto, "Confidens in Domino non confundet."

No. 2. Dated 1677, coined under William III, Prince of Orange, in the city of Zowl, province of Over-Yssel. Motto the same.

These coin probably came with some of the earliest settlers of this region of country, sent out by the Dutch West India company, under a patent granted to them by the government of Holland, and are the last evidences of the authority once claimed over the territory known as the New Netherlands, which extends over the whole of the country between the Connecticut and Delaware rivers.

WISCONSIN. The Enquirer, of June 1st, published at Madison, Wisconsin territory, (and a handsome, well printed sheet it is), gives us a glowing description of the Fox lake, and lake Emily country of Wisconsin. The rich, black soil, of an average depth of about eighteen inches; the fair proportion of woodland and prairie, the former consisting of maple, bass wood, butternut and poplar, the latter gently undulating, and forming fine extents of meadow land; the numerous and abundant springs of the purest water; the great variety of game; and then lakes Fox and Emily, each covering a surface of several hundred acres, and such beautiful sheets of water, clear and pure, and originating in springs gushing up from gravelly bottoms, and abounding in fish of the finest quality, such as perch, black and rock bass, pickerel, trout, &c. &c. and, then, the proverbially healthy aspect of this portion of Wisconsin; all these sayings of the Enquirer hold out flattering inducements to the emigrant, and immeasurably greater than a dozen such as Texas.

The Enquirer says: "About twelve thousand acres have been entered in the vicinity of Fox lake—nearly all for immediate cultivation. A company from the interior of New York purchased last fall 2,500 acres for actual settlement and improvement; and within the last three months another company from Pennsylvania has purchased nearly 5,000 acres for the same purpose. Immigrants are expected during the course of the present summer and approaching fall, from New York and Pennsylvania. Fears of difficulties with the Winnebagoes have hitherto prevented the settlement of this country; but as the Indians have generally left, and as there are now no grounds for fear, it is anticipated that the settlement will progress rapidly."

A MOB IN BOSTON. The Boston Mercantile Journal has the following notice of a mob almost, which collected in the city of Boston on Friday evening:

"The scenes which occurred on Friday evening in this city, although no actual violence was committed, were by no means calculated to conduce to the honor or credit of Bostonians. A mob had gathered in one of our principal streets, whose avowed object was to rescue an offender from the hands of justice. Disappointed in this, they refused to disperse, but avowed their intention to commit outrages on the persons and property of certain of our citizens. This mob was noisy, disorderly, turbulent—and was restrained from committing acts of violence only by the presence of the mayor and marshal, and the constant and active interposition of our police officers. The collection of a mob is disgraceful in any community—it is a reproach upon the morals of a people, and is doubly disgraceful in this land of the pilgrims, where it is the proud boast of the inhabitants that good order always prevails—that persons and property are held inviolate, and the laws are conceived in wisdom, and obeyed by a virtuous population."

A prospect in the Boston Times of Saturday says: Nine o'clock.—One of the leaders has just been arrested, and put in the lockup. The crowd increases, but for the most part appear to be mere speculators.

At half past nine there were not less than 5,000 people in and about Dock square, all quiet, but refusing to retire at the solicitation of the officers.

CANADA AFFAIRS.

The Montreal papers of the 13th announce the arrival, as a prisoner, of a Canadian named Beausoleil, of the firm of Beausoleil, Vallee & Co. merchants, in the New Market street. He was captured at Missisquoi bay, on the 11th, being well armed. He is alleged to have been an active leader in both the rebellions, and was arrested on the charge of acting a prominent part in the more recent burnings on the frontier.

A Mr. Neysmith, who had been absent from Montreal for some time, and returned one day last week, was arrested and lodged in jail on the 12th, charged with carrying on treasonable correspondence.

Painful suspicions are again respecting the destruction of the steamer John Bull. It was at first supposed that the second engineer and two sailors, who had the watch when the fire broke out, had perished in the flames; but it was reported that they had subsequently been seen at Sorel, and warrants have been sent down for their apprehension. The papers intimate that strong grounds exist for believing that the fire was not accidental.

Baracks are to be erected at Laprairie, it is said, capable of accommodating three thousand men. They are to be built of brick, which are to be procured from the states, the brick yards in the vicinity of Montreal not being able to supply the requisite quantity in season.

P. S. Since the above was in type we have received the Montreal papers of Friday the 14th, which contradict the report that the engineer and two of the crew of the John Bull had been seen at Sorel. The Montreal Courier adds the following:

"It is but fair to mention that the account copied into the Courier, from the Gazette, of the alleged bad conduct on the part of the inhabitants, where the John Bull was wrecked, proves to be very much exaggerated. No such incident occurred, as has been stated, of ten dollars having been demanded from a passenger who was clinging to the bow of the boat while she was on fire, by some Canadians in a canoe, as the price of their relieving him from his perilous situation.

From the Montreal Courier, June 10.

Sir George Arthur in his recent visit to Brockville, visited also Cornwall, where a congratulatory address was presented to him. In his reply, alluding to his having granted an unconditional pardon to many of the brigands, he says—

"I frankly avow to you that it has been with me an object of great anxiety to call forth a generous feeling from those who have acted towards this country with cruel treachery and wanton violence. If the endeavor be successful, (and I still shall leave no honorable effort unattempted to accomplish it), it will be to me a source of unbounded satisfaction. If it prove unsuccessful, we must cast all further thoughts of diplomacy into the St. Lawrence, and trust in the hearts and hands of her majesty's loyal subjects to bring about conciliation by a different process—and in that operation, I am very confident, there are no men more entirely to be relied upon, than the inhabitants of the eastern district."

On his excellency's return to Brockville, he received a somewhat warm address, from about 266 inhabitants of that place, which went to justify the seizure of the gun on board the schooner "Weeks," and conveyed to his excellency their hearty disapproval of the manner in which the vessel and gun were delivered up, without the sanction of your excellency, through the improper interference and advice of some of our prominent and courageous officials in civil authority." To this address, the following reply, which we think puts the matter at issue in a very proper light, and deals out praise and censure with impartiality where due, was made:—

Gentlemen:—I thank you for the expressions of confidence which your address contains.

To investigate the late occurrence to which you allude more particularly was the object of my visit to Brockville.

As the seizure of the American schooner and gun, it appears, could not legally be sustained, it is much to be deprecated, that greater caution was not exercised before the seizure was made.

Having taken that step, however, it was no less blameworthy that the seizure was abandoned without due authority, and more especially under such circumstances—and I entertain this opinion strongly, although I am aware that some magistrates interfered with the most honest zeal, and from a sense of public duty to recommend the measure.

That any of her majesty's subjects should have taken the gun from under the immediate control of her majesty's revenue officer, at this port, and fired off in the street, was a lawless proceeding which could not have been expected.

Neither can I do less than express my astonishment, that any British subjects should have so far forgotten what was due to the character of their nation, as to have acted rudely towards foreign officers entering their country on public duty.

By these proceedings the inhabitants of this town have placed me in a humiliating position, for I have been obliged to admit their indiscretion, while I have appealed to the general government of the United States, against the ill-judged and exciting line of conduct pursued by colonel Worth.

No person can more deeply feel than I do the provocation you have suffered, nor be more sensible of the extreme distress and anxiety which your families must suffer under the present posture of affairs on the St. Lawrence. Nor can any one feel more disposed than I am to remove those sufferings and to obtain for you redress for the past and security for the future.

I appeal to you, therefore, with confidence, that by your forbearance and prudence, as well as by your undoubted gallantry and firmness, you will strengthen the hands of the executive government at this eventful period. GEORGE ARTHUR.

From the Kingston, U. C. Chronicle.

Our readers will perceive that an Ogdensburg paper expresses the opinion that the "broad delusion" which prevailed respecting the interference of Americans in the affairs of this province has ceased. Our authorities have been anxious to think so, and, by the pardon of many prisoners, have been acted upon the hope that so desirable a change had been effected. To show our American neighbors how much their own conduct has influenced the fate of their countrymen in confinement, we will state a piece of information we have from good authority.

A few weeks since the government of Upper Canada had prepared warrants for the release of 25 more of the youngest prisoners now in Fort Warr, when information arrived of the speech of judge Tucker, at Hogansburg, on the release of some prisoners by the sheriff of the eastern district. This indication of public feeling on the American frontier induced the executive to detain the warrants, and finally to countermand them. So that judge Tucker and other declaimers on the "holy cause of liberty," alias plunder and murder, have themselves to thank for the transportation to a penal colony of twenty-five of their fellow citizens.

We are informed that the Commercial bank of this town, some time since, made a formal application to the Upper Canada and Gore banks, to join it in resuming specie payments, on or before the 1st of August next. We are mortified to learn that these banks have declined to comply with the fair and reasonable proposition of the Commercial bank, and that the country is still to suffer from the gross-est inattention to its interests.

THE FLORIDA WAR.

The St. Augustine News, of June 8th, states that Picolata is to be abandoned, and the sick are to be removed to Fort Heileman.

On the 26th ult. 18 rifles from Fort Fanning, two privates of capt. Bradley's volunteer company were killed by Indians. One of the party was scalped three times.

Fort King, May 20.

A few Indians have been in since I last wrote. A large number, with Tiger Tail, and several other chiefs, will be here in a day or two. The chiefs never asked gen. Macomb whether they would be permitted to remain permanently south of Pease creek, and he never told them that they would not. If the Indians should be permitted to remain in Florida, it will be a fatal blow to the prosperity of the territory; and every Floridian ought to raise his voice against so suicidal a measure.

"Since writing the above, our negro interpreter, (Murray) who is the best and most useful man we have in that capacity, was shot in the side by a scoundrel named Edgar, who is orderly sergeant of the company that garrisons this post. The ball passed immediately over the stomach, but under the peritoneum, and I think is lodged in the liver. He is still alive, but his chance of recovery is very slim. He had not been shot more than an hour, when a couple of chiefs arrived here but having no interpreter, I cannot tell you what news they bring from the interior. To-morrow they will bring in with them from a camp nine miles from here, another Indian negro who will interpret for us."

"The murder of the negro Murray was accompanied with circumstances of great wantonness. Sergeant Edgar complained to col. Whistler that Murray was insolent to him, and was informed that the matter should be examined into, and, if guilty, punished. The sergeant insolently demanded it then, and was ordered to his quarters; from whence he took a rifle, and went to Murray's tent, and whilst sleeping, discharged the contents into his stomach."

Murray was captured in 1836, and belonged to Micopotaka, now west, and was considered the best guide in the nation. It is rather surprising that under these circumstances of outrage, Edgar should have been bailed at Newnansville. [News.]

From the Apalachicola Gazette.

The late massacres on the Apalachicola.—Further information has enabled us to give a more detailed account of the Indian murders in the neighborhood of Rice's Bluff and Estefenulgee, than we were able to present on Saturday last.

It appears that on the evening of Tuesday, 10th inst. about twilight, a party of Indians, supposed to number fifteen or twenty, attacked the house of Mr. Roberts, at Rice's, by firing upon the inmates through the doors and windows. The family fled, Mr. Roberts, together with his wife and several children, effected their escape by taking to the woods. One child was killed before they got away, and another, who was asleep in an outer room, was forgotten in the hurry of flight. Mr. Lamb, who had sometimes acted as an interpreter between the Indians and the whites, was mortally wounded, and though he escaped from the Indians, died soon after reaching Apalachicola, of his wounds. Mr. Lamb recognized several of the Indians, knew them to be of the Creek band, and was also equally certain that there was a white man among them.

About the same time that this party made their attack upon Roberts, another party, apparently about the same number, attacked the house of Smith, of Estefenulgee. At this house were Mr. N. and J. Mrs. N. Smith, and their three children, and another individual, name not recollectd. The Indians commenced their attack by firing in upon the family, who were at supper. Mrs. Richards was known to have been shot at the first fire. She fell forward with her face upon the table. "The balance of the family fled to the woods. All the grown people escaped; and all the children were left behind. Their screams were heard by their flying parents, but no protection could be afforded them. Those who escaped from both settlements remained in the woods during the night. On the morning of Saturday, the party from Smith's found a batteau on the river bank, and made for Iola, which place they reached in safety."

The fugitives from Roberts' settlement remained in the woods till they heard the steamer Commerce approach. They were able to make themselves heard by capt. Smith, who stopped his boat, took them aboard, and treated them with every kindness and attention, and brought them down to Apalachicola.

The steamer Irwington started on her trip to Columbus, a few hours after the Commerce had arrived with the news of the massacre. Several gentlemen who had taken passage in her provided themselves with arms, and were joined by others from Iola, among whom was Mr. S. N. Smith, who had collected a party for the purpose of rescuing the children. It was found that the houses of both Smith and Roberts had been burned, and the bodies of the killed had been shockingly mutilated and thrown into the fire. Two little girls, from eight to ten years old, were found alive unhurt. They had fled with the others on the alarm, and secreted themselves in the woods, and had remained there from Friday to Sunday afternoon without food. They were found near each other, though unconscious of each other's presence.—They both unite in saying that the Indians remained in the neighborhood till Saturday night. One of the little girls relates that she came to her surprise by them on Saturday. She had crawled to the crib to get some corn to appease her hunger. She fell asleep on the shucks, and when awakened she beheld the Indians with their torches approaching the crib. She again crept softly away, and concealed herself in the grass, until she could effect a retreat to her hiding place in the woods.

It subsequently appeared that two of the boys who were left behind—one a son of Mr. Richards, and the other of Mr. Smith, nine and eleven years of age, effected their escape, and reached Aspalaga in safety, a distance of 40 miles. The remains of the other children were found. One appeared to have been shot while running; the others, it would seem from the situation of their remains, as well as from the current account of the little girls who heard their screams, had been caught and thrust into the burning house.

On Monday another party left this place on board the Commerce in quest of the savages. They proceeded to the U. S. arsenal at Chattahoochee for arms, and were fortunate enough to meet at that place our public spirited mayor, on whose guarantee the arms were delivered. If it had not been for this fortunate occurrence, it is presumed the expedition would have failed for want of arms. Thus provided, the company proceeded to the neighborhood where the Indians were supposed to have remained. They have not yet returned.

From the Tallahassee Star, 11th inst.

Public meeting.—At a meeting of the citizens of Tallahassee and its vicinity, held agreeably to public notice at the court house on Saturday last, on motion of J. B. Webb, gen. Thomas Brown was called to preside, and S. S. Sibbey appointed secretary. The object of the meeting having been stated by the chairman, the meeting was addressed by William P. Du Val, esq. in an animated and eloquent speech on the subject of the disastrous Seminole war, and in relation to the treaty, recently concluded by gen. Macomb with a few of the chiefs, communicated in a morning paper. Gov. Du Val concluded by offering the following preamble and resolutions which were adopted without a dissenting voice. On motion of col. Wyatt, the word unanimous was ordered to be inserted.

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

We, citizens of Leon county, (Florida), have seen in the public prints with regret and dismay, that a treaty is partially made by the commanding general of the United States army, (Macomb), with the Seminole Indians, under the authority of the war department, by which the country is to be assigned temporarily, as it is said to the Indians, but permanently, as we shall no doubt experience—will include all that part of the peninsula of Florida, from the head waters of Peas creek which discharges into Charlotte harbor, to the mouth of Shark river, according to certain boundaries. As a portion of this unfortunate, slandered and desolated country, we do most earnestly and solemnly protest against this measure, and with full confidence in the wisdom, and justice, and humanity of our national legislature, appeal to them to protect us against a sacrifice so cruel and wanton, and to preserve the people of Florida from such danger, and the country from such disgrace.

At this time, while this national disgrace will be insured by the ratification of the treaty, ruinous to the prosperity, and dangerous to the safety of our Florida, the commander of the United States army, in person, as we are informed, has issued his order declaring a suspension of hostilities, while the Indians under this hollow truce, are murdering our citizens in the east, under the nose of this officer, and in Middle Florida have destroyed several families and fired their dwellings—the regular troops at the several military posts must and do, remain neutral and inactive under his order.

We view it as an act of supererogation on the part of this general, and an insupportable injury to the Seminole nation, to issue such an order, inasmuch as we have no reason to suppose that during the last year and a half the regular troops altogether have destroyed, or injured, half a dozen Indians by force of arms. We have good authority for saying that several of the Seminole Indians sent off from this country to the far west, have returned to Florida, and we believe that many of them are now returning to this territory. These Indians have communicated from Micanope and Jumper, to the Indians in Florida, that they have not land in the west assigned to them, sufficient to bury them. Under these circumstances, if the contemplated treaty is made, the Seminole emigrants and many of the discontented Creek Indians will return and locate themselves in Florida, and in less than three years, the Indian force will be much greater than we found it at the commencement of the present disastrous war. If the senate should ratify such a treaty, we shall be found with a desolated state. No prudent man will remove to Florida; nor if we ever have a war with a foreign power, after ruin will fall on our country; with a respectable foreign force with the Seminole Indians—and not Florida alone, but the states adjoining will greatly suffer. With such guides—backed by a formidable force, collected from the West India emancipated inhabitants—the danger will become greater than we can now undertake to anticipate.

If these Indians are located temporarily they will never hereafter be removed but by extermination—nor will our country be willing to hazard again defeat, and disgrace, by another conflict with these Indians.

1st. Be it therefore resolved, That the governor of Florida be requested to issue his proclamation to assemble the legislative council on the first Monday in November next, at Tallahassee, and the legislative council be requested, when so assembled, to send on a committee, with their remonstrance and protest, against the ratification of any treaty that may be made, to locate the Indians in Florida, and that such committee unite with the delegate in congress in opposing such treaty.

2d. Resolved, That we highly approve of the sentiments contained in the letter of the secretary of war, in answer to one addressed to him by general Jesup, then commanding in Florida, rebuking him for suggesting, the Indians might be rendered friendly, by locating them in Florida.

3d. Resolved, That it is insulting to the feeling of the people of the United States, and degrading to our character, to send the commander-in-chief of the army of the United States, to sue for peace, to a few Indians after a war of four years, and in fact yielding up to the Indians all they have ever required.

4th. Resolved, That the Seminole Indians, and the inhabitants of Florida cannot maintain peace, and live in the same country; and if any treaty shall be ratified, locating these Indians in Florida, it will be a paper treaty only.

5th. Resolved, That the peninsula of Florida is the last place in the limits of the United States, wherein the Indians should be permitted to remain, for obvious reasons:

1st. They have access to the Atlantic and the Gulf Stream, and are always accessible to the enemies of the United States.

2d. In a war with any foreign power, they will be induced to take part against us, and will guide our enemies through every part of our country.

3d. If located in Florida, all the runaway slaves will find refuge and protection with them.

4th. The contiguity of emancipated colored population of the West Indies, would, in a war with some foreign power, place Florida, and in fact the whole of our southern states, in jeopardy. There is no position in which these Indians could be located, so dangerous to the peace and happiness of the southern, and interests of the United States, as the peninsula of Florida.

6th. Resolved, It is the duty of our citizens in every county in Florida, to assemble and protest against the location of the Indians in the peninsula, and we call on them to unite with us in opposing the ratification of any such treaty.

The editors of the several public prints in this territory are requested to publish these proceedings—and the president of this meeting is requested to send a copy of the same to the president of the United States, secretary of war, the governor of this territory, and to our delegate in congress.

FROM MEXICO.

By the way of Galveston, late dates have been received at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, by the Empresario, capt. Longcope, from that port, having sailed the 2d instant. The advices from Mexico are of the 25th ultimo. The federal prisoners taken under Mexia are many of them employed in working the streets of Vera Cruz, and are treated with the greatest cruelty. The government papers state that the number of federalists killed and wounded at the overthrow of Mexia is 600.

General Lemas, with 1,700 federalists, is still in the vicinity of Monclova, and now seems to be regarded by the government party as their most formidable enemy. He is said to be a brave and skillful officer, and very much esteemed by his party. There is not a single vessel of the Mexican navy left. The gazettes represent the government much straitened in its pecuniary resources by the late difficulties, and it is proposed to dismiss all the supernumerary officers, curtail the pay of the remainder, stop all pensions, increase the taxes, and again resort to forced loans. It is thought the church will be called upon to disgorge some of its enormous treasure. Col. Bee left Vera Cruz for Havana on the 29th ultimo. Santa Ana, it is said, is watched with too much jealousy for him to be of any service to Texas, were he so disposed.

In Tampico the federalists still resisted the efforts of the centralists to put them down. It was thought that the contest between the two parties was not yet by any means ended. The government papers boast much of the victory over Mexia, and say that it is now only necessary to send 12 or 15,000 men to overrun Texas, in order to eradicate every trace of insubordination. On the subject of the threatened invasion, the Galveston Gazette well remarks that the notion is preposterous. When the Mexican government allows a body of insurgents, numbering scarcely more than a thousand of its own embeccite citizens, to place its own existence in the utmost jeopardy, requiring all its energies to put down the tumult, it is scarcely to be apprehended without unanimity among its public men—without funds, and with no disposition among the people to sustain the measure—any thing like a formidable army could be sent into Texas. But the fact is, that if the utmost unanimity pervaded the whole nation, the first attempt at an invasion would be met on the frontier with a force that would effectually settle the question of the ability of Texas to maintain the stand she now occupies.

[New Orleans paper.]

A commercial house in this city has kindly favored us with the following extract of a letter, received the other day from their correspondent at Vera Cruz:

"A private letter from Mexico, under date of May 25th, informs us that the rev. Dr. Moldour, apostolic vicar of Texas, reaching the city on the 13th of May, and next morning called to pay his respects to the president, as of interim, who would not see him, under pretext of business. That night at 12 o'clock, he was conducted to prison, where he remains, without any hope of acquiring his liberty at present.

"The Mexican government is organizing an army of 60,000 men, with which to recover the sovereignty of their lost province of Texas, and appear determined to make a desperate effort to succeed."

LATER NEWS.

A gentleman who left Mexico the 20th May and Vera Cruz the 1st June, has informed us that Tampico was closely invested by Bustamante's forces, who were in possession of the pass into the harbor, and nothing would go in or out without their consent.

The city of Mexico was perfectly tranquil and the government was raising troops. A campaign against Texas was spoken of. But many persons doubted if it would be undertaken.

A French frigate and another vessel of the same nation were anchored at Sacrificos. A steamboat had departed for Havana a short time before our informant left Vera Cruz.

The first instalment of the sum stipulated by treaty has been paid by the Mexicans to the French. From Tampico. Information has been received in this city, by the schooner Creole, from Tampico, that general Arista, at the head of 600 infantry, (central troops), arrived at the bar of Tampico from Altamira on the night of the 27th ultimo, surprised and captured in a few minutes the small party of federalists who were stationed there to defend the place, without losing, or having even a single man wounded, belonging to his party.

The man-of-war schooner, formerly the old Independence of Texas, stationed at the bar, was captured in fifteen minutes, the major part of the crew basely deserting the sides of the few resolute men on board—jumped overboard, and made their escape, leaving her two principle officers, (one of whom was a Frenchman, who behaved nobly), and seven men, all of whom were wounded, to fall into the hands of the enemy.

General Arista had despatched a brig to Vera Cruz, to obtain eight large pieces of ordnance and two bomb canisters, with which he intended to attack the city of Tampico, and, according to his expressed determination, carry it without sacrificing a single man.

Bustamante was at Altamira, and was daily expected at Tampico.

Metamoras, May 27.

GENTLEMEN: There are in this place near 2,000 troops under the command of gen. Valentin Canalizo.

The trade of this city is entirely paralyzed, and yet there is no want of goods, but the little security of the highways prevents any thing being sent into the interior.

The troops are in want of every thing. Up to this time the French residents of Matamoras have nothing to complain of towards the civil and military authorities.

The communications between this place and the capital have been for more than six months intercepted by the federalists, who are continually hovering in the neighborhood, and we know not what is passing at Mexico, nor have we any accurate knowledge of the famous treaty between France and this country.

The schooner Albert of New Orleans, has been lost at the entrance of the bar of Brazos de Santiago. The cargo has been sold for $3,130. The schooner Southerner has been seized by the custom house. A great number of packages omitted in the manifest, is the cause of the confiscation of this vessel.

Generals Bustamante and Arista are now at Victoria. I presume the president's intention is to attack Tampico.

Gen. Val Canalizo left this place on the 19th at the head of 700 men and six pieces of artillery, with the design, as he said, of going to San Fernando, but he has more probably gone to join the forces of general Bustamante for the purpose of attacking Tampico.

The Louisiana copies from a Mexican paper the following proclamation of Bustamante. It is dated from Ciudad Victoria, May 10th.

SOLDIERS: On the 3d inst. on the plain of San Miguel, near the village of Acujete, the national arms obtained a complete triumph by the rout of the forces commanded by the ungrateful ex-general Mexia. That rash man, who had caused so many evils to the republic, and who, on another occasion, at the head of a band of foreigners, landed on our soil to dismember the territory of the republic, has finished his career: he has expiated his crimes, and paid with his life for the blood of those whom he had seduced to join him.

Let us mourn the lot of his victims and that of our brethren, who, laboring under a fatal delusion, still disturb the public repose and lay waste the country which gave them birth. May heaven dispose them to renounce their errors and throw down their arms, that the country may be restored to peace, so necessary to its credit, its happiness and its power.

But should they obstinately persist in pursuing their present course; if they refuse our clemency, it is your sacred duty, soldiers, to punish them, as it is to protect order and support the laws.

ANASTASIO BUSTAMANTE.

From the N. O. Louisianian.

We owe to the politeness of the collector, Mr. Breedlove, the following documents, communicating important commercial intelligence from Matamoras:—

Consulate of the U. S. A. Matamoras, 17th May, 1839.

SIR: I herewith transmit a copy of a regulation published by general Canalizo, on the 14th instant, in pursuance of a law now in force, and invested in him by the Mexican government, authorising the introduction into this port of all articles, with certain exceptions, prohibited by the existing arancel, on paying the duties in cash, at the time of importation, which regulation will only remain in force so long as it may be absolutely necessary for the subsistence of the troops on this station. I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

D. W. SMITH.

James W. Breedlove, esq. collector of the customs, New Orleans.

"REGULATION—According to the supreme order of the first instant, communicated to me by his excellency the president, commander of the army of operations, Anastasio Bustamante, it has pleased his excellency the president ad interim of the republic, to renew the authority granted to me on the 17th of January last, to permit the introduction into this port of all sorts of merchandise, even as such as come under the head of illegal, treated in the express condition that the duties be paid immediately in cash, and that this permission shall exist for no longer time than will be absolutely necessary for me to render all proper and complete assistance to the meritorious army under my command.

"In consequence of this privilege, and acting in conjunction with the head of the department of finance, it is decreed:

"1. All sorts of merchandise, prohibited by the general tariff of maritime duties, shall be admitted, but only into this port.

"2. The following shall be excluded: 1. metal buttons, engraved on either side with the Spanish or other national arms; 2. obscene stamps, miniatures, paintings and pictures of all kinds; 3. books, pamphlets and manuscripts prohibited by competent authority, [priests], and 4. all warlike articles. Published for the information and government of trade.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

The South Carolina court of errors have decided that the state courts have no jurisdiction over offences created by acts of congress. The case was this: a man by the name of McBride, was indicted at Union, S. C. for an offence created by an act of congress, which consisted in opening the mail bag, and purloining money from a letter, which he abstracted. The grand jury having found a true bill, the defendant pleaded not guilty. Mr. Justice Earle, before whom the case came on, looking into the indictment, was of opinion that he had no jurisdiction, and refused to try the case. It was then carried up to the court of errors, who affirmed the decision of the court below. Judge Earle says:

"To allow congress to confer jurisdiction, and to constitute state courts, inferior tribunals, under the provisions of the constitution, would at once transform state judges into federal officers, and make them a portion of the federal judiciary. Some of the consequences of such a proceeding I formerly pointed out; but independently of the objection growing out of that view, there is another which lies deeper and involves a more important principle, which is at the bottom of all judicial administration: it is that which I have before glanced at, that the judicial power, in its extent, depends upon the legislative. It is a settled principle of jurisprudence, recognised by all sound commentators, and is well expressed by Mr. Rawle in his treatise on the constitution: "The judicial power must be general or limited, according to the scope and objects of the government; in a word, it must be fully and exactly commensurate with that of the legislature. It cannot, by any terms of language, be made to extend beyond the legislative power, for such excess would be inconsistent with its nature." The clear, well defined separation between the legislative function of the general government and that of the states, at once presents the principle in strong relief. The classes of subjects to which the legislation of congress may extend are enumerated in the constitution. The jurisdiction of the federal courts extends to all cases arising under laws passed there, and to some others expressly mentioned. The residue of the legislative power, embracing a vast variety of subjects and interests, belongs to the states; which cannot be specified, and have not attempted to be specified; and the judicial power of the states extends to all these, but cannot extend further. It has not been attempted to define, by an enumeration of subjects, the extent, either of the legislative or judicial power of the states; they are commensurate with each other, and extend to all subjects, not confided by the constitution to congress and the federal judiciary. Can the state legislature undertake, by law, to regulate the post office, provide for the security of the mail, or pass a penal statute, such as that which gave rise to this prosecution? No one will pretend this; and it follows indisputably, that the judicial power of the states can take no cognizance of such offences. To congress alone belongs the power to legislate on the subject, and to the United States belongs the jurisdiction of the offences created.

STEAM.

The changes accomplished throughout the civilized world, by the discovery and application of steam to arts, sciences and manufactures—are so truly wonderful, as to be almost beyond belief. In travel, alone, this great agent has effected the most astonishing results. This is fully apparent, even in connection with our own city, and its various avenues of communication north and south. For example, we a day or two since mentioned the arrival of a gentleman from Boston, a distance of 230 miles, in twenty-two hours; he travelled the whole way either by steamboat or rail road, and in both instances was propelled by the agency of steam. So with regard to the south; any one may step into the Baltimore boat at 7 o'clock in the morning, and be in Norfolk, Virginia, before 7 the next morning. Indeed the trip has frequently been accomplished in 22 hours, while passengers have been able to tarry an hour, or so at Baltimore.

Could our forefathers, of the olden time, start up from the dust, and contemplate these wonderful changes in travel and its facilities, their surprise would be extraordinary indeed. Less than a century ago, the trip between either Philadelphia and Boston, or Philadelphia and Norfolk, could not have been accomplished by the ordinary conveyances, in much less than a fortnight. But, if we turn our eyes to the west, and especially to the Mississippi river, the power of steam as an agent will be realized in a still more wonderful manner. Now, hundreds of boats with thousands of passengers are constantly passing and resting upon the turbid waters of the father of rivers, and touching at points in the course of a few days, that in the olden time occupied weeks, may months, to reach in an upward voyage.—And so indeed, throughout the greater portion of the world.

It is now said that Jerusalem may be reached by an American traveller, via Bristol in the Great Western, Paris, Marseilles and Joppa, in thirty three days! These are but of the feats that may be accomplished, so far as travel is concerned, and with comparative ease and safety. And yet the history of the past is calculated to make the impression that the progress of steam and its utility are only in their infancy, and that a century hence will unfold still more extraordinary wonders. A late number of the London Quarterly Review, contains an article upon the subject, in which many interesting facts are grouped together. Arrangements are in progress for continuing the British trade across the isthmus of Suez, with steamers, which are to ply on the great Pacific ocean, between Valparaiso and Panama, a distance of 2,500 miles. By this means, the voyage round Cape Horn to Lima, which has hitherto occupied about four months, will be reduced to about thirty days! In the Mediterranean, steam vessels are used by Christians, Jews and Turks, while as early as 1824, a steamer made four successful voyages between Bombay and Suez. The Irish sea, German ocean and the British channel, are traversed by steamers, while in the American rivers and lakes, there cannot be less than one thousand steamers in operation.

In reference to the last important enterprise, as connected with steam, we mean the establishment of packets between the old and new worlds—the greatest trip on record was recently made by the Great Western. The distance between Bristol and New York is about 3,150 geographical miles, the voyage of which was accomplished in 13 days and 7 hours. In little more than a fortnight, several British officers dined in the old world, at their barracks, in Woolwich, beyond London, and in a public hotel in Baltimore—having in that brief period, passed across the ocean and through New York and Philadelphia! The Great Western is 240 feet in length. She has but two engines of 225 horse power each. Her cylinders are 73½ inches in diameter, and yet she is quite a small vessel when compared with several others constructed, or in progress of construction. The British Queen, for example, is believed to be the largest steamer in the world. Her length of keel is 223 feet. Extreme length 275 feet. Breadth of beam 40 feet. Including guards 65 feet. Depth of hold 27 feet. Tonnage 1,362 tons. Diameter of cylinders 77½ inches; length of stroke 7 feet. Diameter of wheels 30 feet. Estimated weight of engines, boilers and water 500 tons; dn. of coals for 20 days' consumption 600 tons. Draught of water with the above weight 16 feet.

The Gorgon is the largest steamship in the British navy. She is 1,150 tons, and carries 20 days coal, and stores for six months. Her service has been of the experimental kind, and the greater part of the past winter she has been cruising in the Bay of Biscay; and so well satisfied are the British government of her capacity to contend with boisterous weather that they are now constructing some five or six others; one of which the Cyclops, will measure over two thousand tons. The engines of the Gorgon, it should be recollected, are only of the same calibre and power as those of the Sirius of 700 tons, which preceded the Great Western on her first trip to New York. If the Gorgon, which is 450 tons more burden than the Sirius, performed so well with the same power in the stormy Bay of Biscay, during the winter, what may be expected from larger vessels with corresponding engines?

These are facts full of interest, and the results already ascertained, have utterly annihilated the theory of the celebrated Dr. Lardner. That accidents will occasionally happen, must be expected, at least for many years to come; but as improvement progresses, and as new discoveries are made, less apprehension need the system which is now in its infancy, will eventually become as perfect as any human system may be. So much for steam, as applied to navigation.

Its use and influence on rail roads and manufactures are equally important; but we shall advert to this branch of the subject at an early opportunity. [Phila. Inq.]

CUSTOM HOUSE FRAUDS IN NEW YORK.

Samuel R. Wood, one of the foreign gang of swindlers in New York, was a few days ago muled in damages to the amount of $12,276, and has since been arrested, at the instance of the United States district attorney, on a charge of perjury, in making false entries at the custom house.

The suit upon which the above verdict was rendered was brought up by the United States against the defendant for the recovery of an amount of duties upon imported woollen goods invoiced and sworn through the custom house at 33 per cent. below their value.

The following are the extracts from the letters written by the defendant to his father, who was his partner in England, will convey some idea of the motive of this swindling transaction:

The letters were generally accompanied by accounts of sales, and bore various dates, from 29th November, 1834, to 1st December, 1837.

July 31st, I would not make altogether one piece. I told you in my previous letters, that you must have two-thirds of their real value—that will be one-third less. If you cannot understand this writing, I cannot tell you.

Sept. 23d, 1835. "I am astonished that you did not allow one yard per piece, and you will have to sell them a little higher, and give me the cost on a slip of paper."

Nov. 3d. "Yours by ship Virginia is duly to hand, with invoice of G. 537. I think you must have made a mistake in invoice. I don't see what kind of cassimeres they can be at. Is. 10d. per yard. You will have to invoice over two-thirds if you make cheap goods."

Dec. 24, 1836. "I am surprised, after your receiving such letters of information as you have—to think that you would dare to charge these two colored ribs 3s. 1d."

"I have told you time after time, still you will swerve from it. Yours by ship South America is to hand, and these cable ribs, they will not pass them, less than about 4s. 6d. or 4s. 7d. per yard; 5 per cent. off. If this is not the way you wish to sell them, you may stop them at once. You ought to alter the mark and number on the packages, also number of goods. I told you if goods were cheap to invoice them more Nos. 361 and 360, instead of 7d. more is 7d. less, that makes over 20 per cent. I believe will not libel them. I cannot see what you are about. Please to look at my previous letters for 2 months."

"P. O. You will please send new invoices of all goods up to this shipment, and those 9 bales I must have new invoices—sooner the better. M. Brodents are up to 4s. 10d. and 4s. 9d. per yard—his best cable ribs. You may judge if they would pass yours for 3s. 8d. if they are as good, and your black cloths at such prices as these. You must have come to the correct cost, and have your paper renewed until can make a return. Headstrong must not do, you may tell by seeing M. B. You work will see one another, or you would not invoice so much alike. Mind what I have written now and in previous letters?"

June 25th. "I have entered G. 576, &c. which I have passed, but they found a great deal of fault; the others I dare not enter, till I receive new invoices."

Aug. 16. "Yours by ship Virginia is duly to hand, which I have entered in the custom house, and it is very desirable for myself to pass such invoices as I have had latterly. G. 554 was ordered to be examined; finding one piece 3 to 4 shillings better than another and charged the same, will forfeit the whole package."

"I had such a scolding from the appraiser, that I do not like to go near the store, and it is all distress on your part of the thing, so I will not do any more such as for one price you are not fit to purchase goods. Also in bale G. 559, you say in the invoice plodded cassinets, 2 ps. at 3s. 4d.; 8 pieces plodded buckskins at 3s. 2d.; No. 1,614, 2 pieces at 3s. 5d. printed—now, they are all printed."

"If the devil you should make such a distinction in the invoice, the worst description of goods you could have sent, by G-d. You have bought without either judgment or skill, and as for invoicing, I have written enough; I can do nothing except I come to make them out."

March 16. "I am astonished that you have no more management of business than in buying such trash as these satin faces and melburn stripes. John Schofield has sold many a score here at $1 25 to $1 27 1-2. Now yours cost over what he fetched before he left home. The last satin faces sold to a loss; they were 25 per cent. cheaper than these."

"Enclosed is four patterns. If you do not feel ashamed of yourself I do for you. I shall not be said I made your state away. I will not put any more such as these bales, for instance; 8s. 2d. no better than this pattern. By G-d, I never pay for them. G-d-d-m all such shipments; and as for such trash as the cassimeres they would never send out at any price. The satin faces are not fit for the blacks to wear. Look at them! look at them! G-d-d-m it, look at them!" "This is such as I never saw in the country. I came to the country. I have not examined all yet."

MR. BUCHANAN.

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Keystone, June 19.

On Saturday last Mr. Buchanan arrived in town, and was invited by the democratic members of the legislature to partake of a dinner with them. He declined the honor for the reasons stated in the following letter, to which we call the attention of every democrat in the state. Like every production of Mr. Buchanan, it is able, clear, and statesmanlike, in a most eminent degree.

On Monday evening an entertainment was given at Mr. Nagle's at which all the democratic members of the legislature, together with the governor, heads of department, and many citizens of various parts of the state attended. The assemblage was characterised by great hilarity, good feeling, and zeal. Several interesting and eloquent addresses were delivered during the evening, among which were addresses by Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Jagersoll, col. Porter, col. Parsons, and others. The toasts were pointed and appropriate.

Hall of the house of representatives,

Harrisburg, June 15, 1839.

DEAR SIR: Hearing of your temporary sojourn in this place, the undersigned democratic members of the senate and house of representatives, in testimony of their high sense of your services in the cause of liberal principles; and especially in the course you have pursued in sustaining the president of the United States in his firm stand in favor of a well regulated and a guarded deposit of the public treasure, under the strict control of officers of the general government who are immediately responsible to the laws and the people, as contradistinguished from a depository in irresponsible private associations of individuals or corporations, tender to you a public dinner at such time as may suit your convenience.

Saml. Carpenter, John Miller, Henry Myers, Thos. C. Miller, on behalf of the democratic members of the senate of Pennsylvania.

T. B. McElwee, Stokes L. Roberts, J. R. Snowden, Wm. McKinstry, Charles Pray, M. N. Carpenter, E. W. Handin, Wm. Field, on behalf of the democratic members of the house of representatives.

To hon. JAMES BUCHANAN.

Harrisburg, June 17, 1839.

GENTLEMEN: I have been honored by your kind invitation to a public dinner, to be given when I might best suit my convenience, during my visit to this place. The approbation of my public conduct by the democratic members of any legislature of my native state would inspire me with the most grateful feelings; but emanating as it now does from that faithful, able and devoted band by whose patriotism, fruness, and discretion, our beloved commonwealth has been saved from a revolution in its government, I feel it to be a reward far beyond my deserts. All I can promise in return is, that I shall endeavor, by pursuing the same course which has won your favor, to merit its continuance. I regret that I cannot accept your invitation, as my engagements require me to leave Harrisburg to-morrow morning.

When Mr. Van Buren first recommended to congress the adoption of the independent treasury, as the leading financial measure of his administration, I took my stand in its favor, from the firmest conviction that it was a just and necessary measure. Its true character was at first misunderstood by many of the best and wisest democrats of the country; and it was misrepresented in such a manner by the satellites of the banking power as to cover it with a cloud of prejudice. This cloud has already been dissipated by public opinion, the sovereign arbiter of all political measures under our form of government; and viewed in the light of truth, it now stands as a monument of the wisdom, firmness, and patriotism, of its distinguished author. Its final success, and that at no distant day, seems inevitable. Another bank of the United States is repudiated, at least for the present, by the leading members of that party who were formerly its avowed friends. What, then, are the remaining alternatives for the safe-keeping of the public money? Does any man now seriously believe that, for this purpose, the people will again resort to a league of affiliated safe banks, and pour the public treasure into their vaults, and thus again convert it into an engine of ruinous expansions and contractions of the currency, and of new political panics and pressures? Shall we place our money under the custody of corporations which in the day of trial, when we shall most require its use to sustain the honor and interest of the country, may again convert into irredeemable bank paper? Above all, shall we, who profess to be the friends of state rights and the liberties of the people, bind together by bonds of mutual interest the eight hundred banks of the country and the chief executive magistrate; and thus place under his control instruments of corrupting influence throughout every state of the union more extensive power than was ever wielded by the bank of the United States? If the democracy of the country be not willing thus to put themselves in subjection to the banking power, the only remaining alternative is the independent treasury. This measure is so simple in itself, and so conformable in the spirit and letter of the constitution, that it could not fail, when freed from the mists of prejudice, to command the approbation of the people. By its adoption, we merely propose to return to the practice which prevailed for some time after the origin of the federal government, and entrust the safe-keeping of the public money to agents responsible to the government of the people, instead of banking corporations responsible only to their own stockholders. The public money is now collected by responsible officers, and it is disbursed by responsible officers; why, then, between the time of its collection and disbursement, should it be confided to irresponsible banks? This is the sole question.

By depriving the banks of the custody of the public money, you will not injure any one of them which is conducted on sound and safe principles. It is true that the independence of the independent treasury, besides diminishing their profits in a small degree, by taking from them the use of the people's money, which they have no just claim, may require them to keep in their vaults a somewhat larger amount of gold and silver than heretofore; but this will be one of the greatest incidental advantages of the system. This required increase of the precious metals will, however, I fear, prove wholly inadequate to restrict the banks within those safe limits which will secure to the public a paper circulation at all times convertible into gold and silver. I merely throw out these hasty thoughts on the great subject to which you have thought proper to advert, and which is making such rapid advances in the public favor. With sentiments of grateful respect, I remain sincerely yours, JAMES BUCHANAN.

Samuel Carpenter, John Miller, Henry Myers, and Thomas C. Miller, on behalf of the democratic members of the senate.

Thomas D. McEwee, Stokes L. Roberts, J. R. Snowdon, William McKnight, Charles Park, Miles Carpenter, E. W. Hamlin, and Wm. Field, on behalf of the democratic members of the house of representatives.

AMERICAN VESSELS ENGAGED IN THE WHALE FISHERY.

Circular to collectors, naval officers and surveyors.

Treasury department,

First comptroller's office, June 5, 1839.

SIR: From the results of recent trials in the courts of the United States, it appears that American vessels, sailing under registers, and without being enrolled and licensed, have, in violation of law, been for many years engaged in the whale fisheries.

On full examination of the records of this department, it is evident that this course has been adopted without its sanction, and it becomes matter of regret that a practice so erroneous should have been introduced and suffered so generally to be pursued contrary to the instructions of this office contained in the circular of 28th December, 1793, and its decisions in special cases submitted to it, and also in disregard of existing laws, as construed by the United States courts, subjecting such vessels on their arrival to foreign tonnage and duties, and in some cases to forfeiture of vessel and cargo; and, while at sea, alienating the American character of the vessel, and thus losing the wholesome protection of the laws against the revolt of their crews.

Owners and masters of such vessels now in port or which may hereafter arrive, under these circumstances, will perceive the necessity of surrendering, or causing to be surrendered, the registers of their vessels, and having them enrolled and licensed according to law, before proceeding to sea, and of pursuing such other measures for their own security as the important interests involved would seem to indicate.

By the 6th section of the act of the 18th of February, 1793, if, at the expiration of the year for which the license is given, the vessel be at sea, and the master shall, within forty-eight hours after his arrival, deliver to the collector of the district in which he shall first have arrived, the license which shall have expired, and make oath that it expired whilst at sea, taking the certificate of the collector therefor, as provided in the 9th section of the same act, with which to proceed to his proper district, the forfeiture of the vessel and cargo, or payment of foreign tonnage and duties, as the case may be, is avoided.

The limited duration of the license, as is contended for by some, would not therefore appear to have been a sufficient reason for this clear deviation from existing laws.

Consequently with a view to secure to such enrolled and licensed vessels all the benefits, privileges, and protection of those laws, collectors of the customs are authorised and directed on application, besides the papers before mentioned, to grant to such vessels general clearance, passport, bill of health, sea letter, and permit to touch and trade at any foreign port or place during the voyage, together with a certified copy of the crew list. On the clearance of such vessels, they will, in pursuance of the 21st section of the act cited, require from the master that his manifest of outward cargo be verified on oath, that on their arrival in port, the manifest and entry of inward cargo must, in like manner, be verified.

With respect to the cases of vessels sailing under registers, which have recently returned from whaling voyages, as well as those of vessels which hereafter may arrive, until further legislation, the existing laws must be enforced as it regards the duty on the tonnage of the vessel and on the cargo if it be of dutiable character, as well as other legal liabilities, the remedy for relief for any penalty, forfeiture, or disability incurred by such vessels being in remission by the secretary of the treasury where his legal power may be exercised and the case shall justify his interference or with congress in regard to the duties.

The papers herein directed to be issued, being such as are made necessary for vessels employed in the foreign trade, with the exception of the permit to touch and trade as prescribed in the circular of the 28th December, 1793, it is presumed that collectors of the customs will encounter no difficulty in the premises.

Proper notice, however, being given to the owners and masters of whaling vessels of the nature and object of these instructions, that they may incur no injury by neglecting to conform to them.

It has been made a question whether vessels, sailing under enrolments and licenses, with the papers before enumerated, might not take on board goods to be landed at foreign ports, with the right of drawback.

In view of such privilege, none but registered vessels, under existing laws, being permitted to engage in the foreign trade, it is the opinion of this department that it cannot be extended to vessels enrolled and licensed.

Another matter, as respects vessels enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade, is of sufficient importance to claim your attention.

Frequently, applications are made by purchasers of coasting vessels, or transferred by process of law to have them enrolled and licensed, in consequence of former owners withholding the old papers.

The proviso in the act of the 2d March, 1797, obviates any distinction that may have been taken in practice between the papers of these and other vessels be not surrendered on the change of property, the former owner or owners incur the penalty prescribed in the 14th section of the act of December 31, 1792, to be recovered, with costs of suit.

It is proper to add that these instructions have the approbation of the secretary of the treasury.

I am, very respectfully, SIR, your obedient servant.

J. N. BARKER, comptroller.

ESPY'S THEORY OF STORMS.

Professor Espy is now engaged in delivering a course of lectures on the theory of storms, which has excited considerable attention among the scientific men of our country. The following general notice of his lectures from the New York "Express" (with the addition of two paragraphs appended from the "Whig") will give our readers a good outline of his theory.

The law of storms. It is pretty satisfactorily demonstrated by professor Espy that there are certain laws regulating storms, tornadoes, hurricanes, &c. almost as regular as those which control the motion of the earth or the celestial bodies. The travels of these storms, he thinks, can be portrayed upon a chart, as are the motions of the planets—and thus results can be deduced of vast service to the farmer, the mariner, the world. It is a fair estimate that if the laws of storming could be calculated—a distance—its locus in question, if we may so express ourselves, the world's navigation, its agriculture, its pleasures—can be revolutionized. But professor Espy professes to go farther—and to prove that in certain states of the atmosphere he can make a storm, or operate upon this atmosphere, so as to create an artificial rain. We are ready to credit such studies to the scientific genius of professor Espy; for there are no doubt fixed laws to regulate storms; and his proposition is not more startling than that of Dr. Franklin was when first promulgated. Certainly no study is more interesting or important. Mr. Redfield's observations are attracting the attention of the world, and this country seems to be peculiarly disposed for observation, and the language is spoken over the whole field, next on account of the rapidity of inter-communication, and lastly, for the violence of its storms.

The revolution in society professor Espy will work out, if he establishes his science, is worthy of consideration. Indeed he will be deserving of the Homeric epithet of the cloud-compelling Jupiter. If we have a journey to make, we shall have but to look at our barometer, and we are enlightened as to the weather. That great topic of conversation, on which men's tongues are so fruitful, and that now serves as an introduction of all others, will be but an affair of science, exciting but little more curiosity than the barometer or thermometer. When we get up in the morning, in our variable climate, instead of being compelled to doubt and ask, and then to be told, which is the best—woolen or silk—we have but to calculate scientifically the motion of the air, and we can safely forego independent of overcoats or an umbrella. The farmer will know when to mow down, or to gather up his hay. Science will take hold of the sickle, and when the harvest comes, the farmer need not fear for the soundness of his corn, or the safety of his cow and his calf, nor reap with the knowledge of omniscience almost. But what Neptune will say—poor old Neptune, the venerable deity of Roman adoration—now Vulcan with his fire ship seizes his very beard, and drives his cart triumphantly over his waves, and in the very teeth of his winds—what Neptune will say—no man can give us the most accurate and correct knowledge of all nature's laws—exploring the cause, as it were, of Æolus, and bridling Boreas too—we shall see—as the sailor is admonished of the storm, a thousand miles off—as he puts its route upon the chart, and tells the whole story upon his log book, ere the time has come. But if professor Espy can do what he thinks can be done, and make a storm, at once, man is almost master of the world.

The design of last evening's lecture was to show the method of ascertaining the height of the base of forming clouds by the thermometer; to lay down rules, and explain how any careful observer may know it at any time in what direction a great storm is raging, while it is yet four or five hundred, or even a great number of miles distant, and the deduction from admitted facts, that rain may be produced by artificial means in time of drought. In the effect the lecturer was eminently successful; and if all who heard him were not thoroughly convinced of the truth of his doctrines, they were certainly impressed with the belief that he possessed a rare and unusual talent, and that he was a believer in the truth of his discoveries.

The absence of rain in Egypt and in Peru, and many other interesting phenomena, which scholars have spent lives in fruitless endeavors to explain, are, by the theory of Mr. Espy, satisfactorily accounted for, and every mystery, in any way connected with the theory of storms, finally cleared up, and the only none of the quackeries which obtains universally now-a-days; being a man of profound learning; and, amidst all the opinions to the contrary, as sane as was ever any teacher of a new science.

Upon this subject of storm-making, Mr. Espy discussed last night, and his lecture was one of high interest. His beautiful theory, that a storm is the focus of converging winds, is a very simple one. If there is a storm in New York, the winds from all points of the compass begin to blow to New York, from Albany,

Boston, Philadelphia, &c. the winds, as it were, diverging from this city, he pursues with the facts, admitted we believe, that volcanoes at times create rains, also praeries on fire, even heavy discharges of cannon. In time of drought, he argues that the air is most charged with vapor, and nature best fitted for artificial operations, and then he proposes by means of fire so to vary the air, as to evolve in aqueous columns, which, when they become clouds, subject to all the laws which he demonstrates to be the regulators of storms. He does not assume to say he can create a rain at will—but he believes that in a drought, when the upper stratum of air is favorable for artificial experiments, he can, by means of intense heat, create an ascending column of vapour, which will evolve in aqueous columns, which will take the easterly motion of all storms, and finally cover a country. Thus at New York he thinks he can make a storm for Boston, or on the Ohio create a rain for all the middle states and New England too.

These extraordinary ideas would amaze us, if we had not been powerfully influenced by the dreams apparently demonstrated, from which these inferences of his can be drawn, but by corollaries. Professor Espy, beyond all question, is a man of science. He is enthusiastic but no quack—no pretender—and we have not a doubt would create a profound impression by his theory in any scientific circle of the world.

TRANS-ATLANTIC POSTAGE.

The annexed correspondence has been placed in our hands by a mercantile friend, for the purpose of correcting, by its publication, the errors or omissions which appear to have been the cause of losses that have been sustained by commercial houses in this country, in the payment of postage on letters to their correspondents in Europe. It will be recollected, that soon after the steam ship commenced running between England and America, the postmasters in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Boston, through a desire to promote the convenience of merchants and others, announced that they would act within their official capacity, but to advance public convenience,—receive at their respective offices the ship money on letters that might be sent to Europe, together with the postage that would be payable in England, thereby securing the prompt transmission of letters addressed to the continent, without further trouble.

In consequence of this announcement, accompanied by a tariff of the rates of charge, persons have been in the habit of mailing their letters for the steamers, paying at the same time the postage from their respective cities to New York, the steam ship carriage, 25 cents, and the postage from England to the continent, according to the tariff above mentioned. The postmasters, we have no doubt, have performed their part of the agreement, and forwarded the cash thus received to the parties in New York, to whom the performance of the balance of the arrangement should be committed; but somehow or other, although the letters have been duly forwarded to England, the post offices in that country have required the payment of postage which had, in fact, already been paid in the United States.

It appears to us, that as, according to the letter of the postmaster in London, in answer to the letter from the postmaster at Bremen, "neither the ship nor packet postage can be paid in the United States on passing through England," the arrangement announced, with the tariff of prices annexed, must have been dependent on an act to be performed by an agent of the steam packet company in England, to wit: the payment of the postage through that country, when the letters should be put into the office there, and that the additional charge has been made on account of a failure to do so. If such be the case, the omission complained of is to be traced to the party charged with mailing the letters to England, and should be corrected therewith.

It is also more than probable that the difficulty may have arisen from putting the letter bags into the office, without discriminating between letters on which European postage was paid, and those on which it was chargeable.

The letters intended for the continent have thus been forwarded at once to their destination under existing regulations between the British and continental governments, and at the places to which they have been respectively addressed, the entire European postage has been exacted. If a separate bag for letters on which the trans-Atlantic postage is paid, were made up at New York, numbered and sealed, to be put into the office on their landing in England, together with the postage so paid, the difficulty would be surmounted. (Balt. Am. Breeze, 19th April, 1839.)

To the general post office, London. I have the receipt of your esteemed favor of the 27th ult. informing me of the reduction in the rate of postage for the correspondence with the United States of America, with the regular packets, which will serve me as my guide in future.

Several complaints having been lately made to me of letters being charged here with the full rate of postage from America, notwithstanding it was marked on them, "that ship postage, and postage through England" had been paid already in America, I take the liberty to hand you herewith two such letters, with the request that you will be pleased to return them to me again, with such an explanation as you may be able to give me on the subject.

I am sorry to occasion you this trouble, but as the charge of 3s. 3d. on your side, in addition to the 92 cents paid in America, induces our merchants to suppose that a double charge has been made, my wish is to give them that information they require. I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

(Signed) W. BARTSCH.

General post office, London, 16th April, 1839. Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 9th instant, and in reply to inform you, that neither ship nor packet postage can be paid in the United States on letters passing through England. The enclosed two letters are correctly charged—the ship letter rate from Liverpool to London 1s. 7d., and the packet rate from London to Hamburg 1s. 8d., together 3s. In future such letters will be liable to a rate of 2s. 8d. only. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient humble servant,

ORIGIN OF MERCER POTATOES.

The following article from the "Educator," a neat little paper published at Easton, Pa. will give the reader an idea of the origin of that justly celebrated potato, called the "Mercer." The article was written by a gentleman from Mercer county, and is probably correct in every particular. On enquiry we learn that in 1809, Bevan Pearson, esq. then a member of the house of representatives, from Mercer county, brought three of these potatoes to the village of Darby, from whence, as the Educator states, "they have spread over the United States." Several fresh supplies have been received in this village since that time, and we believe the only genuine "Mercers" (or "Gilkies") in this neighborhood, are in possession of the Pearson family.

[Delaware Cy. Republican.]

Gilkies. This ought to be the name of the favorite potatoes. They are commonly called, in the Philadelphia market, Mercers—frequently also Neshannocks, and sometimes by corruption, Shenangoes; I perceive also the name Shenangoes, (Shenanges) applied in some of the eastern papers.

All men regret that Columbus was robbed of the honor of giving name to the world he bestowed upon civilized man; and a correspondent regret acquiesces the writer in reference to one of his chief productions.

It is now too late to do honor to the illustrious Genoese navigator; perhaps the agricultural press might yet do an act of posthumous justice to the memory of John Gilky. This seems the more desirable, because his blood has ceased and must forever cease to flow in the direct line—not a drop of it "flows in the human veins."

John Gilky was educated for the Roman Catholic ministry, but missed his way and became one of the early settlers of Mercer county, Pa. He lived a hermit I think nearly forty years, in a cabin on the bank of Neshannock creek, about five miles above its junction with the Shenango, at New Castle. The writer remembers him in 1806, then an old man. A few years after that he produced from seed the justly celebrated Mercer potato. It spread in the neighborhood, and a few were carried by the father of Bevan Pearson, esq. of Mercer, and grandfather of the hon. John Pearson, at present senator from that county, to his residence at Darby, near Philadelphia. Thence it spread over the United States. It has proved a blessing to millions, and has added millions to the wealth of the nation. "This poor solitary exile from the Emerald Isle, has done more to benefit mankind, than many a hero of a hundred battles. Shall his name perish? Or will the friends of agricultural improvements and the lovers of justice, of honest men and good potatoes, agree to immortalize it by calling them henceforth Gilkies?"

RICHMOND ENGAGED IN SHIP BUILDING.

We will tell what is unknown to we suppose nine-tenths of our citizens, when we say there is now at Rocketts a schooner of a large size. Mr. Hosea English, one of the great Egg Harbor shipwrights is the contractor, and will no doubt from appearance thus far, construct her in a manner keeping with the skill in ship building which so celebrates the place from which he hails. The schooner has 76 feet keel, 45 feet beam, and 93 feet hold—burthen 190 tons. She is building for Messrs. Curry H. Clarke, B. Green, H. Tyler and captain Rogers, and will engage in the Richmond trade.

The timber is now in the course of preparation for another schooner of about the same size, which is also to be constructed by one of the great Egg Harbor shipwrights, a Mr. Biting. She is to be built by Messrs. Haskel & Libby, John Barr, Dupriest and captain Robinson, formerly of the Henry Chase, who is to command her.

These movements are no doubt gratifying to our citizens, they show the commercial spirit of the city to be active and buoyant. It has been many years since an effort at ship building was made here. Before the late war a brig was built at Rocketts, which was the first and last vessel of note built among us. The schooner Chesterfield, an excellent vessel, which is engaged in trade between Richmond and New York, was built perhaps in Chesterfield—at all events not far below Richmond, on the south side of the river.

The brig of which we have just spoken, was built at Rocketts about 30 years ago by Reuben Coultts, a son of Patrick Coultts—with traits of whose somewhat eccentric character, many of our citizens must be familiar. She was a handsome vessel, and called after the wife of her owner, "Jane Coultts." She sailed for Liverpool with a cargo of tobacco, commanded by captain Dixon Brown, (brother of our worthy second auditor) and capsized on her passage, she was fallen in with at sea, bottom upwards, and recognized by the marks on the hog-heads, seen through a hole cut in her bottom by captain and crew all perished. She was said to have been built too sharp and rigged too heavily, to which causes, her fate was attributed. Let us in our new efforts to build vessels to enter the competition for the carrying trade, encourage ourselves with the old adage, that "a bad beginning makes a good ending," and anticipate good fortune, the reverse of the hopeless fate of the "Jane Coultts."

This reminiscence of the "Jane Coultts," brings to mind an anecdote old, though amusing of Patrick Coultts, quite illustrative of his singular character. During the illness preceding his death, old col. Byrd, his particular friend and companion, called daily to see and comfort him, until the colonel himself was taken ill. His solicitude still continued undiminished, and he sent his servant regularly to enquire after Mr. Coultts's health—who continued to get worse, until his physician stated that he could not survive more than two or three days. On the morning before he died, the physician of col. B. told him that he too was on the verge of eternity and could not live two days. On being told this, the colonel sent his servant off in great haste, with his compliments to Mr. Coultts, and to request him, if he could, to hold out a day or two longer, and he (col. B.) would accompany him on his final journey. On receiving the message, Mr. Coultts's turned towards the servant, and with his peculiarly stern look and decided tone, bade him inform his master that he was then brotred and spurred for the journey; and that when "Patrick Coultts was ready he waited for no man." He immediately sank exhausted, and soon afterwards expired, leaving his friend col. B. to follow him, which he did in a short time. [Richmond Compiler.]

OUR COUNTRY.

The following paragraph, from a recent number of the New York Literary Gazette, has been traveling the circuit of the press these three weeks:

"A cockney sportsman, who had read with delight Mr. Hoffman's new work on the wild sports of America, took passage in a London packet, and arrived here during the present week, in search of wild game. He brought letters to a highly respectable merchant with whom we are well acquainted, and desired, after delivering them, to be directed to the best hunting grounds without delay as he could only remain here a few days, purposing to return in the Great Western. He said that he came to New York principally to shoot bears. Our mercantile friend, satisfying himself that his new acquaintance was perfectly serious, informed him that the sport had been greatly cut up here, and recommended him to proceed to Philadelphia. He departs for that city this day; and we call upon our friends there to extend to the distinguished stranger their usual hospitality."

There is doubtless somewhat of exaggeration in the statement, and yet it is very true that the ignorance of our country, in England, is much more extensive and profound than would be supposed. For example, some time ago, we received a letter from an English correspondent, making inquiries respecting some unofficial person living in the neighborhood of Natchez—the writer evidently supposing that he must be a neighbor of ours! Even this, however, is not quite up to another instance within our knowledge. A friend being on a visit to England a few years since, was asked if he knew Mr. Dobbs, from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. "No sir, I do not," was the reply. "Why, you must know him, I am sure," rejoined the other, "for he has lived in America three years!"

But these are not the illustrations which we quoted in the above paragraph for the purpose of making. Our design was to relate the following incident:—One clear, bracing morning last autumn, as we were stepping into the Schenectady cars at Albany, who should we meet but a New York friend, in his shooting jacket, accoutred with pouch and gun, in the act of placing his dogs in an adjoining compartment.

"So ho, friend! Whither are you bound?" we inquired.

"I am only going for a few days' shooting in the country."

"Where?"

"Upon a fine prairie in Michigan—only about three hundred miles from Detroit. I am told there is fine shooting there."

This single incident, which is literally true, speaks volumes upon the extent of our country, the spirit and habits of the people, and the facilities which were enjoyed for intercommunication. Detroit is eight hundred miles from New York, and our friend was bound for the prairie a long way beyond. And yet he was starting forth for a shooting excursion, with as little care of the distance as an English fox-hunter would experience in going upon a chase in a neighboring county.

Our friend had fine sport during his excursion, as we happen to know, as one of our firm, who was himself wandering the prairies at the same time, fell in with him in the hey day of his frolic. The sportsman informed us the other day that, having procured the best "fly" he ever saw, he was going down to the Kemebec for a day or two on a fishing excursion!

Nor is this spirit of dashing enterprise an exclusive characteristic of Americans. Foreigners coming thither soon have their ideas expanded by the broad expanse of our country, elevated by the height of our mountains, and inspired by the chase of bears and buffaloes. For instance, in the case of sir William Stuart, whose pictures of bear and buffalo hunts amid the stupendous peaks and glens of the rocky mountains have been exhibited for a few days at the Apollo gallery—the baronet, we are told, having spent five years among the scenes described, started on his return to England, and reached New York on his way. Lingered here a few days, his mind reverted to the wild sports of the west. It was asking too much to leave them so soon; so back he started, twenty-five hundred miles into the wilderness, for the pleasure of one more buffalo chase before he should finally embark for the shores of Albion. He went, and plunged again into the wild pleasures of the Snake Indians, and hunted buffaloes and grizzly bears for another two years, and is now once more on his way to his own land.

AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

Among the remarkable monuments of antiquity on the American continent are the ruins of Palenque, in the republic of Guatemala, the existence of which is but little known. About the middle of the last century, the ruins of an ancient city, which were spread over an area of great extent, were discovered in the vicinity of the town of Palenque, in the province of Ciudad Real de Chiapa. They were evidently of high antiquity, many centuries antecedent to the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards. These extensive and remarkable ruins were subjects of much discussion and learned speculation at the time of their discovery, and at length attracted the attention of the Spanish government. In the year 1759, a royal order was issued to Antonio del Rio, to proceed to the spot, and make a full and accurate examination of these interesting monuments of the art and labor of other times. In May, 1726, del Rio, repaired to Palenque taking with him a number of laborers provided with implements to make the necessary excavations and examinations. By dint of perseverance says he, I effected all that was necessary to be done, so that ultimately there remained neither a window or door way blocked up, a partition that was not thrown down, nor a room, corridor, court, tower or subterranean passage, in which excavations were not effected from two to three yards in depth.

These ruins are called by the Spaniards Casas de Piedras, (stone houses), and are situated on a plain at the base of a high mountain, and extend from east to west between seven and eight leagues, but their breadth is by no means equal to their length, being little more than half a league, in width, where they terminate towards the river Mi-col, which winds around the base of the mountain. The situation appears to have been well chosen, as the climate is described as being beautiful, the soil fertile, and capable of producing in great abundance every thing to satisfy the wants of man. The city probably commanded other resources to enable it to maintain as great a population as seems to be indicated by its extent. D-d Roi gives the following description of the largest of this mass of buildings, which stands on a mound twenty yards high, and is surrounded by other edifices namely, five to the northward, four to the southward, one to the southwest and three to the eastward, while in all directions the fragments of other fallen buildings are to be seen extending along the mountains.—The interior of the large building is in a style of architecture strongly resembling the Gothic, and from its rude and massive construction, promises great durability. The entrance is on the eastern side, by a portico or corridor, thirty-six yards in length, and three in breadth, supported by plain rectangular pillars, without either bases or pedestals, upon which there are smooth square stones of more than a foot in thickness, forming an architrave, while on the exterior surfaces are species of stucco shields; over these stones there is another plain rectangular block five feet long and six broad, extending over two of the pillars. Medallions or compartments in stucco, containing different devices of the same material, appear as decorations to the chambers; and it is presumable, from the vestiges of the heads which can still be traced, that they were the busts of a series of kings or lords to whom the natives were subject. Between the medallions there is a range of windows like niches, passing from one end of the wall to the other, some of them in the form of a Greek cross.

Beyond this corridor there is a square court, entered by a flight of seven steps, the north side entirely so, but sufficient traces of them remain to shew that it once had a corridor and chamber similar to those on the eastern side, and which continued entirely along the several angles. The south side has four small chambers with no other ornament than one or two little windows, like those already described. The western side is correspondent to its opposite in all respects but in the variety of expression of the figures in stucco; these are much more rude and ridiculous than the others, and can only be attributed to most uncultivated Indian capacity.—The device is a sort of grotesque mask with a crown and long beard like that of a goat, under which are two Greek crosses. It is by no means improbable that these fantastic forms, and others equal whimsical were the delineations of some of their deities to whom they paid an idolatrous worship, consistent with their false belief and barbarous customs.

MR. RIVES—THE CONSERVATIVES.

To our inquiry, "what more positive terms were expected of the conservatives," the Baltimore Chronicle puts in an answer, of which the following is the substance:

"We should like to see the feelings and language of Mr. Tallmadge adopted—uncompromising hostility to the re-election of Martin Van Buren.—That is all, and you have it now."

So far as we are concerned, the answer is amusing. In putting down Van Burenism, we doubt if our friend of the Chronicle, spirited as he is in the race, will be in at the death sooner than we.

As to Mr. Rives, the Chronicle puts us a query, as follows:

"In very recent circumstances, in connection with the assertion of the anti-Van Burenism of Mr. Rives by the Madisonian, convince us that he is opposed to Van Buren's re-election. That will do very well, as far as it goes; but in the event of an opposition ticket being presented to him, would he not as we are informed he did, at the last election, stand aloof and rest neither?"

You may touch assured, that he will "stand aloof and touch not" Martin Van Buren nor his satellites, except it be to give them a dressing, and help to send them into the retirement they deserve. We doubt if he would vote for Van Buren for the meanest office in the state. This point being settled, what is the inference as to his relation to the other branch of the alternative? His principles and his views of national policy are clearly defined. They are opposed to a national bank—opposed to high tariffs—opposed to internal improvements by the general government—opposed to a sub-treasury—opposed to the enlargement of executive power—opposed to the interference of federal officers in popular elections—opposed to monopolies—opposed to extravagant and wasteful expenditure of the public money—opposed to proscription for conscience sake—opposed to a crusade of the federal government upon state rights—opposed to the prostitution of federal power to the selfish ends of persons and parties; and he is in favor, in short, of an economical, efficient, patriotic, pure, impartial and republican administration of public affairs. It is because this administration is not conducted upon these principles that he opposes it. It would be, however, the height of absurdity and inconsistency for Mr. Rives or any other republican, while he abandoned one set of men for these causes, to commit himself to another set, without any guarantee that they would administer affairs any better than the former. He left the administration when it was glorying in the strength of a fresh victory, with its blushing honors thick upon it. Is it supposed that it was for so light and trivial a cause, that other men and parties fancy they may be induced to swear a new allegiance without inquiry or consideration?

The question as to the choice of a ticket by the opposition against Van Buren, has been referred to a national convention. Pray let us await the decision of that convention, and the doctrines it may proclaim, before you compel us to choose our banners.

The conservatives, generally, look upon Martin Van Buren as immovably committed to the doctrines of the destructives. They cannot, therefore, be reconciled to him. If opposition candidates are presented who will carry out their principles, the conservatives will support them. If not, then they should make a choice of evils—holding it to be their duty to take some part, and that part not a fruitless one.

ARMY.—OFFICIAL.

From the Army and Navy Chronicle.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 30.

Adjutant general's office, Washington, June 2, 1839.

I. The major general commanding-in-chief, having observed that the dragoons, when serving as light infantry, practise the obsolete system of 1834, instead of the prescribed system of 1835, "for light infantry and rifle skirmishes," directs that the former be now discontinued. The "carbine manual," prescribed in general orders, Jan. 4th, 1837, will not be changed.

II. Whenever the dragoons are dismounted and serve on foot, the established "rules for the exercise and manœuvres of the U. States infantry," published by authority of the war department, the 10th of April, 1835, will be strictly conforming to.

III. The buglers, drummers and fifers, belonging to companies not serving with their colors, must not be separated from their respective companies.

IV. When four or more companies are serving at the head quarters of the regiment, the private, allowed to act as musician in the regimental band, will be dropped from the rolls of absent companies, and be all mustered in the companies stationed with the colors. By order of major general Macomb.

R. JONES, adjutant general.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 5.

Head quarters of the army, Fort King, May 19, 1839.

I. With a view to recruit the 2d regiment of dragoons, the following arrangement will be carried into effect as soon as possible:

Captain Bryant's company, (A), capt. Fowler's, (H), capt. E. L. Beall's, (I), and capt. Winder's, (K), will repair without delay to Garey's Ferry, where with captains Bullock's and Howe's (F and G), all will be dismounted except company K, commanded by Hest. Darling, and their horses will be turned over to inspection by a board of dragoon officers. Such as are found fit for cavalry service will be given in charge of an officer, who will conduct them to Jefferson barracks by easy marches—company K, and its officers, being employed for that purpose. The remainder will be turned over to the quartermaster's department. The five dismounted companies, with their officers, will then embark for Fort Hamilton, N. Y. harbor, where they will await further orders. All the company property will be taken with them, except the horse furniture, which will be packed and marked, designating the companies to which it belongs, and forwarded by water to the quarter master at Jefferson barracks, for the 2d dragoons.

II. The principal quarter masters at Garey's Ferry and Tampa Bay, will, with the approbation of the respective commanding officers, dispose of all horses, mules, and other cattle, that may not be required for the public service, and reduce their respective establishments to correspond with the requirements of the public service, in order that there may be no unnecessary expeditures. By order of major general Macomb.

LETTER FROM GENERAL GAINES.

We give below a letter from this distinguished officer addressed to the editors of the New Orleans Bee. So far as it relates to the strictures of the editors of the Bee, which elicited it, we have nothing to say. We give it as a defence of that officer's conduct in Florida. We have never believed that the officers of the army were in any way to blame for the protracted length of that war. Braver spirits were never harnessed for the fight than have sacrificed themselves in the swamps and hammocks of Florida, and we firmly believe that every thing that could be done was done on their part to stay the ravages of the savage, and bring peace to the territory. No man doubts that the war might have been brought to a close years ago by the same course recently adopted by the government, and it was pusillanimous in the extreme thus to close it after having spent millions of treasure, and sacrificed so many valuable lives. The government is alone responsible for the waste of treasure and of life, and it is impossible for it to rid itself of the weight. We regret one thing in the general's communication, and that is the gratuitous fling at general Scott. Any remark general Gaines may make cannot shake the fame and popularity of the hero of Bridgewater. It displays a vindictiveness which is not a characteristic of the truly brave.

To the Editor of the New Orleans Bee:

Gentlemen:—In your leading editorial article of the 3d instant, in reference to the "Florida war," you have indulged in some invidious remarks, which, though not expressly applied to me, are, nevertheless, as well known by my friends to have been designed for me, as if I had been named in every line. Silence, therefore, on my part, would betray an indifference, which might be construed into a tacit admission of the imputation put forth against me, and the gallant officers and men of the Louisiana volunteers and regulars, which I had the honor to command in the first Florida campaign.

You are pleased to say that "opinions have often been expressed by men professing some knowledge of the course of military events, that had such and such measures been adopted or avoided, or such and such officers been placed or continued in command, the war would ere this have been at an end."

You then remark that,—"nothing could have been more vain or illusive than such predictions."

When my friends and others with whom I had no acquaintance, in the southern and western states, as well as in Florida, expressed the opinion, which they have often expressed, that if I had been permitted to remain in Florida, with the Louisiana volunteers, and regulars, added to the Georgia and Florida volunteers under the noble-hearted Clinch, the war would have been terminated honorably in the month of March or April 1836; I was convinced of the correctness of this opinion—not merely because the officers and men of my command were better acquainted with the Indians and with the country embracing the theatre of the war, than any other troops in the service, but because we had actually in the short space of thirty-six days raised most of the volunteers, and marched by land and water near 800 miles, had marched through the Florida wilderness and swamps 140 miles of that distance; and, moreover had met the enemy and beaten him, and forced him to sue for peace; I had promised him peace; and, from the moment of that promise the enemy remained at peace, without firing a single shot at our troops, who were permitted to amuse themselves in fishing for some miles up and down the Withlacoochee river, in the presence of many of the Indians, three days immediately after the treaty—and it was afterwards proven that they remained perfectly peaceable from the 6th to the latter end of March, confidently expecting the fulfilment of my promise that they should have peace, as soon as the president could be heard from.

These facts were properly reported to the war department; and although great efforts have been made to prove that the Indians were not sincere in suing for peace, or in their promise to remain at peace; there exists the most irrefragable evidence of their sincerity, without a shadow of evidence from any respectable officer or soldier then with me, to the contrary.

Under the foregoing circumstances, I turned my command over to that excellent officer General Clinch, and left Florida for the Sabine frontier, with the exception of the fact that there would be no more war in Florida, unless it should be renewed by some reckless Indian or white chief, unwilling to brook the disgrace of my having raised an army and marched near 800 miles, and put an end to the war, before a party scribbling secretary, and his favorite general, with their French books, could write a few dozen long letters—preparing visionary plans of operation, according to the Napoleonic tactics! (excellent for operations against troops of civilized nations—but fruitless for wilderness swamps, against savages)—whilst the Florida frontier was bleeding!

I had the satisfaction to find, from the testimony of general Smith, and all other respectable officers with me, whose statements I have had an opportunity of obtaining, (and which are at your service, should you think proper to correct the article here referred to) that after I had left Florida, the Indians remained faithful to their promise to abstain from hostilities, for near three weeks—after they had obtained my promise that they should have peace—a promise which, according to the laws of war, I had as much right to make as if the president had been at my elbow and had expressly dictated to me the promise which I made them—inasmuch as I had beaten them, and forced them to sue for peace.

But I soon learned that it was not the will and pleasure of my friends at Washington that I should have the poor satisfaction of bringing the war to a close. On the contrary, it was sworn that "Gaines had acted with gross impropriety in daring to go from New Orleans to Florida without my orders"—"that Gaines shall be brought before a court, and his measures disapproved"—and that "as to his whipping the Indians, they were not to be whipped"—"but that Scott shall go and give them a good whipping."

That good whipping has cost this nation some twenty millions of dollars, with the lives of hundreds meritorious officers and men, volunteers, regulars and militia—to say nothing of the disgrace of statesmen and visionary chieftains, employed in planning splendid campaigns, magnificent for closet purposes, and to enable bureau heroes to indulge in the work of anonymous essays—but leaving the Indians unwilling to stay whipt.

And now Messrs. Editors, you are pleased to tell "a benighted world," that nothing could be more vain or illusive than the opinion, that had such and such measures been adopted or avoided, or had such and such officers been placed or continued in command, the war would ere this have been at an end.

And you also would tell us that "if the government had persisted in its exactions, and the Seminoles in their resistance, the war would never have ceased until means had been brought to bear more ample and efficacious than any which have heretofore been exhibited.

Means ample and efficacious—indeed! and are we to be told that the employment of five thousand men in the scientific campaign of April 1836, and nearly an equal number in the following fall and winter, and subsequently for two years past,—together with two millions of dollars—did not constitute means ample and efficacious—and shall it be said, now that the war is only rumored to be over, that a miserable number of Indians, consisting of little more than a hundredth part of the red men near us, would for ever maintain the attitude of defiance against the United States, without more men and more money? If so the age of chivalry is indeed passed and gone from our country.

Be assured Messrs. Editors, that one thousand such men as Daniel Boone and his associates of Kentucky, or John Sevier, or Isaac Shelby, and their brother soldiers of Tennessee, with a fortieth part of the money expended in Florida, would have been sufficiently "ample and efficacious" to have brought the war to a close in one-tenth part of the time elapsed since its commencement; provided always that the evil spirit of party could be excluded from statesmen and officers concerned, directly or indirectly in the management of the war.

It was the evil spirit of party that decided the course of measures which brought about the war. It was the evil spirit of party that combined against me three influential men, the worst of its votaries, and though of different parties all willing to combine against me, because they all feared me, and because I had spurned their efforts to make me a party man. It was the evil spirit of party which arrayed the ultra presses of all parties against me, endeavoring to place me without the pale of common justice. It is the same evil spirit of party which now prompts ultra party men to turn a deaf ear to all measures for the national defence which do not emanate from ultra party men. It is the evil spirit of party which leaves our country without rail roads from the central states to the seaboard—with floating batteries, to be acted on by steam power, in the national defence, for the protection of our swamps and inland frontier, against armies and fleets propelled by steam power. Correct this evil spirit of party, and our country will soon become invulnerable in war and prosperous in peace. Correct this evil spirit of party and my rail road and floating battery system of national defence, which proudly soars above the pestilential atmosphere of the spirit of party will save us from the annoyance of our neighboring Indians—a system of defence, the accomplishment of which at an expense of but little more than thrice the amount expended in the Seminole war, will enable us to hold the attitude of proud defiance against the combined land naval forces of the whole civilized world.

In conclusion, Messrs. Editors I take leave to tender you my acknowledgments for your efforts to console your readers in the last paragraph of your article under consideration. You say—

"Happily for all parties, major general Macomb, commander-in-chief of the army of the United States, has at length effected a peace."

If this be true, I have great reason to mingle the expression of my gratification and thanksgiving with the joy of those who have long deplored the evils which attended and followed the renewal and long continuance of the afflictive war. But much as I must ever depreciate the lawless efforts of a few blind votaries of the spirit of party, to filch from the brave volunteers and regulars, who without most of the common necessities of life, willingly consented to fly with me to the dreary theatre of the war, and place themselves between the savage foe and the suffering frontier of Florida, holding his main army in check until it was beaten and compelled to sue for peace; I cannot write in the indelicate thanksgiving which the measure bestowed upon all the officers of the government and the army. With some three or four huge exceptions, often named by me, the officers and men, volunteers and regulars, has served with great fidelity and honor.

I freely give to my friends and enemies all the advantage they can derive from my signature,—which I uniformly attach to whatever I write,—holding myself always responsible, as a citizen and soldier, for all I say or write.

EDMUND P. GAINES.

P. S. Editors who have at any time during the war, indulged in animadverting upon my conduct in Florida, are respectfully requested, as an act of common justice, to give the foregoing views in place in their papers. E. P. G.

CHRONICLE.

A great milker. An imported cow of the Darham breed-norm bred belonging to col. Wollert, of Philadelphia, yielded one hundred and ninety-four quarts of milk during the week ending on the 24 inst. The name of the great milker is Isabella, and it is stated that col. W. has another cow named Colobra for which he refused two thousand five hundred dollars within the last few weeks.

The census of Hamilton county, Ohio, has just been taken. The city of Cincinnati is found in its limits, and the enumeration shows a male white population for city and county, over 21 years of age, of 14,650. In the year 1835 the number was 10,601—showing an increase of about forty per cent. within the last four years.

Elections take place, during the present year in the following order—

July	Louisiana	Oct.	Pennsylvania
August	Rhode Island,		Ohio
	North Carolina,		Maryland,
	Alabama,		Georgia,
	Tennessee,		Arkansas,
	Kentucky,		New Jersey,
	Indiana,		Delaware,
	Illinois,	Nov.	New York,
Sept.	Vermont,		Massachusetts,
	Maine,		Michigan,
	South Carolina,		Mississippi.

It is stated in the Baltimore American, that the Pittsburg and Baltimore portable car body line have two hundred and fifty portable cars now in use; and for their operations on the Susquehanna rail road they have paid to that company twenty-seven hundred and ninety-three dollars during the present month.

The St. Louis Republican relates as a singular circumstance that whilst a man was on his trial in that city for passing a counterfeit note, the note itself was stolen from court, and the accused party had consequently to be released.

United States steamers. The Army and Navy Chronicle says, that two are ordered to be built immediately. They are to be constructed upon the same model, and are intended to be as near alike as possible, with the exception of the engines. To test the comparative advantages of the two descriptions of engines adopted, one of the steamers is to be fitted with inclined engines, of ten feet stroke; the other vessel to have two vertical engines of the same power, of seven feet stroke.

The dimensions of the hull are reported as:—

	Feet.	Inches.
Length between perpendiculars,	220	0
Moulded beam,	39	0
Depth of hold,	23	6
Tonnage, by custom house measurement,	1,650	tons.

Rogue caught. Some three weeks ago, Charles Spencer, the cashier of the Phoenix bank at Litchfield, Ct., absconded, taking with him a portion of the funds of the bank. It appears that he made his way to the west, and was proceeding southwardly for New Orleans when he was arrested at St. Louis, at which point the news of his absconding had preceded him about twenty four hours. The St. Louis Bulletin thus mentions the manner of his discovery and arrest: "It appears that he was lurking about the wharf, and had taken passage on board the steamer St. Louis, which was to leave in the morning for New Orleans, on board of which an old acquaintance saw and conversed with him. His concealed manner attracted his attention; and, on mentioning it to a friend, he was shown the Bulletin containing the paragraph relative to his absconding. Constables were immediately sent on board the boat, where they found his trunk only; and as she was just starting for New Orleans, they went off in her, with the intention of searching her on the passage."

Since the above was in type, the constables have returned with their prisoner, he having made his appearance at Litchfield, Ct., during the night, and the wharf by which they were landed on the Illinois shore opposite Jefferson barracks, and conveyed their prisoner to town in an oz cart.

City. There were 34 fires and 42 false alarms in the city of New York during the last month.

Names. There is a firm in Boston which flourishes under the nomenclature of Neal and Pray.

There is also one in Maidstone, (Eng.) which hangs up a sign to inform the reader of the Biblical fact that David Shot and Goliath Fell.

Captured slaves. We give below an extract from the Rio Janeiro correspondence, of the Courier and Enquirer, from which it will be seen that some of the captives, who had been landed on the Illinois shore opposite Jefferson barracks, and conveyed their prisoner to town in an oz cart.

"With the last thirty days the British cruisers have sent into this port five slave vessels, with about 1,500 slaves on board. These are hired out to individuals for a period of eight weeks, at the rate of six pounds for each year, which individuals the British government for the five pounds bounty paid the captors. It is not believed, however, that one of these miserable Africans will ever receive emancipation, as promised, at the expiration of the eight years service. Within that time they will be broken down in the coffee business, as the negroes employed in this do not average a line of eight years. Besides, as it is impossible to identify these negroes, certificates are obtained from physicians when negroes die, and whatever was their situation or character, they are made to represent such a number of the apprentices, and thus, at the end of eight years, they will all be killed, or represented such by the death of other negroes on the estate. You will at once see, that the capture of these slaves is attended with no good effect, but is really injurious to the poor Africans.

Vandalism—savage. Can it be true that the blue laws have made such progress in the enlightened city of Buffalo? We hear the little German minstrel girls, wandering west, and singing their ditties as they go, and thus, at the end of eight years, they will all be killed, or represented such by the death of other negroes on the estate. You will at once see, that the capture of these slaves is attended with no good effect, but is really injurious to the poor Africans.

Benefits of life insurance. The amount of losses paid during the last year, by the N. Y. Life and Trust, and the Farmers' Loan and Trust, the two principal life insurance companies in this city, was $24,000; resulting from actual losses in almost every instance, the families of the insured. Yet notwithstanding this great benefit, derived at a very trifling annual cost, the number of policies issued by these two companies compared with the English offices, is very small.

The ordinance passed by the Baltimore city councils imposing a charge of half a cent per bushel on all grain other than the product of Maryland, landed on any of the public wharves has been repealed.

The proprietors of the Great Western steam ship have declared an annual dividend of 9 per cent.—with £2,000 on hand as a contingent fund.

Light houses on our coast have been multiplied from fifty-five to two hundred and fifty-four within the last thirteen years.

The Lancaster Union mentions a number of beautiful card handkerchiefs, made of silk, the product of that county, which were exhibited at the late Convention of the American Merchants of Lancaster city. The editors of the Union say they never saw a better article of the kind, and add:

"They were woven in Philadelphia, and are nearly twice as heavy as imported ones of the same size, retaining all the softness which characterizes the fabric. We have never known a finer article of silk, but not having much confidence in our knowledge of such matters, we submitted it to the inspection of one every way qualified to judge of its merits, some skeins presented to us by the manufacturers, and it was pronounced for evenness of thread, beauty of color and strength, not to be surpassed. The Messrs. Carson have an extensive country and feed a great number of worms—One leaf of the multicaulis grown by them this summer, measured 15 3/8 inches across. We hope they may succeed fully in an enterprise so beneficial to the community."

In 1705, the stage coaches went from London to York in four days and now they perform the distance in twenty-four hours. In 1712, it took thirteen days to travel by coach, from London to Edinburgh, and now it requires only forty hours. 1500 travellers were two whole days' journey from London to Brighton, now they are only about five hours.

A blow up saved by sinking. The steambot Tennessee, on her way from Louisville to Nashville, Tenn., when near Rome, Indiana, about 100 miles below Louisville caught fire; and there being a quantity of powder on board, to prevent an explosion, the captain thought proper to sink the boat. It is thought that she can be raised, although much damage must be sustained.

We take pleasure in republishing from the New Orleans Free American, the following complimentary notice of a valiant citizen, so long and so favorably known to the citizens of Baltimore.

Schooner Woodbury. This noble vessel commanded by as noble a fellow as ever lived, has been withdrawn from her station on the gulf as a government packet. We are sorry for this, for we had begun to look for the regular return of this vessel almost as a matter of course as a positive and comforting link between us and the barbarians of Mexico. Now we shall have to depend on chance for intelligence from Santa Ana's dominions. Captain Nicholas who had the Woodbury in charge, has gained the esteem of all by his urbanity and strict attention to the trying duties assigned him, and he is a man who will not regret that he had not been continued in the service of his country, which has been so valuable. Among all our friends, we know of none who has a firmer hold upon our esteem, and our fervent wish is that his bark may hurry on to the haven of his hopes, with a smooth sea and kindly breezes.

An improved species of cotton has been discovered in Alabama. The Southern Agriculturist says that it grows much taller than the common plant, and bears a number of short heavy branches only 4 or 5 inches in length, and bearing from 100 to 150 clusters of 7 or 8 pods on each branch. The cotton is finer than any other kind of short staple, commands 4 or 5 cents more, and the product is very much more abundant. The plant, with leaves like other cotton, resembles the okra in other respects, and in rich land will reach a height of 8 or 9 feet. The seed is not yet in general use, and the small quantity to be had sells at very high prices. It ripens earlier than the other cotton, and stands a better chance, therefore, of escaping the worm, which is very destructive to late crops in the southwest.

Timber on the prairies. Judge Brown in an address at the late cattle show at Jacksonville, Illinois, said this was a false alarm—that the prairies could and did now produce more timber than was wanted. All that was wanting was a farmer to look to it. Cultivate it, and it will be well known that one of the surpassing beauties of picturesque prairie scenery, are the islands of forest timbers there an ocean of green. Such preserves are of great value. Nurseries that the landscape painter and admirers will not regret, necessity and taste combine to keep unmoleted by the savage axe of civilization.

[N. Y. Star.]
The French admiral Baudin arrived at Havana on the 22nd May, and was received with the highest marks of respect. He landed amid demonstrations of general rejoicing—a circumstance which is explained by the fact that the Spaniards read the Mexicans no love, and are delighted that they have been humbled by the French.

We have before noticed the opening and exploration of a mound at grave Creek, near Elizabethtown, Va. and the various curiosities, interesting to antiquarians, found therein. The last Sentinel states that a few days since the proprietor in unroofing a tree on the very top of the mound, discovered a large tree trunk within two feet of the surface of the earth, but immediately under the tree—the largest of principal roots of which having penetrated the skull and ground directly through it. The skeleton had been placed in a sitting posture, and others of the bones were also much broken or injured with the pressure. The tree is white oak of about two feet diameter.

[Bolt Walker.]
A fine marble quarry has been discovered in Walker county, Ky., and the owners of the rich deposit are making arrangements to work it. A writer in the Frankfort Commonwealth speaks of the marble as unequalled, by any heretofore discovered in our country, regarding both its polish, texture and variety. He mentions a hill 100 feet high and nearly half a mile long, composed of solid marble; and adds:

"These beds constitute a variety in color, figure and texture, the most extraordinary. Encountering any one of them, at any point, along its whole length, and it will be found to possess precisely the same beautiful appearing as at the beginning—and yet totally different and distinct from its elbow neighbors on either hand. There is no general term for so much variety, but that which approaches most nearly to comprehensive propriety, is porphyry. The predominant ground of each variety, is something of an oil color, which the blending are generally a modest red. After this, it were vain to attempt to define the interminable commingling of shades and hues. One isolated species, however, which appears to disclaim all colorable fraternity with the balance, is that of the blue blending on an azure ground."

Foot of a revolutionary patriot. Captain Benjamin Webber, of Gloucester, a soldier of the revolution, who was engaged in the battle of Bunker Hill, and is now eighty years of age—walked a few rods far from his residence at Gloucester (rising at 4 o'clock in the morning) to Salem, where he took the 10 o'clock cars for Boston, and, after walking, some hours, in the accomplishment of some business he had on hand, he walked to Charlestown, and after taking a stroll over the scene of his first fight, returned to the city, walked to the city hall, and took a seat in the cars to Salem, whence he again resumed his walk home, and had arrived within a few miles of Gloucester, when the stage overtook him and carried him the rest of the way. He had walked thirty miles, at least, and rode as many more, and all this was accomplished between sunrise and sunset of the same day!

The case of the steambot New Haven, tried in the circuit court of New York for an infringement of the patent of the Congress by its owners, by the use of a rudder for steering, has terminated in a verdict against the defendants of $300, being the penalty expressed in the law. A similar verdict was given immediately after against the steambot Providence for a like infringement. These cases, it said, will be carried to the supreme court.

Long lived newspaper. The Newport (R. I.) Mercury, on Saturday last, completed the eighty-first year of its age. Its first issue was published on the 23d of June, 1758, by JAMES FRANKLIN, the elder brother of Dr. Benjamin Franklin.

Ohio canal. By a return from the collector's office at Chillicothe, it appears that the following produce and property were shipped from that port during the month of May.

Barrels of pork,	5,361
Barrels of flour,	3,692
Bacon,	593,095 lbs.
Lard,	2,989
Fishels wheat,	18,900

The tolls taken at Chillicothe during the month, amounted to $8,834 11.

This is said to be the heaviest business ever done at that office in one month, and to be more than double that of the corresponding month of last year.

BANKS, CURRENCY, MONEY MARKET, &c. Accounts received this morning from Detroit represent that the commissioners, appointed by the state of Michigan to effect an arrangement with the state bank of Michigan to secure the large amount of public funds on deposit with that institution at the time of its failure, have entirely failed in their efforts to secure a satisfactory settlement. The governor of Michigan has consequently instructed the attorney general of the state to take the necessary steps to procure an injunction. It is said that the consequences of this necessary proceeding will be to render the institution insolvent for a very large amount, and that the bill holders will be the principal sufferers. The amount due the state is between 4 and 500,000 dollars. We here have another practical illustration of the working of the union of bank and state, in which it is proved that the connection is alike prejudicial to the institution, the state which created it and took it into partnership, and the community at large.

The correspondent of the National Intelligencer, in New York, gives the following account of the condition of business in that city on the 22d inst. "The flour dealers continue to suffer for want of money, but, generally speaking, will ride out the pressure with safety. Flour has now got down to nearly six dollars, and sales are dull, so that they who are under large acceptances here are on the rack. There have been two failures out of the flour business in Pearl street, one in hardware, and one in dry goods, respectable, but not great houses—one probably caused by southern embarrassments, and the other by a fall of dry goods—to which I allude to prevent a panic from going abroad, when there is no panic here. Money, however, is not plenty. The banks discount with extreme caution. Trade is conducted on limited principles, and by the strictest commercial rules. The jobbers have nearly got through their payments. The grocers are quite easy. The pressure is not general, but confined to the particular class of dealers whom the late turns in the market were most likely to affect."

The Philadelphia North American of Wednesday says—

The operations in the stock market show an upward tendency to day. Vicksburg going up to 48. The money market is in an unpleasant and unsettled condition—rates remaining as for the past week, at 12 and 15 per cent. The banks are curtailing all in their power, determined to carry themselves through under any contingency which might possibly occur. Pursuing this course, and at the same time avoiding any distress upon the community further than is absolutely necessary for their security, is their only policy. But there is a want of harmony existing among them much to be deprecated. We do not see how this is to be avoided so long as each will pursue its own peculiar interest, with no other check upon them than the prudence and discretion of their respective governments.

The New York Express of Tuesday, 2, P. M. says—

The appearance of things in Wall street, is brighter. Stocks have improved, and a better feeling is manifested.

The business affairs in Philadelphia are as bad and worse than they are in New York. Bicknell's

Reporter says that the week ending on Saturday last, was the severest that has been experienced since the great pressure. The out door rates were in few instances less than 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per month, while in many, still more extravagant prices were exacted. Fortunately, however, the demand among the regular traders was light—the high prices being confined chiefly to speculators, note brokers, and dabblers in stocks. The pressure is attributed in the first place, to the news from Europe by the Great Western; in the second, to the large sums that are payable at this season of the year; and in the third, to the bankruptcy of the Philadelphia loan company, and the apprehension and panic that such an event is invariably calculated to produce. The Reporter adds that, unless we have very cheering news from Great Britain, little ease may be expected for a few weeks to come. It is scarcely possible, however, for the scarcity to continue longer than a few weeks, for business will get duller and duller as the summer deepens, while the rich crops and the general healthfulness and fine condition of the country, cannot but have a salutary influence.

The bank commissioners of the state of Connecticut having made their annual report to the legislature, from which it appears that the whole amount of bank capital in the state in August last, was $9,937,857 71, and that their liabilities amounted to $3,929,372 19—while the "immediately available" resources of the banks were $2,183,201 71.—The amount of specie in all the banks at that time, except Connecticut River bank, from which no returns were received, was $518,506 82, and the amount of bills in circulation was $2,611,139 00, which shows an increase in the circulation from March 1838 to August 1839, of about $700,000. It is stated in the Philadelphia Ledger that four different suits have been instituted against G. F. Beukert, the president of the Southwark Savings' bank, for the recovery of the amount of notes of that institution, held by the plaintiffs. The defendant appeared with his counsel, H. R. Kueas, esq. and pleaded an abatement that the suit was instituted improperly, as it was brought against G. F. Beukert, and not against G. F. Beukert, president of said institution. The magistrate overruled the objection, and the plaintiffs brought several witnesses who testified to Mr. Beukert's signature.—On hearing, the magistrate entered judgment for the amount of five dollars and costs in each case.

Loss of bank notes. It is well known that one source of gain to banks is the destruction of their notes from accidents of various kinds, on land and water. We have not sufficient data to form a correct opinion of the proportion thus lost, either in this country or Europe; but the amounts would vary according to the political condition, pursuits, character and habits of the community, in the respective spheres of circulation, as well as the magnitude of the issues. The losses sustained, for instance, upon an equal amount of circulation, would be far less in a country in the enjoyment of peace and security, than in a state of war or civil commotion. Much also, depends upon the degree of credit enjoyed by the institution; as this circumstance not only determines in ordinary cases, the extent over which the notes are spread, but also, in a great degree the length of time they are withheld from presentation.

According to an estimate in the year 1832, the Bank of England appears to have gained the sum of three hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling, or one million five hundred and fifty five thousand dollars, by the loss of its notes, and this is generally thought much less than the real amount. If we consider the age of the bank, its great credit and circulation, the immense extent of the British empire, and the numerous fleets and armies, which for nearly one hundred and forty years, had been in a greater or less degree paid in those bills, the amount is not surprising.

In our country we have accurate information on this subject so far as it regards a single institution—the old Bank of the United States. This bank was chartered in 1791, and in active operation for twenty years. Its circulation, we believe, never exceeded five millions of dollars. In 1823, by decree of court, the trustees of the bank were released from any obligations to redeem outstanding bills, as twelve years had elapsed from the expiration of the charter, and notice by public advertisements had been widely spread for seven years.

The notes then unredeemed amounted to two hundred and five thousand dollars. A fund of five thousand dollars was reserved for instances of peculiar hardship; but the whole amount presented does not much exceed eleven hundred dollars to the present time, of which the greater part was in the hands of an invalid revolutionary soldier and liquidated in 1825. A note of ten dollars was redeemed, however, a few days since.

The result of the note account of the second Bank of the United States cannot be known for some years. An estimate was made by the government in fixing the price of the seven millions of stock sold to the bank, but the amount was of course a matter of mere speculation. [Phila. North. Amer.

We notice by the stock exchange books, that the stock of the New York banking company, an institution recently organized under the general banking law, and of which John Delafield, esq. is president, was introduced at the board, the early part of the week. This company already has one million of dollars cash capital paid in. And with a person of the high financial talents of Mr. Delafield to manage its affairs, the stock must prove, not only a safe but a very profitable investment. One and a half per cent. premium was offered for the stocks yesterday and refused. [N. Y. Times.

MEXICO AND TEXAS. The Charleston Mercury contains the following letter from col. Bee, the Texian envoy to Mexico. This may be deemed an official account of the colonel's reception. It was before stated that he had 1 ft Vera Cruz for Havana. Havana, June 9, 1839.

To the editors of the Mercury. Sir: I arrived here on the 6th in the French steam frigate Phœton, M. Goubin, commander. We were eight days from Vera Cruz—having had head winds the whole voyage. An arrival that city on Wednesday brought papers from New Orleans yesterday brought papers from the 1st June. They contain remarks founded on the first ebullition of feeling evinced at Vera Cruz on hearing that an agent from Texas was on board a United States vessel of war, in their waters. But it is due the citizens of Vera Cruz, and more especially his excellency general Victoria, commandant of that department, I should correct any improper impressions upon this point—as after being a few days on board the beautiful fifty-two gun ship La Gloire, Monsieur Le Comte Laine, commander, to whose hospitality and kindness I am everlastingly indebted.

ed—I landed under the sanction of gen. Victoria, and remained in his city ten days, in the perfect enjoyment of my liberty; and receiving at his hands the most distinguished courtesy. It is true, that after several communications with the authorities at Mexico, it was decided that I could not be received as the representative of Texas. But there was no indignity offered “the rebel,” and unlike King David’s ambassadors to Nahum, I returned on board the French fleet, without my head being shaved.

It was perhaps expecting too much of Mexico to suppose she would receive me—Inheriting as they do, all the pride of the Spaniards—Mexico herself having but recently been acknowledged by Spain, after years of separation—but Texas is a lowland “bantling,” and I thought the sooner the mother’s eye was met the better—if she was to be rejected with frowns, she would deplore it—it received with smiles be gratified. The result is, (or has been) that I have not been received as the bearer of the Olive branch from Texas. But the ice is broken—we have done our part, and I flatter myself the day is not distant when a definite treaty boundary will be established between Mexico and Texas, consecrated as it must be by a lasting peace. I am, sirs, your most obt servt BARNARD L. BEE.

FROM TEXAS—TOTAL WRECK OF THE STEAM SHIP CUBA. The steam packet Colombia arrived at New Orleans on the 18th inst. bringing accounts from Texas to the 16th. There were still accounts of disturbances with predatory bands of Indians and Mexicans. The steamer Cuba, which was a treaty to the new country, whose trade she was engaged in. Her estimated value was 90,000 dollars, and she was insured for $60,000. We subjoin the items of interest.

Predatory bands of Mexicans and Indians have committed many murders in the neighborhood of San Antonio. The excitement was great in that section. Four or five companies of Texian troops were concentrating on the Colorado, in the neighborhood of Bastrop and Austin, there to wait for marching orders.

They experienced a severe gale at Houston on the 3d. A large frame building recently erected on Main street was blown down. The workmen were sleeping in it at the time, who were buried in the ruins.” Two were slightly injured—the other was dangerously hurt, but is fast recovering.

A rencontre took place on the 25th ultimo, between Wm. H. Butler and E. S. Kirby, in which the latter was killed with a Bowie knife. Butler surrendered himself to the civil authorities.

The Redlander says:—“An express has arrived in this place, from major B. C. Waters, containing the unpleasant intelligence, that the Cherokee Indians have embodied near the Sabine, in Nacogdoches county, and are determined to make war upon any troops who may attempt, in accordance with the orders of the secretary of war, to build a fort at that place. A pressing call is made upon our citizens, by major Waters, for immediate aid to carry into effect this order, in which attempt, a fight with these Indians is inevitable. We trust that the patriotic Redlanders will respond to this call with that characteristic promptness which has ever marked their course when their country required.”

FROM MEXICO. The United States sloop of war Warren touched at the Balize, on the night of the 14th inst. for the purpose of landing freight and passengers from Tampico, for New Orleans. By this conveyance the New Orleans papers have received accounts of the capitulation of Tampico, to the government army under gen. Arista. The federalists had a strong force in the town at the time, which was well fortified, and strong hopes were entertained that the garrison would stand a siege. A private letter states that the soldiers were very much dissatisfied with the articles of capitulation. After the treaty had been signed by the officers, they remained under arms twenty-four hours, refusing to accede to the convention—threatening death to the centralists if they dared to enter the city, and menacing vengeance upon the officers and citizens, for having betrayed them into the hands of the enemy. For awhile fears were felt lest the city would be given up to pillage by the exasperated soldiery. But by some means or other, they were at length pacified, and the capitulation of the place was quietly conducted. No violence was offered by general Arista or the central troops to the inhabitants—private property was respected, and the utmost good order and tranquillity prevailed. The terms of the treaty were certainly very advantageous to the federalists. All political offences were to be pardoned, and the officers and soldiers who chose, were permitted to retain their station and rank in the army. Even the arch-rebel, general

Urrea, was included in the amnesty, provided he determined to accept of the terms. At the time of the occurrence, he was absent from Tampico.

In consequence of the amicable arrangements between the belligerent parties, foreigners resident at Tampico experienced no molestation. Every thing remained quiet, and business and commerce will now be resumed, and flow on in their accustomed channel. Many surmises and rumors were afloat with respect to the means by which the government obtained this bloodless victory. Some of the zealous federalists intimate that the federalist officers suffered themselves to be tampered with in the absence of Urrea. However this may be, it is quite certain that the capitulation of Tampico has put an end for the present to the cause of federalism.

The accounts from the interior were contradictory. It seems to be, though, the general impression, that the government had triumphed at every point. A rumor of the capture of Tuspan was current at the time the Warren sailed. The capitulation of the Tampico took place on the 6th of June. On the 9th instant, Bustamante was to make his public entry into the city. It is gratifying to learn that the lives and property of foreign residents were so well respected. High compliments are paid to capt. W. A. Spencer of the Warren, for his exertions and strong interposition in behalf of American citizens, by which they were secured from all harm either to their persons or effects.

On the 7th inst. the British packet Star arrived off Tampico bar, in a short passage from Vera Cruz, having on board a minister from Mexico for England. It was quiet in Vera Cruz when she sailed from that place.

H. B. M. ship Comus, P. P. Carey, esq. commander, and the French brig of war Eclipse, capt. James, were at anchor off Tampico; the former to sail for Vera Cruz the same day, and the latter for Havana on the 9th.

As the Warren was standing off, a British man-of-war, supposed to be the Satellite, from Vera Cruz, was going in to the anchorage.

The following are the articles of capitulation:

On the fourth of June, 1839, cols. D. Manuel Maria Iturría, and D. Mariano Fernandez, capt. Jose Maria Castanares and Licent. D. Miguel Lazo, of the active battalion of Tlaxcala, having met to consult about terminating the civil dissensions, the two former authorised by general D. Mariano Arista, and the latter by the commandant of the forces of Tampico, col. D. Ignacio Escalado; both parties being found duly competent, they discussed in the following order:

That general D. Jos Urrea, having left the garrison of Tampico, and considering any resistance on the part of said garrison to be useless, and also sincerely desirous to avoid the shedding of Mexican blood, and to put an end to the civil war, we have resolved to accord the following articles to the said fort.

1st. The garrison of Tampico shall lay down their arms within the precincts of said fort, which will be occupied, in all to-morrow, by the division of gen. D. Mariano Arista.

2d. All the individual residents of Tampico, who will comply with this capitulation, shall be guaranteed their lives—their property, employment and pursuits allowed by the supreme government, excepting those accused of other than political crimes.

3d. The prisoners who may be with the forces which operate against Tampico, under the command of general D. Mariana Arista, are not included in the clauses of this capitulation.

4th. The chiefs, officers and troops, active and permanent, which are in Tampico, may continue in the service or leave it, as they may see fit. The civilians and militia shall retire to their homes with the aforesaid assurance.

5th. The chief officers and national or civic troops which may be found in the hospitals, shall be assisted by the means of the supreme government till their re-establishment—such aid being considered necessary to enable them to return to their homes.

6th. If general Urrea will embrace this capitulation, it will be on the condition that he will not remain at any point occupied by the federal forces, and to inform as to his locality.

Ad. art. The chief officers and troops which may be without Tampico after the ratification of this document, can still embrace its favors, provided that they report themselves to the authorities of the supreme government at the place nearest them.

Jose Bernado Huerta, Manuel Maria Iturría, Jose Maria Fernandez, Jose Maria Castanares, Lic. Miguel Lazo.

I approve of this convention. IGNACIO ESCALADO.

I ratify the present convention, remarking that the additional article relates solely to the forces of the garrison of Tampico. MARIANO ARISTO.

Consulate of the U. S. of America, Tampico, June 6, 1839.

James W. Breedlove, esq. collector of the customs of New Orleans.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that the federal party capitulated to the government troops, under command of general Arista, on the 4th inst. and that the forces of Arista entered the town under the articles of capitulation on the 5th inst. at two o’clock, P. M.

All goods that are sent to the port will of course be accompanied by the necessary documents in the strictest form, and in complete conformity with the provisions of the tariff, in which case no difficulty will be experienced in their introduction.—The Mexican consul in your port, will of course give his clearances for this port in the present state of affairs.

We have had no disturbance at the time of entry of the troops, and things have gone on more quietly than we could have expected. Your obedient servant, JNO. G. McCALL.

Advices from Vera Cruz to the 3d, were received at New Orleans on the 11th instant. The accounts were received via Galveston, having been brought to that place by the brig Empresario.

Col. Bee, the Texian envoy, left Vera Cruz on the 29th ultimo. It is stated in the New Orleans Bee that notwithstanding he was not allowed to proceed to the city of Mexico, he still thinks that a reconciliation between Texas and Mexico will be speedily effected. Col. Bee was treated with distinguished courtesy by general Victoria, commandant of Vera Cruz.

Padre Mouldoon, who had accompanied col. Bee to Vera Cruz, was seized immediately upon landing and thrust into a dungeon. This act of atrocious violence was doubtless an ebullition of Mexican rage, because the Padre had been appointed bishop of Texas, as a grateful testimonial of his humane interposition in behalf of that republic during the hostilities with Mexico. “Santa Ana,” says the Galveston Gazette, “is wratched with too much jealousy to allow him to be of service to Texas, were he so disposed.”

The federal prisoners taken under Mexia, are many of them, employed in working the streets of Vera Cruz, and are said to be treated with great cruelty.

There is not, it is stated, a single vessel of the Mexican navy left.

The rumor of another invasion of Texas is not supported by any of the circumstances now existing in Mexico.

The New Orleans slips of the 13th, contain intelligence from Mexico by the schooner Emblein from Matamoras, on the 6th instant. The captain states that a party of 500 Comanche Indians had made an attack on the Mexicans residing north of the Rio Grande, killed 20 to 30, plundering them and carrying off what they chose. Also that gen. Lamas had taken the city of Durango and town of Zatlillo, and was marching on Zatacas about 200 miles distant from Zatlillo. Matamoras was in possession of the centralists with a force of 1,000 men; but there was a probability of its falling into the hands of the federalists. In some of the slips this news is said to be no news at all, inasmuch as dates several days later had already been received from the city of Mexico, and these disturbances and the success of gen. Lamas were not mentioned. It seems to be almost utterly impossible to obtain any correct information from Mexico, accounts always being tinged with the feelings of the party which brings them. The Bulletin publishes a letter from an officer in high standing in the government army, dated at Matamoras, on the 1st inst. from which the following is an extract:

“The Tampico affair will soon be closed, notwithstanding the steamboat. General Bustamante came near us, and an interview took place at San Fernando. It is said that both generals marched on Sunday last, Bustamante for Tampico, and Cavalino for Monterey. Mr. ——— arrived from the latter place in four days, and states that on his leaving Saltillo, gen. Lamas made an attack, and, according to report, had been repulsed, and his brother and son taken prisoners. We have no official account, and cannot vouch for any thing. I will forward you some papers as soon as I can make a collection.”

A melancholy occurrence took place at Matamoras on the 27th ult. Mr. Eugene D’Anfosy, the French vice consul, together with fourteen other individuals, were drowned by the upsetting of a boat in which they were crossing the Brasos river.

The consul was engaged in attending to the rescue property on board the schooner Albert which had been wrecked. He was very much respected by the merchants of Matamoras; they generally closed their places of business on the receipt of the melancholy intelligence of his death.

The following facts are given in letters relative to the recent surrender of the federalists at Tampico, an act which has crushed the hopes of the liberal party in that country. The surrender took place the 4th inst.

After the terms had been ratified by the officers, it made known to the soldiers of the city, they expressed the utmost indignation, and accused their officers of co-variance, and having sold the blood of their families to their enemies, and remained firm and resolute in their posts. The officers then left them, and in this situation they remained for twenty-four hours, in possession of their arms and munitions threatening death to the centralists and the plun- der of the city.

Much credit is given in some of the letters for the service rendered by commander Spencer, of the United States ship Warren. He was indefatigable in his exertions to prevent the useless spilling of blood, and bringing every thing to a peaceable close. It is stated in one account that many of the federal officers seeing themselves deserted, and as it were, betrayed by their officers, immediately destroyed themselves rather than witness what they deemed a total and entire prostration of their country at the feet of a tyrant.

The news of the capitulation of Tampico, without a blow, will fall like a clap of thunder upon the friends of rational liberty in other parts of the country. A stand has been taken in many sections, and with how much success, it is exceedingly difficult to ascertain. For instance, it is stated that an attack had been made by the government troops on Tuzapan, in which they were eminently successful. Another account states that they were repulsed and driven off with much loss. The capture and prompt execution of Mexico, seems to be the terror of the officers in command of the federal troops. When Tampico surrendered, there were between 800 and 1,000 troops in the garrison, while the besieging army did not exceed five hundred men.

THREATENED BLOCKADE OF MEXICO. The New Orleans Bulletin states, on the authority of a gentleman recently from Houston, that in a few weeks the Texian government will take measures to establish a blockade along the whole Mexican coast. The editor adds:

Mexico is now without a single vessel of war—therefore can oppose no resistance to the Texian blockade, which will consist of three sloops of war, and an armed steamer. With this force an effectual blockade can be maintained before three ports—San Antonio, Vera Cruz, Matamoras and Tampico, which are the great points of commerce to that country. The general impression is, that a coercion of this kind will in all probability bring the Mexicans to their senses, and to see the expediency, if not the absolute necessity, of acknowledging the independence of the young republic. The argument used by France was followed by conviction. The Mexicans would do well to try the experiment—their agents is sufficiently powerful, and the present opportunity for humbling their brazen-headed enemies could not be let slip. It would be the best return that could be made to their empty boast, of attempting another invasion of Texas.

MARYLAND POLITICS. The honorable James A. Freese was unanimously nominated by the whig convention, which assembled at Centerville on the 11th inst. as a candidate for re-election for the 22d Congress. In addition to him, John Leeds Kerr, was unanimously nominated as a representative from the same district to the national whig convention, to be held at Harrisburg in December next, to nominate candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency of the United States.

The convention of the friends of the administration, which assembled at Harford, on Saturday last, nominated the hon. John T. H. Worthington for re-election, the vote being 61 for Mr. Worthington and 3 for James W. Williams.

MR. FORSYTH. The Portland (Maine) Argus on June 15th has the following article in reference to the hon. John Forsyth, now on a visit of official duty to that section of the country:

We learn that this gentleman has declined an invitation extended to him yesterday by a number of his friends of the administration in this city, who wished to manifest their respect for his high talents, glowing patriotism, and distinguished services, by calling him during his stay among us, at a public dinner. While he assured the committee, that he did not feel highly to appreciate the honor conferred upon him by the request, he should be prevented, he said, from complying with it, as well by the short term to which he was obliged to confine his visit in Portland, as by the general course which, in common with other members of the cabinet, he had marked out for himself in relation to invitations of a similar character.

THE PRESIDENT AT HARRISBURG. The president arrived at Harrisburg, Pa. on Saturday afternoon. The committee of arrangements for the celebration of the 4th of July, at that place, received from him the following letter:

Washington, June 17th, 1839.

Gentlemen: I have had the honor to receive your invitation to unite with the democratic citizens of Dauphin and the neighboring counties, in the celebration of the approaching anniversary of American independence.

I hope to pass through Harrisburg on my way to New York, and will be happy to see my friends, and thank them in person for this renewed evidence of their respect, but regret that arrangements previously made, will put it out of my power to be with them on the 4th of July.

Be pleased to accept my acknowledgments for the kind terms in which your invitation was communicated, and believe me, respectfully, your friend and obedient servant, M. VAN BUREN.

RECEPTION OF THE PRESIDENT AT NEW YORK.—The following resolutions were introduced in the board of aldermen, last night, by alderman Talmage.

Whereas, the president of the United States intends shortly to visit his native state for the first time since his elevation to the exalted station he now occupies.

Therefore, resolved, That the common council of the city of New York hereby tender to him the hospitality of the city, and that a committee of five members from each ward be appointed to make suitable arrangements for his reception.

That the sum of $2,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated to carry the foregoing resolutions into effect.

Alderman Purdy believed that half of that sum was sufficient properly to receive the president, and as a democratic president should be received, and he moved an amendment to that effect, which was however, voted down.

The two resolutions were then passed by party votes, and the ayes and noes being ordered on the appropriation, they stood—Ayes 9; Noes 6.

The president of the board then appointed the following committee to carry these resolutions into effect.

Messrs. Talmage, Chatoberlain, Phoenix, Purdy, Woodhull. [W. York Express.]

From the Evening Post.

It having been understood that the president of the United States intended to visit his native state this summer, our general committee have been making arrangements for his reception. In answer to a communication in behalf of that committee, the following letter has been received from him:

(COPY)

Washington, June 14, 1839.

Dear sir: I have received your letter, in which, on behalf of the democratic general committee, you ask to be informed of the probable period of my arrival at New York, with a view to a public expression of regard for myself and approbation of my official conduct.

In order to travel by private conveyance, I cannot with certainty name the day on which I shall reach there, but I hope to do so by the first of July. The interchange of personal civilities with my fellow citizens in the course of my journey, will afford me the most lively gratification, and the only sentiment in regard to it that I desire to express is the hope that it may be attended with the least formality that is consistent with entire respect to the wishes of my friends.

As your letter leads me to believe that the committee design to invite me to a public dinner, and as I have been apprized that similar kindness is contemplated in other places, I trust I shall be pardoned if I express in advance of more formal offers, the obligation I shall feel myself under, to decline such courtesies.

I am not insensible of the apparent indelicacy of thus anticipating the intentions of my friends; but I feel that in so doing, I may safely throw myself upon their indulgence. I need not assure them that I can never be unmindful of any manifestation of their regard or confidence.

Do me the favor to make these sentiments known to the committee, and to accept for yourself my thanks for the obliging manner in which you have conveyed their request.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your friend and obedient servant, M. VAN BUREN.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The following letter has been written by colonel Richard M. Johnson, the vice-president, to a friend in Kentucky. Although the colonel professes deference to the will of his party, a close reading of the letter must assure every one that he will not quietly submit to be thrust aside. Why should he? Has he not discharged his duties as vice-president, quite as well, to say the least, as Mr. Van Buren has acquitted himself of his official obligations?

White Sulphur, Scott county, Kentucky June 8, 1839.

Dear sir: I have received your favor in which you have requested to know whether I had expressed a wish to decline being a candidate for the office I now fill, and if not, whether I was willing to serve a second term if elected; at the same time giving it as your opinion that it was due to myself, and particularly to my friends, that I should no longer remain silent, as some diversity of opinion existed as to my wishes and feelings in relation to the second canvass for the vice-presidency.

I have avoided the subject of your letter as much as I well could, and was in hopes that it would not have been considered necessary that I should take a different course. But letters which I have received from other friends, on the same subject as yours, have induced me to answer your favor.

I have never authorized the declaration that I was unwilling to be the democratic candidate for a second term, if my fellow citizens desired it. I have no reasons which did not exist at my first nomination, why I should refuse the same station if re-elected. I wish it, however, distinctly understood that I have always declared to all with whom I have conversed on this head, that I was not only willing, but would most cheerfully retire, if it should be ascertained that it was the wish of those who elected me, that another person should be selected to fill the place.

In my opinion, the office of vice-president is one that should not be sought, and I do not think I have any right to be consulted, or should have any cause of complaint, if another should be chosen. I had served my fellow citizens of my native state (Kentucky) for thirty years as a member of congress in one branch or the other, and I had retired from the arduous duties of public life. In this retirement I was called by the voice of the people to my present station. It was conferred as a testimony of approbation of my public services, and as a mark of their highest confidence in my fidelity and political principles—so I considered when I accepted the office.

Many distinguished individuals have been named as my successors, if it should appear that it is the wish of the political friends with whom I have always acted that any one of them should be elected as the candidate, I shall manifest as much cheerfulness in retiring from the service of the people as I have to serve them when they have requested it.

With these sentiments I shall leave this subject in the hands of the people, from whom all my honors have come. Most respectfully,

R. M. JOHNSON.

GOVERNOR TYLER, OF VIRGINIA, AND THE PRESIDENCY. The "Richmond Whig" in reply to some statements of the Richmond Enquirer, relative to Mr. Tyler's devotion to the cause of the whigs, says: We have seen a letter of his to a friend, in reply to one written to him upon the subject, from which we take the privilege of making the following extract. It is flat-footed and up-to-the-hub, and will satisfy the public of the degree of confidence to be reposed in the insinuations and statements of the Enquirer:

"You have done me no more than naked justice in contradicting the report to which you allude, and which you state to have originated with Mr. ————"

I never have declared a preference for Mr. Van Buren over Mr. Clay, but decidedly the reverse. I regard Mr. Clay with decided favor, and believe that he would, if elected to the presidency, give to the country a wise, temperate and patriotic administration. He had been, from time to time, the subject of the grossest and most defamatory assaults; but no man has gone more openly to work to vindicate his character than myself.—What may be the course of the Harrisburg convention, which is to assemble the next December, for the purpose of nominating a president and vice-president, I cannot tell; and all that a whig should do now, should be to express his preference for men, without committing himself so far as to be arrayed against others who may obtain the nomination.—And while I have a decided preference for Mr. Clay over others who have been named, I reserve to myself, as every freeman should do, the right of deciding, in full view of all the facts, after the nomination shall have been made."

MASSACHUSETTS STRENGTH OF PARTIES. We have placed on our first page an official statement of the votes given at the last election for members of congress in this state. It exhibits the real strength of parties, and is useful as a table of reference hereafter. Subjoined is a recapitulation of the votes in each district.

No. 12, (Adams')	4,100	2,822
	52,493	37,536

Whig majority, 14,957. The majority for Mr. Adams is considerably larger than the actual whig majority in that district. Deducting a thousand for the excess, it will leave the real whig majority in the state at about fourteen thousand.

It is worthy of remark, that gov. Everett's vote has been increased at every election for the last three years. In 1836, he received 42,297—in 1837, 50,965—and in 1838, 51,558.

We subjoin the following statement of the vote for governor in 1838 and 1836. We select these two years because they exhibit more nearly the state of parties, unprecedented efforts having been made by the administration to carry the commonwealth at those periods, while in 1837 they were so disheartened that they made little or no exertion. Their vote in 1837 was about 3,000 less than in 1836.

All the comfort that the administration can derive from an examination of these figures, they are quite welcome to. They will learn from them that they did not come so near to revolutionising the state last year as they did two years and a half ago, by more than thirty-six hundred votes. They make headway like the Irishman, who took one step forward and two back. [Misc.]

TRANSFER OF THE POST OFFICE FROM THE OLD TO THE NEW INCUMBENT. This morning, Mr. Skinner sent his assistant, Mr. Maddox, to notify Mr. Vansant, his successor, that he was waiting ready to transfer the office to his hands.

On his entrance, Mr. Skinner pronounced to the clerks and letter carriers, some of whom have been his associates in service for many years, the following uletictory; and taking leave of each individual retired from the office, carrying with him the benedictions of all who remained in it.

"Gentlemen: You already know that it has pleased the president to supersede me in this office, and I enter this morning, only to introduce you to my successor, Mr. Vansant.

His finding you here is the best assurance I can give of my esteem for you all, of my implicit confidence in your qualifications, and, which is above all, in your integrity.

With all my heart I commend you to him as men of diligence and honor. I here bear solemn witness you have ever been courteous, obliging and faithful to the public and to the department, and that, according to my opinion is all that it would have been becoming or proper in me to have required. As long as it may be your destiny to remain in this service, I doubt not my friends, that you will so conduct yourselves as to retain the good will you enjoy with the Baltimore community, and to deserve the confidence and regard of my successor as you have ever done mine. There are few employments in life where the duties are more arduous or more responsible than yours. Sincerely do I wish that your reward were more ample and less precarious, to the end that you may not at last leave the public service, poorer than when you came into it—as too many do,—some in one way, some in another, some by expulsion.

To you Mr. Vansant, I transfer with the office my best wishes for its successful administration—any other sentiment would be unbecoming in itself, and especially ungrateful in me—re-remembering as I am bound ever to do, the indulgence and partiality of those who have the deepest interest in its correct management. Gentlemen, I bid you fare and all an affectionate farewell." [Ball. Chron.]

CHARLESTON. We regret to see, by an official communication from the mayor of Charleston, under date of 18th instant, that several cases of yellow fever have occurred among the crews of eastern vessels lying in that harbor. The following extracts from the document mentioned embrace a statement of the particulars:

By the invitation of Dr. Strobel, physician of the hospital, I attended at that institution this morning, for the purpose of ascertaining the circumstances connected with the said cases, and had the pleasure of finding Drs. Howard and Mackey also in attendance for the same object. Dr. Strobel stated that the cases alluded to had occurred on board the ships Leonore and Clatham, from Boston, and Elizabeth Bruce, from New York, all of which vessels are now lying in the stream. The Leonore arrived on the 6th instant, after a passage of ten days from Boston, and has consequently been in this port eleven days. Three men were brought from her to the hospital, viz: George Thorn, George R. Rider and L. Schmitz, all of whom were taken ill on Sunday morning last, the 16th instant. Rider and Thorn were admitted into the hospital at 11 o'clock on that day. Rider was taken with black vomit in an hour after his admission, and died in about twenty-four hours afterwards. L. Schmitz was received into the hospital this morning. E. Agary was brought in from the ship Clatham, on the 17th instant, but this patient having been constantly delirious, and incapable of answering interrogatories, the physician was unable to ascertain the facts relating to his case, or to give any definite information concerning him. F. Dorff, from the ship Elizabeth Bruce, was received into the hospital this morning. That vessel left New York on the 20th May last, and has been in our harbor about eleven days. Having received the foregoing information from Dr. Strobel, I requested the medical gentlemen present to examine all the cases, and to furnish me with their opinions concerning them.

They proceeded, accordingly, to an examination of them, and, after having investigated the condition of each and every of the patients, came to the following conclusions concerning them. The case of Rider was regarded as exhibiting the most decisive indications of yellow fever. They were also of opinion that the case of Agary is strongly and unequivocally marked by all the symptoms of the same disease. With respect to the other cases, they considered them as less violent in their character, but still partaking the nature and exhibiting the livery of the same malady.

It appears that the vessels referred to were subsequently examined by the health officer, and found to be in so clearly a condition that they were not quarantined. It also appears that when they first arrived at Charleston, the several crews were all in good health.

NEW ORLEANS. One of the New Orleans papers announces that the yellow fever has made its appearance in that city—five cases having occurred—but the correctness of the statement is questioned by some of the other journals. The weather had been very warm during the week ending on the 17th, and the transient population was leaving in crowds, all the departing steamboats being filled with passengers.

The Advertiser of the 18th says: There are at present in the harbor fifty-six ships, ten barques, eighteen brigs and thirty-seven schooners, making a total of one hundred and twenty-one; at this time last year the number amounted to one hundred and fifty-four—making a difference of thirty-one vessels. Freight-tugs, are said to be remarkably dull; both European and coastwise. So that should many of them leave in ballast, it would cause no little surprise.

GREAT FIRE IN NEW ORLEANS. The express mail of yesterday morning brings slips from New Orleans of the 12th instant. A great fire occurred in that city on the evening of the 11th instant. Th. Bee says that about four o'clock the fire broke out in a "cotton pickery," near the corner of St. Peter and Perdido streets, which communicated rapidly to the adjacent buildings, reduced the whole square embraced between St. Peter, Perdido, Gravier and St. Paul streets to ashes. The engine companies arrived upon the ground in good season, and notwithstanding the excessive heat, the members distinguished themselves by their noble efforts to suppress the flames. Some of them labored until they were so exhausted by the rays of the sun and the blazing buildings, that they had to be taken from the ground. Owing to the fact, that there are no fire plugs in that part of the city, the utmost effort of the firemen could not arrest its progress until the whole square was completely wrapt in flames.—The water had to be let into the gutters from plugs at a distance from the scene of devastation, and thence conveyed to some of the engines. About twenty-five buildings were consumed, mostly one-story frame houses, and many families thrown upon the kind offices of friends and neighbors, and the charity of the citizens. Two children are said to be burnt to death.

MAINE. There has been quite a serious mob in Camden, Maine,—so serious that the Saco (Me. Democrat, printed in the town where governor Fairfield resides), informs us that the governor had a request from citizens of Thomaston and Camden to call out the militia to quell an insurrection at Camden, and to aid in crying into effect the militia law. It seems that for several years past companies there have been organized in some way or other, to avoid military duty altogether. Under the law of 1837, an officer from another company was detailed to call them out and drill them. Not appearing according to order, suits were commenced on the 14th of the forty days, an officer by the name of Hewitt, sent to serve them. A large number of persons, however, assembled at Camden—got out a swivel, a six pounder, and armed, with small arms, not only resisted the officer in the execution of his duties, but took his wrists from him tore them up, and bestowed much personal abuse and injury upon him pelting him with stones, eggs &c. They threaten to resist every attempt by whomsoever made, to sustain the execution of the militia law—and say that they have a large number combined in Camden and the adjoining towns to this purpose.

The editor of the Democrat further says: "We understand that the adjutant general has been sent to Camden to communicate with the leaders of the mob, and by proper representations of their fall and the utter impossibility of success in their attempt to set the laws at defiance, to induce them quietly to submit. If this succeeds, as we trust it will, all will be well. If they still determine to obstruct the officer in the execution of his duties the proper authorities will not hesitate to order on a sufficient force to maintain the supremacy of the law."

PENNSYLVANIA. The extra session of the Pennsylvania legislature was brought to a close on Tuesday evening, when it adjourned after a session of fifty days. The improvement bill or rather an engraving of that kind, upon the repair bill which had passed some days since, was passed on the last day of the session. It appropriates in all about four millions of dollars to the several lines of improvement already commenced, of which, about $400,000 is for repairs. The election bill also passed—it being pushed through near the close of the session. The amendment of the senate providing for the election of canal commissioners by the people, instead of being appointed by the governor failed in the house. Though decidedly a democratic measure, it was altogether unacceptable to the administration majority of the "popular branch" of the legislature, and was lost. Just before the adjournment Mr. Pearson's resolution, censuring the governor, "for his course relative to the loan to pay the Gettysburg rail road contractors," came up in the senate, and was adopted by a vote of 15 to 6. When the vote was taken, Mr. Myers, (of Delaware) gave notice that he would have the resolution expunged at the next session. [Nas. Chron.]

ONORS DECLINED. Mr. Stevens declined the honor of an escort to Harrisburg, which was published tendered him by the citizens of Adams county, concluding, we suppose, that there was no need of getting up poor Miller, when an escort for hot spur of loco locism, Mr. Parsons. In his letter, Mr. S. talks in the following eloquent and able strain:

But I beg leave respectfully to suggest that this is not a fit time to indulge in any parade, which is to be construed into a triumphal procession.— Although we have repelled the assaults of tyrants, yet we can have no assurance that the country is safe until the same thing shall be accomplished throughout the state. Let us therefore view impartial redemption with melancholy joy, rather than with lively exultation. Victories, even over evil in civil wars, should be treated with solemn sayings, rather than with songs of mirth."

		rest is payable in Baltimore, by the commissioners, John S. Gittings, president of the Bank, in specie or its equivalent, as directed by resolution, passed at December session, 1837. The legislature has, in the several acts authorizing the sinking funds for their redemption, appropriated the faith and resources of the state. The sinking fund was on 1st January, 1839—$5,495,334 39; invested principal in the stock debt of
In 6 per cents,	$132,000 00
5 "	378,172 33
3 "	100,000 00
Special deposit,	32,407 81
Bank stock,	20,800 00
	$963,380 11

Its increase during 1833, from accumulation of interest, was $53,073 32.
There are productive funds belonging to the treasury, to the amount of $3,142,813 30.
And unproductive funds, 5,731,410 04
$8,874,223 36

The unproductive funds are chiefly stocks in the internal improvement companies in the state, which as yet pay no dividends.

The several rail road and canal companies are required to pay the interest on the loans made for their use, into the treasury, ten days before the quarterly payments to fund holders.

The loans authorised by the legislature, and to be negotiated are—

Act 1838, ch. 336—	$7,756,667 00	5 per cent sterling bonds, int. semi-annually, redeem. after fifty years. Principal and int. payable in London.
Act 1833, ch. 326—	$1,375,000 00	do.
Act 1833, ch. 416—	$1,000,000 00	5 per cent state bonds; int. semi-annually, redeem. in 25 yrs. Principal & int. pay. in London.
Act 1833, ch. 395—	$750,000 00	5 per cents; interest quarterly, redeemable after 1850.
	$10,911,667 00

These loans are all for the purposes of internal improvements, and the interest is to be paid by the several companies, for whose benefit the loans are made. The present sinking fund alone is sufficient to pay the whole debt in the time limited for its payment.

MARYLAND COPPER. The Frederick Herald of the 22d instant, states that a rich and very valuable copper mine has recently been opened on the land of col. J. M. Coale, near Liberty Town in that county. The mining operations which are carried on by himself and brother, were commenced in April last, and already several tons of ore of the finest and purest quality are said to have been obtained. At the depth of twenty-two feet from the surface they have struck three several veins of copper, one of which is said to be three feet broad, and is inexhaustible. On the estate of col. Coale, about a quarter of a mile from the present operations, the indications of copper are also manifest and unequivocal, and there is every reason to believe that the vein now opened extends the whole distance.

ILLINOIS. The corner stone of a large Catholic chapel has recently been laid in Juliet, Will county. The ceremonies prescribed by the Catholic ritual on such occasions, were conducted by the rev. Mr. Plunket, in the presence of a large number of spectators, both Protestant and Catholic. The building is to be of stone.

Another Catholic church is in progress, at Prairie du Rocher, a small village in Randolph county, about fourteen miles northwest of Kaskaskia. The inhabitants of this hamlet are principally of French origin, few in number, and generally poor—yet they have sufficient enterprise to contribute the sum of five thousand dollars to build a new church in place of the log building which they now occupy.

The hon. R. M. Young, of Illinois, and family arrived in Washington on Wednesday last, and took lodgings at Gadby's. We understand that he was detained until Saturday evening by business, and by Philadelphia and New York, for the purpose of co-operating with gov. Reynolds in negotiating the residue of the four million loan, authorised by the general assembly of the state for the completion of the Illinois and Michigan canal. [Globe.]

MICHIGAN. The New York Evening Post says: "Accompanying received this morning from Detroit represent that the commissioners, appointed by the state of Michigan to effect an arrangement with the State Bank of Michigan to secure the large amount of public funds on deposit with that institution at the time of its failure, have entirely failed in their efforts to secure a satisfactory settlement. The governor of Michigan has, consequently, instructed the attorney general of the state to take the necessary steps to procure an injunction. It is said that to be rendered the institution insolvent for a very large amount, and that the bill holders will be the principal sufferers. The amount due the state is between 4 and 500,000 dollars. We here have another practical illustration of the working of the union of bank and state, in which it is proved that the connection is alike prejudicial to the institution the state."

created it and took it into partnership, and the continuity at large."

IOWA.—One of our worthy old citizens, who has just returned from a tour to this territory, informs us that in all his travels, at different periods, he never saw such a promise of an abundant harvest. He spoke to us particularly of one field of wheat, which he saw on the prairies, consisting of six hundred and forty acres, which was a perfect level, so that it could be taken in one view, and was handsomely fenced; the stalks were then two feet and a half high, and the growth most luxuriant. We would go a day's ride to see such a field of wheat as that.

DOINGS IN MISSISSIPPI. On the 5th inst. the deputy sheriff of Warren county, Miss. according to the Vicksburg Whig, proceeded to Big Black, to execute an execution on the property of Wm. Folkes. Folkes had threatened to kill the sheriff, or any officer who entered his premises to drain his property, and some time previously drove off a constable. The deputy sheriff, Mr. Stafford, armed with a double barreled shotgun and two pistols, resolved to execute the law, repaired, with two unarmed assistants, to the gin house, where Folkes cotton was stored. Folkes heard of his arrival, and sent him word that he intended to kill him as soon as he loaded his gun and got his dinner; and in accordance with his threat, he was soon seen marching to the gin house with the gun on his shoulder. Stafford saw him coming, and to avoid exposure, his assistants to danger he marched out into the field, and ordered Folkes, at a distance of forty yards, not to advance further. Folkes immediately levelled his gun the same instant lodged several buck shot in the arm and side of the assailant. Folkes immediately commenced applying another cap, in order to take another, but when he saw Stafford take aim with the other barrel, he commenced a retreat. Stafford pursued and caught him, and disarmed him of his gun, as well as two pistols, and a knife, which he had in his bosom, and after conquering the outlaw, he returned to town with property to satisfy the execution.

After conquering Folkes, and convincing him that the law in Warren county "must have its course," Mr. Stafford sat down with his antagonist, and while his aids were loading the wagons and gathering up the goods and chattels, the two had a long and friendly chat on politics and matters and things in general.

It is believed by many that Mr. Folkes is endangered on some subjects. While he keeps his creditors out of their money, he has kept his cotton for two years, declaring that he will never sell it till he gets twenty cents a pound for it. He has some very strange and peculiar notions on the prices of cotton, and declares that the merchants and sheriffs are his great arch enemies.

THE WESTERN RESERVE. Joshua Stow, esq. of Connecticut, arrived in this city this morning, on one of our members of the Connecticut land company, Connecticut. This company purchased what now composes the counties of Ashtabula, Trumbull, Geauga, Portage, Cuyahoga, Medina, and Lorain, (estimated at 3,000,000 acres), of the state of Connecticut, in 1795. Early in May 1796, a surveying party set out from Connecticut, to survey the Reserve. Of this party judge Stow was one. They arrived at Connecticut on the 4th day of July 1796, and there made the first celebration of the day that was held in this part of Ohio.

In August 1796, they reached this place, which was then by them, named Cleveland, in compliment to Moses Cleveland, esq. one of the party. Judge Stow says that he shot at a panther, and he killed numbers of wild turkeys in the woods where our fine streets are now built. He returned to Connecticut in the fall, having been absent more than five months, and not having seen a bed the greater part of the time.

Few men live to note greater changes in the appearance of a country than those which judge Stow has witnessed within forty three years; not only in the part of Ohio which he explored when a wilderness, but in the entire region through which he journeyed on his way hither, from Albany westward. Though in his 75th year, judge Stow is hale, vigorous and cheerful as most men at five and fifty, and dwells with delight on the changes which he has seen in the country. He has made a rapid journey from Connecticut, and visits Cuyahoga Falls on business, where he purposes to remain.

WESTERN PRODUCE. From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser. We have been favored by Mr. Faranham, canal collector, with the following comparative statement of the amount of flour and wheat cleared at his office, from the opening of canal navigation to the 14th of June 1838 and 1839.

It is gratifying to see that Michigan, which for so many years has been a consumer, is becoming a producer. The amount of her surplus products next year, we learn from the best authority, will be very great. There is unquestionably, in Michigan, more land adapted to the cultivation of wheat, than in any other state in the union. Indiana, too, is beginning to send her agricultural wealth this way. The surplus products of the northern portion of that rich state, will, in a short time, be immense: Amount of flour and wheat cleared from 12th April to 14th June, 1838.

No. bbls. flour.	No. bushels wheat.
Ohio, 88,695	224,499
Michigan, None	None
Indiana, None	None

Amount of flour and wheat cleared from 20th April to 14th June, 1839.

Ohio, 84,171	164,096
Michigan, 32,543	53,694
Indiana, 2,068	58,909

The following recapitulation presents at a glance the balance in favor of 1839.

1839.	Flour.	Wheat.
Ohio,	87,481	164,096

THE MORMONS have excited a good deal of interest in Cincinnati, where one of the sect has been giving a history of that people, and of the persecutions to which they have been recently exposed in Missouri. It is stated in the report given in the Cincinnati News that they were ruthlessly driven from their homes, their property destroyed, the women and children forced into the woods, without shelter from the inclemency of the weather of January, where they roained about till their feet became so sore that their enemies tracked them by their foot-prints of blood. The Mormons stated that there were instances where men were murdered in cold blood, and boys who had taken shelter from the fury of the mob, were dragged from their hiding places, and after being cruelly maltreated deliberately shot. In one case an old man, a soldier of the revolution, was pursued by a mob, but finding he could not escape, turned and supplicated their mercy. The reply he received was a shot from a rifle, which wounded him mortally; he still besought them to spare him, when one of the party picked up a scythe, or sickle, and literally hacked him to pieces as he lay on the ground.

Thomas Morris, formerly U. S. senator addressed the meeting.

"He said he had been in the vicinity of these transactions, and had taken some pains to acquaint himself with the facts; and from all he could learn, the Mormons were an industrious and harmless people, that no specific charges had been brought against them by the executive of Missouri, but that their persecution was for no other purpose than that their religion gave offence to a mob—nor causes which may at any time induce the same persecution of any religious sect in our land. He said he believed the statements made to be true, and that they were corroborated by those who resided in the vicinity of their occurrence."

The Evening Gazette contains the following: "It seems that there are in Illinois scattered bands of Mormons, some of which come in contact with their neighbors and occasion much difficulty. We have heard from the neighborhood of Shelby county, that about a week since a difference having arisen between the Mormons and old residents, the former applied to the governor for aid. The governor ordered out several companies who went to the scene of difficulty, but discovering that they were likely to be over-matched, returned without effecting their object."

APPRENTICES IN THE NAVY. We happened to be near one of the wharves a day or two since, when a boat was seen in the stream and attracted much attention. The crew looked like sailors in miniature, as in truth they proved to be, for they were the young apprentices from the Java, and so neat and tidy did they seem, that they might readily have been taken for some youngsters who had stolen from school, and equipped themselves in the apparel of the sailor.

It is plain to see that this system of apprenticeship is about to effect a great change in the material of the man-of-war—a change that will be hailed as one of the most important revolutions of modern times. If there was ever a class of men deemed incapable of amendment, they were those, who, without pride of profession, and as a last resort, shipped on board a man-of-war. Such men seemed unassailable by the ordinary means of moral attack; they were given over in despair. But there is a means now operating which will accomplish the work. The regular education of young men, from their earliest infancy to manhood, in all the details of seamanship, in the nurture of sound morals, and under the guidance of intelligent and accomplished officers, will bring about the change. These youths will be well skilled in their profession—a qualification that will claim for them the respect of the oldest or most worthless sailor.—They will have become acquainted with the officers, share their confidence, and like them will feel a professional pride as well as a sense of self-respect that will lift them above vicious associations. Known to the commanders, they will be selected as petty officers, and be deemed worthy of confidence and respect. Each will form a nucleus among those who have not enjoyed the same advantages, and while the tone of the morals of the ship will be improved, its discipline will be also promoted.

We understand that in order to attain a result so important to the discipline of the navy, and so auspicious to its moral and intellectual improvement, the secretary of the navy has determined to remodel the receiving ships, and convert them into schools of practice for young landmen and boys. The system which has heretofore prevailed in these ships had some considerations to recommend it, but it has been felt very sensibly that it crushed the spirit of the sailor and made the service unpopular. It sunk every sentiment of chivalry in the bosom of the young mariner, who, with all the pride of profession about him, was handed over to the dock yard for daily labor, at reduced remuneration. It was a commingling of land and sea service in the case of those who looked to the ocean as their proper element, and the ship as their native home.

Under the new system, which will regard the receiving ship in its proper light as a school of discipline for young landmen and boys, the best results will assuredly flow. Much of the practical knowledge of seamanship may be learned on board. To handle the guns, to manage the yards, to attain, if we may so speak, the geography and vocabulary of a man-of-war, may be done ashore. A service of six or eight months will enable an active lad to perform the duties of a sailor well and skilfully, especially if an occasional coaching trip, by way of experiment were added. Such a policy will insure a constant supply of good seamen to our ships of war, and if the present secretary of the navy succeed in establishing the system on a firm and lasting foundation, he will have done more for the real interests of the navy than he could have done by any other act whatever, and will have secured a reputation for himself as lasting as the benefits conferred upon this favorite arm of the public defence.

We lately visited the receiving ship Java, under the command of capt. Charles W. Skinner, and had an opportunity of observing the apprentices. There were about forty or fifty, well and neatly attired in the garb of a sailor, good looking, and ranging from twelve to eighteen years of age. We saw the school room appropriated to their use, and the card-rooms which they used in their exercises. They show great aptitude in acquiring knowledge, and are already catching that esprit du corps so essential to effective organization. If the boys on this station do not turn out worthy and skilful seamen, it will not be the fault of capt. Skinner and the intelligent officers of the Java. [Norfolk Beacon.

PRIVATE EXPLORING EXPEDITION. Silas E. Burrows, esq. one of our most active merchants, who lately went, with a small squadron, fitted out at his own expense, from Rio, to visit the Aurora group of islands, which had been arbitrarily expunged from the charts, and which he has rediscovered and restored to light, bids fair to rival the navigators sent out by government expeditions to the south pole. The ice accumulates lower down in these latitudes than in the north, and D'Urquville, the French commander, was disheartened by the quantities of it amalgamated into a continent of islands, almost continuous; hence the entire failure of his squadron, the fitting out of which caused so much interest and so many hopes among the learned of Paris. Mr. Burrows always had a passion for the seas, and when only sixteen, went out on a sort of spreed, or sailing frolic, with two other "Stonington boys," in a vessel of sixty tons, to the remote and dangerous regions which he has now again visited chiefly for pleasure, and in part to extend the resources of our commerce in that quarter. Mr. B. is a good specimen of Yankee daring and enterprise; the indomitable energies of which nothing can depress. He must be admiral Burrows hereafter. [N. Y. Star.

STEAMBOAT COLLISION AND LOSS OF LIVES. A slip from the New Orleans Courier, under date of 21st instant, states that the steamboats Danub and Macfarland came into collision on the 17th about thirty miles above the tow of Helena. The shock was so great, as to cause the Macfarland to sink in four or five minutes. The cabin parted from the rest of the hull. All her passengers as said to have been saved, with the exception of sick man and a boy. The cargo is supposed to have sunk with the part of the hull below the cabin floor.

The Cincinnati Republican of the 25th instant gives some additional particulars of the disaster. The boats came in contact about one o'clock on the morning of the 16th instant, in a part of the river called Walnut Bend. The Macfarland was struck by the Danube on the larboard bow, aft of the boilers. The cabin was separated from the hull by the concussion. At the time of the accident there were one hundred and ten passengers on board the Macfarland, among whom were a number of ladies and children. They were all saved with the exception of six, according to the report of the clerk.

The following named individuals were missing. James Brombaugh, of Wellsburg, (Ohio), cabin boy.

John Thomas, of Pennsylvania, sick.

Richard Mills, (Ky.), his attendant.

John Keely, Ohio, (printer).

There was also an individual belonging to Helena, Ark. name unknown, and a German.

The freight, amounting to about 100 tons, was total loss, but by the separation of the cabin from the hull most of the passengers' baggage was saved. The preservation of so many lives may also principally attributed to this fact. Timely aid rendered by the boats of the Danube, and much credit is said to be due the captain and clerk of the Macfarland for their great exertions. Capt. G. Vot, of the steamboat Bonaparte, is entitled to commendation for timely assistance, and humane & generous treatment.

The Macfarland was an excellent boat, recently built at Cincinnati, and was wholly owned by Messrs. Strader and Gorman. The boat was valued at $22,000, and insured for $10,000.

The Cincinnati Gazette states the following feeling incident:—

Mills, shortly after the boats came into collision was secure from harm, and could have saved himself but sincere attachment to the sick man, Thomas induced him to risk his life for his preservation. Notwithstanding the protestations of his fellow passengers at his rashness and the assurance that a life of inevitable death would result to both, he went to the rescue of the invalid, clasped him in his arms, reached the upper deck safely, and was about springing to the boat, when the wreck gave a lurch and went down, throwing both into the river, engulfing them in the vortex. They perished together, exhibiting in humble life of a true and sincere friendship, a nobleness and generosity of nature that can be ever equalled.

A WELL DESERVED REBUKE. The following an excellent bit at the custom now so prevalent complementing every captain who has the capacity to conduct his ship across the Atlantic.

Important correspondence. Connecticut Water street. "We the undersigned, passengers of the sloop Polly, on her last passage from Sawport to present you with a lithographed portrait of capt. Cook, as a token of our regard for your skill and coolness, manifested during your stay on shore on Thursday evening, while passing thro' Hurl Gate. To your seamanship displayed on occasion, the preservation of a valuable cargo, and much together, with the lives of your passengers and myself, may justly be attributed. (Signed) "SOCRATES SEARS, & SEVEN OTHERS."

(REPLY.)

"Sloop Polly, Port Shepley. I return you my thanks for the portrait of capt. Cook. Except Noah, capt. Cook was, undoubtedly, the boldest navigator the world ever saw. B.—The Polly sails on Saturday; if you have freight, send it down as soon as possible. (Signed), "JONATHAN BROWN."

MR. ADAMS ON PHRENOLOGY. The following characteristic letter from Mr. Adams, is published in the Alexandria Gazette:

Washington, April 5, 1835.

Dear sir: I have read with great satisfaction your two lectures upon the science of phrenology, which I have never been able to prevail upon myself to think of as a serious speculation. I have classed it with alchemy, with judicial astrology, with angury—and, as Cicero says he wonders how two Roman angers could have looked each other in the face without laughing, have felt something of the same surprise that two learned phrenologists can meet without the like temptation.

But, as it has been said by bishop Berkeley's antimaterial system, that he has demonstrated, beyond all possibility of refutation, what no man in his senses can believe, so without your assistance, I should never have been able to encounter the system of thirty-three or thirty-five faculties of the immortal soul, all clustered on the blind side of the head. I thank you for furnishing me with argument to meet the doctors who pack up the five senses in thirty-five parcels of the brain. I am glad that your lectures have been so successful, and hope that they will be yet more so, in recalling the sober sense of the material philosophers of our age to the dignity of an imperishable mind. I remain, dear sir, very respectfully, your friend,

J. Q. ADAMS.

MILK AND BUTTER. It gives us pleasure to record the successful efforts of gentlemen to increase the means of comfort to us, who are cramped in cities; and certainly, the augmenting of milk and butter is one of those exertions which must minister to such comforts. We give the following as a specimen, as the good things of Dairy Maid, the property of our neighbor James Gowen, of Mount Airey, Germantown.

Dairy Maid's yield of milk for one week from 12th June to the 19th:

	Morning.	Noon.	Evening.	Total.
Wednesday,	12 quarts	6 quarts	7½ quarts	25½
Thursday,	12 "	7 "	7½ "	26½
Friday,	12½ "	7½ "	7½ "	27½
Saturday,	13 "	7½ "	8 "	29½
Sunday,	13 "	7½ "	8½ "	29
Monday,	13 "	8 "	8 "	28½
Tuesday,	14 "	8½ "	9 "	31½

Being an average of more than 28 quarts per day. Butter not yet ascertained. The coming week's milk, which is expected to be greater, from improved feed, will be reported. The feed of the past week was pasture, with a basket of grass morning and evening, cut from head land of a grain field, except on the evenings of the last three days, when a handful of chmpt oats and corn, with shorts from hay now, was added.

The above yield is perhaps unprecedented by any young cow in this country, under the circumstances, being in the fourth month from calving, and the calf having been with her till within a few days of trial. The milking at noon was adopted on account of the cow having been brought from the field to her stall, daily, at that time.

Dairy Maid is a beautiful roan, of "the improved short horn Durham stock," bred by Mr. Whitaker of Yorkshire—imported last fall, and in print and reports is said to have no superior. Her pedigree, which may be found in the third volume of the "Herd Book," is inferior to no cow on record. [Woodbury (W. J.) Constitution.

SHEEP SHEARING. The great feast of sheep hearing took place on the Island of Nantucket last week. The editor of the Nantucket Inquirer thus speaks of the orgies and of his contributions thereto: "The Carnival has now commenced. The orgies of the mitten-worshippers are beginning to burst forth, and all the woolly world is in an agony and a catastrophe of better-skillerthiness. The mill-hills kip like rams, and the hummocks like young lambs, and the shearpen rageth and foatheth as it were, and liveth like a—not fleas—bah! Four-legged creatures of all practicable sorts; and one, two, three, and four wheeled vehicles of all supposable shapes, gett'ing into a furious passion. The very cows, common are in commotion. All around, the more elevements are head up and tail up—and the redominating cry is "cut-on-Dunnin," which meaneth go it, Jerry! The whole county is bewitched; the sands thereof are turning topsyturvy; and the grand design is to knock all creation into a Whoaw's nest!

Reader! didst ever besride a water-logged spar in the still dock, and spying in the oozy bed below, a wriggling eel—didst ever clap thy thumb upon the sarge's tail with hope of holding him there? Or didst ever get of detaining within thy grasp, by the aid of soft-soap, or nther saponaceous unction, the like extremity of a swine, or an alligator? Or hast ever undertaken, in any similar fashion, to catch a bumblebee, or a devils-darwingueedle? If nay thou answerest, then dost thou know nought of the impossibilities of philosophy! Thine experimental acquaintance with the perplexities of existence, are as nothing and less than nothing, and thy wisdom not worth a brass baubee; for thou art but an abecedarian in the mysteries of boteration! But if thou canst comprehend these aforesaid difficulties, then wilt thou appreciate that tribulation which at this present besetteth us, the publishers and printers thereof, viz: the revolt of all hands against laboring among types and ink during the feast of the maton-heads, which they profanely call the patriarchal jubilee. Consequence is, no paper next Saturday!

NEW MECHANICAL POWER. A successful experiment has been recently made in this city, which appears to us decidedly to settle the question in favor of the application of electro magnetism, as a motive power to machinery. We have seen in operation at No. 53 Gold street, a machine moved by this principle—the construction of which is on a plan entirely novel and on a much larger scale than any other electro magnetic engine heretofore shown to the public. The motive wheel is five feet in diameter, and weighs four or five hundred pounds. This wheel is propelled by the action of four large electro magnets, which are connected with a galvanic battery, composed of alternate plates of copper and zinc. From forty to forty-five revolutions in a minute are produced by this arrangement for hours in succession, without any change in the apparatus or addition to the liquid, (sulphuric acid), which acts on the battery.

Professor Morry, the inventor of the electro magnetic telegraph, which has been approved by the French Institute, in Paris, has examined this machine since his return from Europe, and expresses the following opinion:

"I take pleasure in giving you in writing, what I have frequently observed in conversation, respecting the electro magnetic machine now in operation in Gold street, No. 53. The application of the magnetic power in this machine produces greater effects than in any arrangement I have yet seen, and I do not perceive any insurmountable obstacle to the indefinite increase of these effects."

The experiments at No. 53 Gold street, have been made under the direction of an association of gentlemen, who some time since obtained an act of incorporation for an electro magnetic company, which we understand has been organized and part of the stock taken in this city, Philadelphia and Providence. We hope citizens and strangers generally who are fond of improvements in science and the arts, will visit the establishment where this machine may be seen in daily operation, and we can assure them of ample gratification for the trouble. [New York Gazette.

A PLEASURE EXCURSION. The Pittsburgur of a late date contains the following particulars of a recent pleasure excursion to the falls of St. Anthony. "The steambot Pennsylvania, under the command of captain Stephen Stone, arrived at our port a few days since, from a trip to the falls of St. Anthony. The party, who went on board of her, amounted to about sixty, and were composed of ladies and gentlemen, a large proportion of whom were from this city. They had every thing that could contribute to their enjoyment—good music, good company, plenty of dancing, and fine spirits. On their outward voyage, they left St. Louis on the 27th of May, and arrived at the falls on the 2d inst. The falls are non-accessible by steamboat navigation; and, in order to reach them, the company had quite a novel and romantic excursion of seven miles over a beautiful prairie in wagons supplied by the politeness and hospitality of the commandant at Fort Snelling.

We understand there is a perpendicular fall in the water of about eighteen feet. But there is a smooth rapid for about two miles above the falls, making the whole descent about sixty feet.

The party visited the Indians in the neighborhood of the falls. They saw them in their wigwags and villages. The Indians, to the number of several hundred, entertained the company with a dance called the Buffalo dance, in which we imagine there was a good deal more life and animation displayed than in one of our cotillions. When the company were about to take their departure, the Indians, in full costume, commenced the war dance. Whether the ladies got frightened or not, we cannot say; but we are told they did not stay to see it out.

The party were accompanied to the falls by general Wool, of the United States army, and general Brooks, the commandant of the station a Prairie du Chien.

During their absence, no accident occurred to mar the pleasure, or endanger the safety of the company. The passengers in the Pennsylvania from this city, were much gratified with the trip, and give glowing descriptions of the scenery, the native beauty, and verdure of the vast uncutivated regions through which they passed. When such excellent opportunities are afforded through such fine strainers and such clever commanders as the Pennsylvania and captain Stone, of exploring the boundless forests of the west, we should not be surprised if the attention of our eastern friends should become directed to trips of this kind in preference to loitering in warm weather in the neighboring cities of the Atlantic coast."

CANAL ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.—The republic of New Granada has granted to a company the privilege of making a canal, rail road, or Macadamised road, over this isthmus. In 1836 this privilege was accorded to col. Charles Biddle. The condition of the privilege not having been fulfilled, it has been granted to a company associated with the house of Solomon & Co. of Gaudeloupe. The agent of this company is now in Europe, with the view of raising the means, and making the preparations for this enterprise.

The conditions of the contract are concisely these:

1. The intermarine communication must terminate at one end, in the town of Panama. It may be a canal, a rail road or Macadamised road.
 2. If a canal be made, the duties of transportation to accrue to the government shall be one per cent.
 3. The navigation of the river Chagres, in canoes, shall not be interrupted.
 4. Vessels under the New Grenadian flag shall pay ten per cent. less toll than those of other nations; that is, ten per cent. off the toll.
 5. This privilege shall continue fifty years, from the completion of the work, for which six years are allowed.
 6. The company shall begin their operations in three years from the date of the contract. Failing to comply with this condition, they shall pay $25,000 penalty to the state.
 7. At the end of the term of this privilege, (fifty years), the canal shall become the property of the republic.
- It may safely be predicted that the funds for making this canal, under the present contract, will never be raised. Contrary to the usual inducements to embark in such enterprises, that of an increasing value in the stock, in the present case, the stock must diminish in value every day, since it must become the property of the state at the end of fifty years. [Globe.

FROM HAVANA. We have accounts from Havana to the 5th instant. At that time there were 40 ships, 50 brigs and 31 schooners in the port of Havana. About four-fifths of them were Americans.

On the 28th ult. admiral Bandin arrived in the frigate Neride, together with brig Curissart, from Galveston; and from Vera Cruz, the corvette Nayade.

The admiral with the French fleet were still in port, and nothing had transpired about the day of the departure.

Shipments of sugar continue at last quotations. However, less eagerness was manifested by the purchasers, and a tendency to a decline prevailing.

The little coffee that appeared in the market was bought up at $10c. for low kinds to good seconds. Prime entirely wanting.

The scarcity of this produce is the same in the other parts of the island.

Rail road in Havana. We find in a late Paris journal, a description of the rail road lately completed in the island of Cuba, from the city of Havana to Guines, a distance of about forty-five miles. This work was completed in a period of three years from its commencement, by engineers from the U. States, a part of whom were from this city, at the charge of the treasury of the colony. The work does great honor to the count Villanueva, the incumbent general of the island, who has admirably seconded, by his activity and intelligence, the energy of the late governor gen. Tacoa, who undertook to restore order and security to the colony. It is proposed to continue the rail road from Guines from the chain of highlands, which extends from one extremity to the other of the island. It will open a communication from the south side of Cuba, to the capital. The work is already in operation upon this extension.

The captain general of the island, Mr. Espeleta, opened the rail road with appropriate solemnities, which served to quiet the apprehensions which were excited by this mode of communication, and with a rapidity to which the Spanish population were so little accustomed. In the first month which followed the completion of the rail road in December last, there were transported upon it 10,803 persons, which produced a receipt of $26,911; which, after making a deduction for passengers from intermediate stations, gives a mean price of fair from Havana to Guines, of about three and a half dollars, or near eight cents a mile, a price greatly reduced from what the passage previously cost, but very high in comparison with the maximum price demanded by companies in France and with the ordinary price in this country. The receipts for merchandise transported in the same period amounted to $10,853. This rail road is destined to change the face of sugar industry in the island of Cuba. The common roads were so bad in the direction from Havana to Guines, that the transport of a box of sugar cost more from the neighborhood of Guines to the seaport, than from the port to the extremity of the Baltic sea.

FROM THE NORTH PACIFIC OCEAN. By the Rasselas, at this port yesterday, we have a file of the Sandwich Island Gazette, to February 9. Mr. Stephen D. Mackintosh, who commenced its publication, has returned to this city in the Rasselas, with his family. He gave up the editorship at the close of the year 1838, at a meeting of the resident subscribers, who took the establishment of his hands, since which it has been conducted by a committee of the resident subscribers. At the meeting, the subscribers expressed their full approval of the course pursued by Mr. M.

The following are extracted from the paper of February 2.

By the arrival of the Neeride, from Columbia river, we have received no news of any importance. Capt. Brochie informs us that previous to his leaving the river the express had arrived from England, but unfortunately in running a rapid on the 22d Oct. one of the boats filled and upset, by which accident Messrs. Banks and Wallace, two English gentlemen, (boatmen), travelling for scientific purposes, were drowned, also, Mrs. Wallace, Mr. La Blac and two children, besides their mother and three of their children. Mr. Tod (the factor), Mr. John McLaughlin, Mr. Forest and Messrs. Blanchet and Demers, (two Catholic priests), all arrived safe at Vancouver, on the 24th November.

Died, on Sunday, January 27, Mrs. Mary Bancroft, widow of the late capt. Bancroft, of the British brig Llanua. Mrs. B's death was occasioned by wounds received in November last, on board the brig, on the coast of California, in the attack made on that vessel by the N. W. Indians, at which time her husband was murdered. Mrs. B's sufferings have been intense since the moment of the fatal accident. At this place every thing which kindness and the best medical aid could suggest, was done for her relief, but to no effect. [Boston Daily Jde.

In addition to the above, the Journal of Commerce contains an extract from the Sandwich Island Gazette, which gives the annexed account of the massacre on board the Llanua, Mr. Bancroft's brig. It will be recollected, no doubt, that in August last, the brig Llanua, capt. John Bancroft, sailed from this harbor for the port of Klygaryn on the northwest coast, for the purpose of there taking on board Indians of that tribe to hunt for otter on the coast of California. In due season she reached the port of her destination, received on board twenty-five of the natives, with their canoes, &c. and from thence proceeded direct to the hunting ground on the coast of California; there she arrived, and at the island of Santa Rosa the business of the voyage was commenced; the canoes had been lowered once or twice, and the prospect of success was good; but unfortunately on the 21st of November, the captain had some little altercation with one of the Indians, a quarrelsome and discontented man, who would not conform to the discipline required, and who could not brook reproach.

Shortly after this captain Bancroft was standing at the gangway, looking over the side; his back was turned when a volley of muskets was fired at him by the Indians on the quarter deck; he fell mortally wounded. His wife, Mrs. Bancroft, then below hearing the report, rushed on deck, and fell on the body of her bleeding and dying husband. The Indians, not yet certain of their victim, poured another volley of shot into the already lifeless body of capt. Bancroft, which penetrated also that of his agonized wife; a pangs was then made, and Mrs. Bancroft was suffered to be taken below, mangled and mutilated in the most shocking manner. But here the slaughter did not cease; one of the seamen rushed to the armed chest to defend his companions that were left; as he endeavored to raise the lid, a shot reached his heart and he fell a lifeless corpse.

The massacre was now over; the Indians had gained possession of the vessel, and had nothing more to fear. The chief officer was then ordered to take the vessel directly back to Klygaryn, with this injunction that if he deviated from the direct course all on board would be murdered. Robinson, the mate, had no other alternative than to obey; all sail was made, and providentially the brig arrived in a short passage at Klygaryn; there the Indians disembarked in their canoes, carrying with them their effects and robbing the vessel of all that was portable. Strange to relate, the Llanua was suffered to depart without even dropping her anchor and the officer in command made his way to this island, where we have seen he arrived in fifty-two days after the murder of captain Bancroft. We must not neglect to state, that during the passage from California to Klygaryn, the Indians conducted themselves in the most brutal and beastly manner, offering every insult to the officers and mariners, and more particularly to Mrs. Bancroft, whose sufferings were indescribably awful.

CANADA. The Toronto Examiner repeats the assertion it has often made that emigration is taking place to a very great extent from the U. S. to this country. Some of the best citizens are selling off their property, and investing the proceeds in lands in the western states and territories. The Examiner has the following paragraph, not very complimentary to the order loving loyalists of Toronto. The Patriot editor, who is very careful to chronicle every manifestation of popular ill feeling by the people of the United States, will, of course denounce the mocratic spirit of its loyal co-adjutors. [Baltimore Chronicle.

Outrage on the printing office. There will soon not be a whole pane of glass in our printing office. On four different occasions have the infuriated partizans of ——— and Mr. ——— attacked our premises at night, and smashed the windows with large stones. This, it will be recollected, is in the capital of Upper Canada, under the surveillance of the governor, the mayor and city authorities. We have hitherto treated these assaults with contempt. They are getting too frequent. We shall allow the windows to remain in their present condition, as a standing advertisement of the tory system of discussing political principles.

The Montreal Herald of the 22d states that warrants will shortly issue for the confiscation and sale of property belonging to individuals who have been found guilty of high treason. The confiscation will not extend, it is said, to the property of refugees—at which the Herald is afflicted.

The same journal affirms that a project has been entertained, in this country, of intercepting and capturing the convict ship, about to sail for New South Wales, and liberating the prisoners going out in her, in fulfillment of their sentence! What nonsense the readers of the Herald have to swallow.

KEOKUCK KILLED BY YOUNG BLACK HAWK.—From several of the Pottawatomie Indians now in this city, we have recently passed the Sac country, we learn the following particulars. During the absence of a nephew of young Black Hawk, Keokuck got his wife drunk and passed the night with her.

Being thus detected, it fell to Black Hawk, as the nearest relative, to avenge his nephew's injury; which he took the earliest occasion to do, and stabbed Keokuck at the entrance of his nephew's wigwam. Keokuck, it will be remembered, was always the friend of the whites, and opposed the celebrated Black Hawk or Sac war, and was promoted chief through the instrumentality of the U. S. government. He was about 59 years of age, and at the time of his death, was this side of the Des Moines river, about 125 miles, (four days journey, the Indians have it), west of the Missouri; and Young Black Hawk is now chief of the Sac, and, at last news, was at the head of 2,000 warriors marching for the Sioux country. He has lost none of his inveterate hostility to the whites; but the terror with which his late travel through the United States, with his father and prophet inspired him, may keep him from any overt demonstrations of it, although he sneers at the peaceable disposition of Keokuck, and swears he will convince other nations of the invincibility of his warriors. He sent word to the Sioux that he had murdered the woman chief and was coming upon them with warriors more numerous than the trees of the forest. To whom the Sioux replied, he would be met by warriors as numberless as the leaves upon those trees.

Young Black Hawk is about thirty years of age, and altogether the most handsome Indian in his tribe. In passing to the Sioux country he crosses the Pottawatomie lands, which will be neutral ground so long as neither party infringes upon the rights and regulations of the Pottawatomies.

[Chicago Democrat. Doubts are suggested as to the truth of the above, for it is stated under date of Galena, June 5, that "Gov. Lucas, of Iowa territory, has recently made an excursion to the settlement of the Sac and Fox Indians, (50 or 100 miles west of Burlington, I. T.). He reports them as being comfortable and contented. Keokuck and his chief received the governor with all the ceremony peculiar to those sons of the forest."

EXECUTION OF A FETTER. We learn from the New York Evening Post, that Cornelius Williams, alias Wilhelms, who was convicted a short time ago of piracy and murder, on board the brig Braganza, was hung on Friday the 22d inst. at Ellis's island. He had been removed from the city prison to Bellevue early in the morning, and about half past eight o'clock was taken in the steamboat Hoboken to the place of execution. The principal authorities of the city, and a vast concourse of spectators, among whom a great many women, were present to witness the spectacle. The ceremony was performed by the United States marshal, W. C. H. Waddell, assisted by his deputies. After engaging in religious exercises with the clergyman in attendance, the prisoner ascended the scaffold, and attempted several times to address the multitude, but so great was the noise and confusion that he found it impossible to make himself heard. In the course of his remarks, however, he was understood to confess the crime with which he was charged, and to justify them on the ground that they had been provoked by the cruel treatment he had received.

Previous to the execution of the wretched man, whilst the officers of the Bellevue establishment were changing his dress a small file was discovered concealed in one of his stockings. On being questioned he stated the engine of the prison, Mr. Bishop had furnished the instrument to aid in effecting an escape. He stated to the marshal that he had given Mr. Bishop a guarantee of five hundred dollars on condition that he would assist him in working his way out of confinement, to which Bishop assented. The persons implicated by this disclosure of the prisoner were instantly arrested by order of the police justice.

Since the above was ready for the press, the case of Bishop, has been examined by the competent authority, and the accusations contained in the affidavit of Wilhelms, pronounced groundless. There is no doubt, says the New York American that the prisoner supposed a charge of this kind against a public officer, would excite some enquiries; and that a vague hope, that his execution might be put off in consequence, mainly led to his improbable accusation.

COMPARATIVE NUTRITIVE QUALITY OF ROOTS. We have hitherto had some little experience in feeding different kinds of roots to cattle and pigs in the winter. The potatoes are better for man, because they contain more farinaceous matter or starch than any of the others, but some of the others and more especially carrots, are better for fattening cattle.

One thousand parts of the potatoe yields of nutritive matter from 200 to 260 parts. This consists principally of starch with a little mucilage—from 15 to 20 of saccharine matter, and from 30 to 40 of gluten.

A thousand parts of the common red beet contain in about 150 parts of nutritive matter, which made up of 14 parts of starch, 121 of saccharine matter, and 13 or 14 of gluten.

A thousand parts of the mangrel wurtzel contain about 135 parts of nutritive matter, of which say 13 parts are starch, 119 saccharine matter, and 4 gluten.

A thousand parts of the common flat turnip contain about 42 parts of nutritive matter, of which 7 are starch, and 34 are saccharine matter.

A thousand parts of ruta bage contain 64 parts of nutritive matter, of which 9 are starch, 51 saccharine matter and 2 gluten.

A thousand parts of the parsnip afford about 100 of nutritive matter, 9 or 10 of which are starch and 90 saccharine matter.

The remainder of the thousand parts are vegetable fibre, useful to the animal that eats it in filling the stomach and aiding the digestive organs by what is called the "stimulous of distension" and very probably affording other aid to them which we know nothing about and which cannot be detected by the chemist in his laboratory.

Compare almost any of the above roots, with the nutritive matter procured from the same number of parts of clover, or herds of timothy grass, as they call it at the south.

One thousand parts of the clover contain about 40 of nutritive matter, of which say 31 or 32 are starch, 3 are saccharine matter, 2 are gluten and 3 are insoluble vegetable extract.

There are different results obtained by chemists, in regard to the nutritive qualities of herds grass, but some put it down at 100 in a thousand parts.

Now if we take into the account the number of pounds of each root which is ordinarily obtained from an acre and the cost of production, an approximation may be had of the comparative value of each crop, and by fairly understanding the matter we shall not be likely to be carried away by our partialities for this or that crop to-day, or by disappointments likely to arise in regard to them to-morrow. FINANCES OF RUSSIA. During the wars of Russia with the Prussians, Turks and Poles, her revenues were not equal to her expenditures. Loans and paper money were resorted to. Catherine II, and the emperors Paul and Alexander, extended their resources by this method. The paper rouble declined twenty-five per cent.

The receipts of the empire for a late year are stated thus:

1. Revenues of the state.	Prussian dollars*
Capitation tax,	23,125,000
Tax upon capital,	5,310,000
Duties,	26,136,000
2. Revenues of the crown.
Crown lands,	6,937,500
Monopoly of spirits,	35,733,333
Post office,	1,511,667
Crown woods and fisheries,	1,002,083
Crown factories,	1,079,467
Mines,	4,625,000
Other receipts,	1,073,000
3. Receipts in the kingdom of Poland, whose financial concerns are separate,	13,063,179
Total revenue,	119,531,850
The emperor has, besides, for his private chest, a revenue of $1,600,000.
The expenses of the state are thus stated:
1. The emperor's household,	$5,000,000
2. Department of foreign affairs,	2,000,000
3. Home department,	33,000,000
4. Department of foreign instruction and religion,	5,000,000
5. Army,	30,000,000
6. Navy,	12,000,000
7. Treasury department, and interest of public debt,	20,000,000
8. Other expenses,	3,000,000
9. Government of Poland,	12,000,000
Total expenditures,	$122,000,000
The public debt of Russia, in 1831, amounted to 495,472,655 Prussian dollars.

The public debt of Prussia is about one-third of this sum; that of Austria is $100,000,000 greater; that of France three times as large; and that of England ten times greater. [Globe.

FOREIGN POSTAGE. Mr. Vansant, the postmaster of the city of Baltimore, has addressed letters to the postmaster at New York, and to the agents of the Transatlantic steam ship company, of that city, on the subject of the postage on foreign letters, and of the complaints which have arisen in this country of the exaction, in England of postage on letters to the continent, which had already been paid in the United States. The difficulty which caused these complaints, arose, as heretofore stated, from the usage which has existed in the New York post office, of putting the letters on which the foreign postage had been thus paid, into the general letter bag made up for the steamships, instead of keeping them separate.

From the letters of the New York postmaster and steamship agency, in reply to Mr. Vansant, we observe that measures have been adopted which will prevent difficulty or complaint on this subject in future. The agents have simplified the tariff of foreign postages, by charging one dollar on all (single) letters to the continent, for which includes the steamship postage, and the British inland postage. And the letters on which the postage to the continent has thus been paid in advance here, will henceforth be placed in a separate bag. Thus there need be, and probably will be, no difficulty hereafter in steamship agents adjusting the matter of advance postage with the British postmasters, so as to avoid giving cause of complaint in future.

TEMPERANCE. The late report of the N. York city temperance society states that the number of licensed liquor shops in that city in 1828 was 3,162; in 1838, with a much increased population, 3,507.

There were in the state of New York alone, in 1828, 1,129 distilleries; the number is now reduced to about 200. In 1837, there were in operation in the city of New York and vicinity, 17 large grain distilleries; now there are but nine. In 1837, 32,650, 27-100 gallons of first proof domestic spirits were inspected in this city; and in 1838, 48,049,000, 100-88 gallons, being 14,633,000 gallons less the last, than in the preceding year, or a falling off of more than 23 per cent, and greater than double the decrease of any previous year.

In the importations of distilled liquor into the port of New York the last year, there was also a decrease of 25 per cent. And it is worthy of notice, that according to the latest returns of the secretary of the treasury, in 1837, there was a decrease of 1,235,084 gallons of wine, as compared with the importations of 1836.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PERSON OF JESUS CHRIST. As it was found in an ancient manuscript sent by Publius Lentulus, president of Judea, to the senate of Rome:

There lives at this time in Judea, a man of singular character, whose name is Jesus Christ. The barbarians esteem him a prophet, but his followers adore him as the immediate offspring of the immortal God. He is endowed with such unparalleled virtue as to call back the dead from their graves, and to heal every disease with a word or touch.—His person is tall and elegantly shaped,—his aspect amiable, reverend. His hair flows in those beautiful shades which no united colors can match, falling into graceful curls below his ears, agreeably crouching on his shoulders, and parting on the crown of his head, like the head dress of the sect of Nazaretes. His forehead is smooth and large, his cheek without spot, of save that of a lovely red; his neck and mouth are formed with exquisite symmetry, his beard is thick and suitable to the hair of his head, reaching a little below the chin, and parting in the middle like a fork, his eyes are bright, clear and serene. He rebukes with majesty, counsel with mildness, and invites with the most tender and persuasive language. His whole address whether in word or deed, being elegant, grave and strictly characteristic of so exalted a being! No man has seen him laugh; but the whole world behold him weep frequently; and so persuasive are his tears no one can refrain from joining in sympathy with him. He is very modest, temperate and wise. In short, whatever this phenomenon may turn out in the end, he seems at present a man for excellent beauty and divine perfections, every way surpassing the children of men.

THE COLOSSAL STATUES OF CHRIST AND THE TWELVE APOSTLES, executed by Thorwaldsen for the Cathedral of Notre Dame at Copenhagen, have been opened to public view in that church, with great ceremony, in the presence of the king and queen, and royal family, and the great officers of the state. Two baptismal fonts in the form of angels holding vases, also executed by the great sculptor, have been placed in the same edifice. Thorwaldsen himself was one of the sponsors for the first infant christened at them, the child of the Danish sculptor Freund, his old pupil at Rome.

MARRIAGES IN FRIENDS' MEETING. The manner of accomplishing marriages as adopted by the religious society of Friends, appears to gain popularity, as is evinced, on the 12th inst. by the number and respectable audience which crowded the meeting house of that society in this city, on which occasion two amiable and accomplished daughters, one of a rich chandler, and the other of a respectable builder, entered into that solemn and interesting relation, the marriage covenant. Before the time appointed for the meeting, the galleries and every avenue leading to them were literally packed with the beauty, intelligence and fashion of the city. The interest of the meeting was very materially enhanced by the company of that highly gifted minister, Joseph John Gurney, from England, who in a very interesting and eloquent manner explained the nature of that divine institution, referring to the sacrifice received from the Saviour of men on that memorable occasion when the water was turned into wine. When he concluded his discourse, the candidates for the nuptials stood up, and taking each other by the hand, prostrated, through divine assistance, to be loving and affectionate to each other till separated by death. The certificates of marriage were then read, being elegantly expressed on two large sheets of vellum, and a very appropriate prayer delivered by the Friend before referred to, when, after a short pause, the meeting separated, apparently highly gratified with the proceedings. THE BLOOD OF THE YANKEE WOMEN. The true Yankee blood of the Down East women is strongly illustrated in the following paragraphs:

We have just heard an incident which shows how fully our whole population, women as well as men, enter into the spirit of resistance to the claims of the British over a part of our territory. Among the troops now in this town from Oxford county are four sons of a widow. As they were preparing to march last week, taking leave of their mother, one of them asked her how she felt about it. She replied,

"I feel my sons, that I wish I had half a dozen more to go."

The sons of such a mother will receive no wounds in the back. [Kentucke Journal.

A lady in this village remarked that she felt as keenly as a mother could the absence of her son, who had gone a soldier to the Arrostook, but with all her anxiety she would rather he would be shot than to have him return a disgraced coward.

Another. A woman in this vicinity was inquired of by her husband if she was willing he should go into the service of the state. She asked if his country desired his services. He replied yes, men are called for to defend the soil against foreign aggression. Well then, says she, go, if you have courage to fight like a man, but if you think you have not, let me have your clothes and I'll go.

AN OLD HOUSE. One of the oldest houses in Salem, known as the Henfield house, was taken down during the past week, for the passage of the rail road across the city. It is supposed to have been erected and occupied by its first proprietor.—The huge beams of red oak appeared to be as sound as though lately hewn. It was formerly the Mansion of Hilliard Vereen, (says the Register), a merchant, and for some years clerk of the county court and collector of the customs. He was born in 1620 and died in 1683, at the age of 63.

LATER FROM ENGLAND.

From the N. Y. American.

The packet ship Cambridge, captain Binsley, arrived yesterday from Liverpool having sailed on the 21st of May. She brings intelligence three days later than the Great Western but as one of the days was Sunday, the commercial news presents no very different aspect. Nothing of political importance had transpired. The cotton market was still very dull, with a very slight decline of prices. The money market in London was "tight," but English funds continued firm. The whigs persisted in their illegal meeting in spite of the queen's proclamation.

Accounts from France are no later than were brought by the Rhoue. Paris was quite, although arrests were daily taking place. We annex extracts from the English papers likely to interest our readers.

The packet ship Siddors, captain Palmer, arrived at Liverpool from New York on the 18th, with New York papers to April 26th, three days later than those previously received by the Great Western.

The queen's troops in Spain have gained some advantage over the Carlists.

Twenty fishermen lost their lives from Monnt's bay fishing boats during a recent gale.

A new ship of 110 guns, called the queen, was launched at Portsmouth on the 15th. Tonnage 3,099. Length of gun-deck 204 feet.

An extensive fire took place on Friday night in Messrs. Hudson & Bottom's lace mills, when property exceeding 2,000l. in value was destroyed.—The stock and premises are insured.

Birmingham, May 19. After I sent off my account on Friday evening, a very large assemblage of the people took place in Smithfield, and were addressed by Dr. Taylor and others speakers. Finding that the police and military were sufficiently strong and willing to suppress any attempt at outrage, the agitators advised the people to respect "peace, law, and order," and in obedience to this advice the mob quietly separated about 10 o'clock. Yesterday the town resumed its wonted character; the irritated and feverish feeling which on Friday appeared to pervade all classes had completely subsided, and no meeting was held in the evening. This (Sunday) morning, however, a mob has again assembled at Holloway Head, but the principal agitators being for the present silenced, the attendance is very small; the majority consists of mere Sunday idlers. It is understood that the great "simultaneous meeting," as it is called, is to take place at Holloway Head, but as yet no notice has made its appearance on the walls. The convention adjourned on Friday until the 1st of July, when, it will, the "rent" permitting, resume its sitting in Birmingham. The additional military recently arrived still remain at the barracks, and it is supposed they will confine here until fears of an outbreak are completely removed. There is no question but the vigor of the magistrates, and the presence of adequate military aid have prevented commotion, and abolished the expressed determination of the chartists.

London, Saturday evening, May 18. The English stock market has been extremely quiet all day, and the prices of the funds remain with scarcely any variation. Consols were 93 1-8 for money, and 93 1/2 for account. Bank stock 195 to 6; India stock, 255 to 6; exchequer bills, 32s. to 34s. premium.

In the foreign house, a further slight improvement in the quotations of the non-dividend paying loans, both European and Spanish American, may be noted.

The share market was in a depressed state, and the reports from Liverpool show an uneasy feeling there in the share, the same as the cotton market. Scarcely any business was done in railway shares to-day, and the prices may be considered as merely nominal.

The Times of Friday evening, May 17, says:

There is nothing adverse hitherto, but the contrary, in the working of the bank resolution of yesterday for an advance in the rate of interest on discounts to 5 per cent. The principal money dealers have been willing to lend to-day below that rate, that is, at 4 1/2 per cent, and accommodation generally has been more free than it was before. A slight improvement may be noted in the money rates of consols, which closed at 93 1/2 to 1, both for money and account. For the July account the quotations were 93 1-2 to 3; bank stock was 195 to 196; Indian stock 255 to 256; exchequer bills, 32s. to 34s. premium.

Business in the foreign house was rather more animated, and in several of those stocks upon which no dividends are paid, the quotations are a shade higher.

From the Courier of Monday, the 20th, we extract the following remarks on the transactions of Saturday, the 18th.

There has been no particular demand for money to-day, and as there has been very little business transacted in the English stock market, the quotations are consequently nearly the same as yesterday. Consols left off at 93 1/2 for money, and 94 1/2 for the account; new three and a half per cent. 100 to 1; exchequer bills 32s. to 34s. prem. bank stock 195 to 196, and India stock 255 to 256.

In the foreign market there was more animation, and some of the different securities, which have undergone depreciation within the last few days, in consequence of the scarcity of money and other causes, have improved in appearance, and are quoted higher.

From the London Morning Chronicle May 20.

There is no abatement in the pressure for money, or in the rates of commercial discounts. This "tightness," as it is termed in the money market, appears to have arisen from a combination of circumstances, of which one must be decidedly the adverse state of the continental exchanges, and another the late and existing political agitation which has prevailed almost throughout the country, circumstances of themselves sufficiently important to render every portion of the banking and monetary interests extremely cautious—to these it may be added that it is pretty well understood that the late heavy speculations in cotton and grain have not turned out so favorably as the speculators, without doubt, fully anticipated. This circumstance has, of course, rendered not only the Bank of England, but the banking interests generally, rather shy of the bills drawn against these speculations, which at present inundate the discount market; therefore, for a while, little or no alteration in the value of money can be anticipated.

The British funds continue very firm, particularly so when it is considered that large sales of money stock have been made during the past week, and that the country is far from being in a quiet position. Consols closed to-day at 93 1-8 a 1-4 money and account, and for the July account some few bargains have been done at 93 3-8. The three and a half per cent. reduced annuities, are 99 1-2 a 3-8; and the new three and a half per cent. 100 3-4 a 78. Bank stock is 195 2-4; and India stock 256 money. The premium upon exchequer bills remains at 32 a 3-4; on India bonds it is 95 a 3-7.

The dealings in the peninsular bonds to-day have been so limited, that the quotations are merely nominal; in the transatlantic bonds there has, however, been a little jobbing, which has caused a slight improvement in some of them.

The railway share market still betrays symptoms of giving way.

From the Liverpool Albion of May 21.

State of trade at Manchester. Although it is impossible to announce any actual revival in the demand for manufactured goods generally, yet it is satisfactory to know that in those branches in which the stagnation has been most severely felt, the only safe and certain curative process is in operation. Short time and a diminution of production can alone restore the equilibrium so violently shaken by the events of 1837. And so prudently have the manufacturers prepared for such a necessity, that we now see it acted on with little inconvenience to any party, and without any of those disastrous and dangerous results which have formerly attended sudden and unforeseen movements of a similar character.

The drain upon the saving banks has passed its climax, and the claims upon the poor rates have not risen, and show no tendency to rise, beyond the ordinary and accustomed amount. So perfectly orderly are our town population, that one of our most crowded and poverty stricken districts did not furnish one single delinquent to the watch on Saturday night last. These facts all tend to prove, that, on the whole, the state of the labor market is not so bad as the depression in some branches of trade and manufacture might lead us to conclude, and that there is no reason to despair for the general resources of the country. The depression which we experience is not confined to us, but is felt with at least equal severity in every market to which the stock of 1837 extended. The manufactures at Ghent and the neighborhood are all in the same situation as our own establishments in Lancashire; only two or three are working full time, all the others are working only half time.

Liverpool, Friday May 17.

Cotton market. The same circumstances which have influenced the market for some weeks past continue to govern it; nor do we look for any amelioration but in the removal of the depression which hangs over the manufacturing interests. The demand has been very moderate, and the transactions in accordance thereto, being divided into numerous small portions, evidently carrying out the existing principle of buying only what necessarily supplies requires—there is no apparent inclination on the part of the consumer to increase his stock; and on the other hand the importers seem as little disposed, under present circumstances, to meet the market. Prices are now lower than the week, save for Egyptian and Brazil 1-4d. per lb. Exporters have taken 200 bales of American and 100 Maranhian. The sales to-day are about 1,500. The import this week is 12,220 bags, and the sales are 7,650 bags, including 50 Sea Island at 23 a 20c; 10 stained do. 19 1-2; 2,640 Upland 3 1-2 a 9c; 2,250 New Orleans 7 1-2 a 11; 1,250 Alabama, Sec. 7 1-4 a 9c; 400 Pernambuco 9 3-8 a 10 1-2; 250 Bahia and Macao 8 3-8 a 10; 930 Maranhian S 1 4 a 9 3-4.

The sales on the 18th (Saturday) were 1,200 bales of previous prices.

Decrease of import this year, compared with the same date last year, 252,677

Decrease of stock, 9,800

Decrease of quantity taken for consumption, 155,100

Computed stocks, 310,000

May 17, 1839, 310,000

Same period, 1838, 320,200

May 20th. Nothing has occurred in the market since Friday that requires particular comment, the trade still continuing to purchase in the same limited proportion as before. The sales to-day and on Saturday will not exceed 2,000 bales, without variation in prices.

FRANCE.

M. Poincés, the French minister to the United States, had arrived at Paris.

Paris, May 17—half past 3, P. M. Five per cent, 41 1/2. 30c. three per cent, 31 1/2. 50c. bank accounts, 27 1/2.

Paris papers to May 18th, say that the new ministry were displaying vast solicitude to conciliate the liberal opposition. The brother of M. Odillon Barrot had not only been appointed to a lucrative place, but M. Dupont, (de l'Eure), was, it was said, about being raised to the bench of the court of cassation.

The general impression was, that ministers would be able to maintain themselves in office.

There are some further minor details in these journals of the events of the 12th and 13th inst, but none requiring special notice. Several new arrests have taken place, and many additional warrants had been issued. It was not certain that the minister of war would, as he threatened, dissolve the Polytechnic school, for having, in the terms which our readers have already read, contraicted the Journal des Debats in its statement that three insurgents had been killed by the students of the Ecole Polytechnique.

Business in Paris had naturally suffered from the disturbances of the early part of last week. Failures among the small classes of traders were still lamentably frequent. Respecting the superior order of houses of business, however, confidence was fast restoring.

The weather had become fine in Paris, but the frosts on Monday and Thursday nights had done irreparable and most extensive injury to the vines in the vicinity of that capital. Even the leaves of the oaks suffered from it.

Prince Napoleon Louis Bonaparte has sent a letter to the newspapers, denying that he is in any way responsible for the insurrection in Paris. The prince says: "The intelligence of the bloody scenes which took place has caused me as much surprise as grief. If I were the soul of a plot, I would also be the chief actor in it on the day of danger; nor would I shrink back after a defeat."

SPAIN.

Advices from Madrid to May 11th, announce another change of the ministry. It was rumored on the evening of that day, that the ministry would be definitely constituted as follows: M. Perez de Castro, president of the council, and minister of foreign affairs; general Alaix, minister of war; general Vigodet, of marine; M. Diego Estreño, of the interior; M. Arrazola, of justice; and M. Ismenez, of finance. The reports of the victories of the Christiano armies had inspired some activity to the business on the Bourse.

A good harvest was expected, which anticipation had reduced the price of corn.

London, May 20. Letters from Bayonne of the 13th inst. bring intelligence from Durango of the 11th, and from Manzanaera of the 9th. A bulletin, published by the Carlist general Maroto, at his head quarters of Manzanaera, states that on the 8th, five of the six pieces of artillery which lined the ramparts of Guardalmano having burst after the first shots were fired, occasioned the death of 15 soldiers and 2 officers, and set on fire and blew up a depot of gunpowder and hand grenades in the first. Owing to this accident it could no longer protect the fortified houses of Ramales, and yet the garrison of the latter, consisting of 150 men, defended them bravely, until 108, including their commander, had been either killed or wounded.

Letters from Bayonne of the 15th, confirm the account of the taking of Guardalmano, on the 12th, by general Espartero. One report stated that the garrison consisting of 300 men, had capitulated and been made prisoners of war.

The occupation of Guardalmano would, it was thought, be soon followed by that of Balmasada, in which case general Estreño would gain possession of the whole of the surrounding country, and of the high road leading from Orduna to Boboa. Durango, and a great portion of Biscay would, in consequence, soon return under the domination of the queen.

General Leon, (queen's party), was displaying the utmost activity in Navarre, first advancing on one point, sometimes on another, of the line of La Solana, and continually keeping Elio in check. He entered Los Arcos on the 10th, and on the 12th a warm action took place between him and Joachim Elio, commandant of the Carlists. It would seem that the latter was defeated, notwithstanding the success which he received during the action.

On the 13th some severe fighting took place about a league from Estella. Nearly all the inhabitants of the town had fled to the mountains. If Leon continued to obtain the advantage, Estella would be captured, and probably destroyed.

By a decree of the 29th ult. Don Carlos revoked an order of the 29th of December last, prescribing the expulsion of the Christiano families residing within the northern provinces, in retaliation for measure of the same kind enforced by general Espartero against the Carlist families inhabiting the different towns occupied by his troops.

GREECE.

Private letters from Athens, dated the 29th ult. received in Paris, state that "the English" were once more becoming highly popular and influential. Great dissatisfaction pervaded the country. An attempt at insurrection took place at a place called Cassany a few days previously, but was suppressed. Several of the insurgents were made prisoners, and would be tried by courts martial. The king was, notwithstanding the failure of the disaffected, seriously alarmed for his throne and life.

EGYPT AND ARABIA.

A letter from Alexandria, dated the 27th of April, denies a report, circulated on the authority of the learned M. Jomard, that Mehemet Ali, intended abolishing slavery in his dominions. The pasha has restored to liberty a number of prisoners taken by his troops during his late expedition to Fozzogli, but merely to conciliate the natives of the country. Slavery would appear to be too productive a branch of revenue for the pasha to be soon suppressed, "and in fact, as no former period were the bazaars of Alexandria and Cairo so encumbered with slaves as at the present moment." The same letter states, that the English troops in possession of Aden were decimated by the want of water and fresh provisions, and the excessive heat. The Arabs kept the garrison constantly on the qui vive, and the Europeans who had the misfortune to wander any distance from the ramparts were mercilessly murdered.

Paris, May 16. The Ecole d'Orient has an article from Constantinople, dated April 22, which says: "It is affirmed that a detachment of Egyptian troops, pursuing some Arab deserters, has entered the Ottoman territory, which it has thus audaciously violated, notwithstanding the pacific assurances which Ibrahim pasha is continually giving."

SYRIA.

A private letter from Beirut, dated the 17th of April, corroborates the report which, on Saturday, we copied from the Sayra Gazette, that the troops of Mehemet Ali had marched for Bahrein, in the Persian gulf.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 33.

Adj't. general's office, Washington, June 11, 1839. The following instructions have been received from the war department, relative to the intercourse with the Indians, which are published for the guidance of commanders on the frontiers, and all who may be concerned:

War Department, June 8, 1839.

"SIR: Information having reached this department that certain evil disposed persons frequent the Indian country, for the purpose of enticing the Indians to play at games of hazard, and thus, by the basest, and most nefarious means, deprive them of their property, and of the means of gaining a comfortable subsistence, the commissioner of Indian affairs has been directed to instruct the proper officers of his department to proceed forthwith to remove all such persons from the Indian country, and to prevent their return thereto.

"These officers will be given to understand that if, in the execution of this duty, the aid of the militia force becomes necessary, the employment of which in such manner is authorised by the intercourse act of 1834, they must call upon the commanding officers of the different posts in that quarter, for such force as will enable them promptly and effectually to carry out their instructions. And you will cause orders to be issued to the commanding officer to comply with the requisitions of the officers of the Indian department, and to afford them all the aid and co-operation in their power. Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

J. R. POINSETT.

Maj. gen. A. Macomb, commanding-in-chief.

By order of maj. gen. Macomb:

ENGINEER ORDER, No. 5.

It has become the painful duty of the chief engineer to announce to the corps of engineers the death of a brother officer, captain Wm. A. Ehason, who expired suddenly at Alexandria, D. C. on the morning of the 15th inst.

As a testimonial of respect for the deceased, the officers of the corps and those of the military academy will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Beller news from Florida. The Alexandria Gazette of yesterday contains information from Florida, by officers of the United States army, who left there six days ago. It is stated that the Indians are coming in peaceably from every quarter and that several hundred are now collected at Fort King. The most confident belief is entertained, by the officers of the army, that the war is, in reality, ended. A murder was committed near Picolata a few days ago, but it was supposed to have been the work of a white man and a negro.

The Indians declared their determination to abide by the treaty, and their actions so far show that they are in earnest. Whether they will continue in this mind no one can say; but we trust that the anticipations of the officers of the army may all be realized, and that we may say, at last, that there is an end of the Florida war.

The Savannah Georgian, by the arrival at that city, on Thursday night, of the steamboat Charleston, direct from Black Creek, has information from an authentic and indisputable source, to the effect that the prospect of a permanent peace with the Indians is quite favorable, and, indeed, may be considered as fairly settled.

Within the last few days, it is said, that many hundred Indians have come in at Fort King, friendly to peace, and on their way south, in fulfillment of their treaty engagements. They daily meet the expresses and trains on the road, and appear perfectly assured in their manner of the favorable change in affairs, intimating as little disposition to molest others, as fear of being molested.

We trust that these favorable anticipations may be fully realized, and peace and security be once more restored to the people of Florida.

There came as passengers in the Charleston—major Fauntleroy, 2d dragoons, capt. Backus, 2d infantry, and lieut. Merit Inge, with two companies 2d dragoons, destined for Fort Columbus, N. Y.

From the Philadelphia National Gazette.

Frost Florida. St. Augustine, June 7, 1839. I rejoice to apprise you of the extraordinary success attending the negotiations of general Macomb. The Seminoles are eagerly flocking to our posts, and in obedience to the general's directions receive that courtesy and attention which their distinguished prowess and individual character merits. Indeed a scrupulous jealousy exists for the palm of the closest observance of the general's views in this respect. It appears, however, that the posts on the upper St. Johns seems most favored by the Seminoles,—perhaps from their proximity to the secret haunts.

I have before me a copy of an extra official communication which is pregnant with interest. It manifests the powerful influence of the general's proposition for a cessation of hostilities over the entire savage country; and confirms, what was heretofore suspected, the melancholy condition of the subsistence department of the Seminolan army.

Fort—, May 29, 1839.

SIR: By the interposition of Providence, I have the honor to report the most satisfactory results attending the issue of the order dated 12th of May. Fires have of late been frequent in this vicinity, which indicate the approach of Indians from all directions. Immediately after my men returned with their horses last evening from grazing, indistinctly frightful noises appeared to issue from a hammock in the rear of our defence. I had no hesitation in ordering one-third of my command consisting of two able bodied men, to remain on guard, lest a surprise might be anticipated. The sequel illustrated my sagacity. About two o'clock this morning the faithful sentinel who was posted on the left curtain of the work, was startled by a repetition of the noise, which he immediately communicated to the sergeant of the guard, who withdrew all the sentinels in order to afford an opportunity to those who might feel disposed to avail themselves of the benefits of the general order.

Having awaited with breathless anxiety until daybreak, we had the satisfaction of discerning something approaching the fort. I ordered the gate thrown open. A canine femelle, apparently in distress, came voluntarily in, and seemed to ask protection, which, I need scarcely remark, was promptly extended. Quarters were furnished, and the subsistence department directed to issue the proper rations. In the course of the day I had the inexpressible pleasure of an addition of eight more of the same tribe, which were brought in and delivered by the aforesaid female, whose Indian name we have been unable to learn, and therefore christened her—

In continuation permit me to express my conviction that, from the avidity with which this poor creature received our bounty, the subsistence depots of our late enemy's army have been considerably reduced, and consequently, in all human probability, many more will come in.

Returning thanks to that high functionary whose diplomatic sagacity has showered blessings upon our army, and for the benefits derived by me, individually, I remain, with exalted consideration, your obedient servant,

Captain, commanding post—

To Commanding—district, Florida.

Florida. We submit without comment the annexed taken from the St. Augustine Herald of the 29th inst. as exhibiting the condition of things in Florida.

Herald office, June 20, 1839.

Information has reached us that a number of Indians have gone in at Fort King, and among them, the party who murdered Brockenberry, near Picolata, a short time since.

They admitted the murder, and alleged that they were ignorant of the treaty entered into with gen. Macomb.

Since then, however, the treaty has received another bloody seal. Two men were killed at a place called Fort Cross. The sixty days allowed for the Indians to go south have not expired. (It is said a number are going south, but it is suspected it is for holding the "green corn dance," which takes place about the first week in July next.

Murder in the Indian territory. Captain R. D. C. Collins, United States army, and principal disbursing agent, writes as follows, from the Choctaw agency to the editor of the Arkansas Gazette: "Two men, one by the name of Crump, the other Backus, both from Mississippi, left the depot at Boggy, a few days since, for this place. They were murdered about 29 miles from where they started. Crump had a considerable sum of money with him. A mule which they led was found dead, a few hundred yards from where Crump lay shot nearly through with an arrow, such as is used by the wild Indians; at all events, not such as either the Choctaws, Chickasaws or any of our friendly Indians use. There was also found a bow near where Backus lay. He had run perhaps two hundred yards and was tomahawked."

"The only hope of ascertaining the murderers is from the bow and arrow left. There are a number of Kickapoos and Osages hunting on Blue and Washita. There is some suspicion that they may be concerned. The affair has created quite an excitement, and rendered the travel from here to the depot somewhat precarious."

NAVY. Captain Spencer. Some mention has been already made of the very important services rendered to American citizens at Tampico, by captain Spencer of the United States sloop of war Warren, at the central forces under Arista. It affords us much pleasure to add the following emphatic testimonial in favor of that gallant officer, which we find in the New Orleans Bee of the 19th inst.

United States sloop of war Warren. The services rendered by the presence of this vessel at the late critical juncture in Tampico, were particularly beneficial to the protection of American citizens. Much American property that was jeopardized by the state of parties, was secured to the rightful owners through the unceasing efforts of commodore Spencer; and when our citizens, resident at Tampico, were threatened with the vengeance of government for supposed political offences, he came forward and demanded their liberation in terms that could not be mistaken. The course which he pursued on this occasion tended in a great measure to prevent bloodshed, and to bring about a settlement of the existing difficulties, as also to restore the trade which had been so much interrupted by the revolution.

Lt. Moore and the Texian navy. Notwithstanding the denial of the Globe, and the jesuitical letter of Lt. Moore, there is no doubt but he has accepted command of the Texian navy, and takes with him between twenty and thirty of the young officers of our navy to serve in subordinate stations. It is also understood that commodore P. A. C. Jones volunteered for this command, and that Lt. Moore agreed to serve under him. But the services of the former were not accepted in consequence of his advanced age. Mr. Moore is now engaged in making contracts for arms and munitions of war for the Texian navy, and we learn that the majority of the crew of the Boston, in which vessel he returned from the West Indies, has been induced to promise to enter the Texian navy. REMINISCENCES.

Genuine copy of a letter from Mr. Livingston, titular governor of New York, to his excellency, sir Henry Clinton, K. B. dated Elizabethtown, N. J. 29th March, 1779.

Sir: After having apologised for delaying your and Mr. Franklin's dinner, by being accidentally absent from you did me the honor a few days ago to send Colonel Stirling to wait upon me to New York; I beg leave to acquaint you, that I am possessed of the most authentic proofs of a general officer under your command having offered a large sum of money to an inhabitant of this state to assassinate me, in case he could not take me alive. This sir, is so repugnant to the character I have hitherto formed of sir Henry Clinton, that I think it highly improbable you should either countenance, connive at, or be privy to a design so sanguinary and disgraceful.— Taking it, however, for granted, that you are a gentleman of too much spirit to discover any thing that you think proper to abet, I give you this opportunity without your approbation; assuring you at the same time, that if they are countenanced by you, your person is more in my power than I have reason to think you imagine. I have the honor to be your excellency's most humble servant,

WILLIAM LIVINGSTON.

Gen. SIR HENRY CLINTON.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ANSWER.

New York, April 10th, 1779.

Sir: As you address me on a grave subject, no less than life and death, and your own person concerned, I condescend to answer you, but must not be troubled with any further correspondence with Mr. Livingston. Had I a soul capable of harboring so infamous an idea as assassination, you, sir, at least, would have nothing to fear; for be assured I should not blacken myself with so foul a crime to obtain so trifling an end. Sensible of the power you boast, of being able to dispose of my life by means of intimates of yours, ready to murder at your command, I can only congratulate you on your amiable connexions, and acknowledge myself your most humble servant,

H. CLINTON.

The following is the translation of the challenge sent by the marquis de la Fayette to the earl of Carlisle, and the earl's answer:

October, 1779.

To the earl of Carlisle:

I did not hitherto believe, my lord, that I ever should have occasion to meet you but on the footing of politeness, except at the head of the troops which we respectively command. Your letter of the 29th of August, to the congress of the United States, and the insulting expression on my country, which you there have signed, could alone have given me cause to quarrel with you. I do not design to refute the charges, my lord, but I desire to punish it. It is from you, as chief of the commission, that I demand a reparation as public as has been the offence, and which must give the lie to the expression you have used. I should not have delayed this demand so long if your letter had reached me sooner. My occasions call me from hence for a few days, but on my return, I hope to find your answer. Mr. Gimot, a French officer, will settle the time and place of our meeting to suit your convenience. I do not doubt but that, for the honor of his compatriot, general Clinton will attend you to the field. As to me, my lord, it is indifferent who attends you, provided that, to the glory of being a Frenchman, I join that of proving to a gentleman of your country, that no one dares to insult mine unpunished.

LA FAYETTE.

To the marquis de la Fayette:

Sir: I have received your letter, transmitted to me by Gimot, and I confess I find it difficult to return a serious answer to its contents. The only one that can be expected from me, as the king's commissioner, and which you ought to have known, is, that I do and ever shall consider myself solely responsible for my country and king, and not to any individual for my public conduct and language. As for my opinion or expressions contained in any publications issued under the commission in which I have the honor to be named, unless they are retracted in public, you may be assured, I shall never, in any change of situation, be disposed to give an account of them much less recall them, in private.

The injury alluded to in the correspondence of the king's commissioner to the congress, I must remind you, is not of a private nature, and I conceive all rational disputes will be best decided by the meeting of admiral Byron and count D'Estaing.

SEIZURE OF FISHING VESSELS.

We mentioned on Monday, the return of capt. Sturgis, of the revenue cutter Hamilton, from Nova Scotia, whither he had been sent to make inquiries relative to the seizure of fishing vessels, by British cruisers. The following report from the consular agent at Yarmouth, will show the character of the cases of seizure which have been made, and the proceedings which have taken place upon them.

[Boston Patriot.]

Consulate U. S. Yarmouth, N. S. June 18, 1839.
To Josiah Sturgis, esq. commander of the American revenue cutter Hamilton.

Sir: At your request, I enclose to you an abridged statement of the depositions of the masters and crews of the four American fishing schooners, lately seized by the commander of the British government vessel "Victory," and now lying detained at this port, together with a succinct account of my proceedings, upon the application to me for assistance by the masters of these vessels.

Upon the 27th day of May last, application was made to me, as the consular agent of the United States at this port, by William Burgess, master of the American fishing schooner "Independence," for advice and assistance, under the following circumstances: On Sunday, the 20th day of May last, while lying at anchor at the Tusket islands, near the coast of this province, the said schooner was boarded, and, with her cargo and papers, seized and taken possession of by the commander and part of the crew of the British government vessel "Victory," for an alleged infraction, by the crew of the "Independence," of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States, and the laws of this province for the protection of the British fisheries. The schooner was brought into this port, stripped of her sails, and part of her rigging, and the master and crew obliged to leave her. Depositions of the master, William Burgess, and of the crew, Benjamin Sylvester, Samuel C. Mills, Ezekiel Burgess, and Samuel Burgess, all of Vinalhaven, in the state of Maine, were taken to the above facts, and also to those which follow.— They deposed, that the schooner Independence, of the burthen of 31 tons, or thereabouts, and belonging to Vinalhaven, was fitted out and cleared from that port, on a fishing voyage into the bay of Fundy, on the 10th day of April last, and that they continued to fish in the bay, never at any time at a less distance from the coast of Nova Scotia than 15 miles, until about the last of April, of the present year, when, being in wait of water, and it blowing very heavy, they stood in for the coast, and anchored in the Tusket islands, where they remained about twenty-four hours. At the expiration of that time they again went to sea, and remained upon the fishing ground until the 25th day of May last, when, the compass having been accidentally broken, and there being no other on board, they again stood in for the coast, intending to make the port of Yarmouth, for the purpose of having the compass repaired, and of procuring a supply of water; but the wind being adverse, and very violent, and the weather thick and lazy, they were unable to make that port, and were obliged to take shelter in the Tusket islands for the night, at which place they were seized the next day, as before mentioned. The master and crew of this vessel deposed, most solemnly, that no fish of any kind or description had been taken or caught by them during the present season, or since their departure from port, either in the Tusket islands, or at any distance nearer to the coast of Nova Scotia, or of any of the British possessions in North America, than 15 miles; and that at no one time did they remain at anchor in the said islands, or in any port on the coast, for a longer space than twenty-four hours. They, however, admitted that, at the earnest solicitation of an inhabitant of the Tusket islands, whose name was to them unknown, they did, for one night, lend their nets to him, and that they received from him, on the following morning, a few herrings.— This occurred but once, and for one night only; they never having remained in the islands for two consecutive nights.

The master of the American fishing schooner "Magnolio," seized at the same time and place, deposed in substance to the same facts as the foregoing, except that they had not lent or parted with their nets. They deny most positively having fished or attempted to take or catch fish within 15 miles of the coast of this province during the present season. The Magnolio is of the burthen of 37 tons, or thereabouts, belongs to Vinalhaven, and was fitted out and cleared from that port on a fishing voyage into the bay of Fundy; she sailed from that port on the 26th day of April last, and was twice into the Tusket islands for shelter, and for wood and water, during the present season. The master's name is George Poole. The names of the seamen are Wm. S. Combs, David Lane and Samuel Clarke, all residing at or near Vinalhaven, in the state of Maine.

The master of the schooner "Java" acknowledged that he and his crew had taken fish in the islands, and was aware that the fact of his having done so could be proved against him. He therefore declined to make any effort for relief. The "Java" was fitted for a fishing voyage into the bay of Fundy, and belonged to Vinalhaven, and she was seized at the same time and place as the other two vessels before mentioned. The said Burgess was master; the crew were George McFarlane, Charles J. Perkins and Thomas McFarlane, all residing at or near Vinalhaven.

A few days subsequent, on the 31st day of May last, another application was made to me by James Taylor, the master of the American fishing boat "Hart," of Deer island, in the state of Maine, who deposed that his boat was fitted out on a fishing voyage into the bay of Fundy about the last of April of the present year, that he had frequently been into the Tusket islands to seek shelter, and to obtain wood and water, and once only they anchored in this port, having come hither for the purpose of hiring an additional hand—they continued to fish until the 30th of May last, when being at anchor in the Tusket islands, the vessel, cargo and papers were seized and taken possession of by the commander of the "Victory," who brought the vessel and cargo into this port, and obliged the master and crew to leave her. They state most positively, that they have not since their departure from the port of Vinalhaven, taken or caught fish of any kind or description, within 15 miles of the coast of Nova Scotia, or of any of the other British coasts, nor did they at any one time remain in and among the said islands for a longer space of time than 24 hours. They state, however, that the master and Hiram Rich, one of the crew did receive from Benjamin Brown, the master of a British fishing vessel at anchor in the said islands, about two barrels of herrings given to them by Brown to recompense them for their services in assisting him for one night at his request, in clearing his nets of herrings, and in salting and curing his fish. This took place during one night that they came into the island for wood and water. This statement is corroborated on oath by Hiram Rich and Albert Douglass, two of the crew of this boat, and I

Power, a resident of this place, the additional hand above mentioned, who deposed to the truth of the statement of the master and crew subsequent to the time of his engagement with them, before which time they had not proceeded to fish at all.

Benjamin Brown, a resident of Yarmouth, and a person of much respectability, deposed, that the first seizure of this vessel "Hart" in the Tusket islands, was on the first of May last, she having then but just arrived, as he believes, from Deer island, and not having been in the islands before, during the present season. He further states, that afterwards, the boat frequently came into the islands, at times when the state of the weather was such that the safety of the vessel and crew would have been endangered at sea, and at other times, as he believed, for wood and water, having frequently observed them proceed to the shore, and bring therefrom a supply of these necessities. He was, to the best of his belief, aware of the boat's arrival, whenever she came into the islands, her place of anchorage being close to his vessel, and he says that the boat never remained in the said islands at one time for a longer space than 24 hours. He usually witnessed the boats get under weigh, and she always stood directly out to sea. He had frequent opportunities of observing the conduct of the master and crew of this boat, and he verily believes that no fish of any kind were taken by them, in or near to the said islands, subsequent to the 1st of May, the date of his arrival there, nor does he believe that he came there for the purpose of fishing or setting nets, and that had they done so, he must have been aware of it, as the boat always anchored close to his vessel. He further stated that, at his request, the master of the boat and one of the crew named Rich, assisted him for one night in clearing his nets of herrings and in salting his fish, for which service he gave them two and a half barrels of herrings, and that he had seen the nets seized on board the boat, and that the fishes were too small to admit of the taking by them of any description of herring that had been on the coast during the present season.

These depositions I enclosed to John Morrow, esq. United States consul at Halifax, for the purpose of using them to assist him in his endeavors to effect the release of the Magnolia, Java and Hart, under the plea of their having been seized and detained on insufficient grounds.

The masters of these three last named vessels, by my advice, proceeded to Halifax, where they now are, awaiting the decision of the government officers there, whether they shall at once be released, or whether they will be obliged to contest the legality of the seizures in the court of vice admiralty at that place. I have received no information from thence, that can be depended upon, as to the probable issue of the exertions already made, and now making, in behalf of the owners and others interested in these vessels.

The affidavits which have been made to substantiate the legality of these seizures are, first, that of John McConnell, of this place, who deposes that he did see the crew of the Java, between the 11th and 27th days of May last, in the Tusket islands, put their nets into the boat belonging to that vessel, and on the following morning he saw them return with a quantity of fish, which was repeated four or five times during the above mentioned period, and that the skipper of the Java acknowledged to him, that he had taken fish within the limits prohibited—for bait. He further states, that on Sunday, the 26th of May last, he saw on the deck of the Java, then lying in the Tusket islands, a quantity of gurry, with the crew's sail was from about three quintal of fish, caught the day before, and that he saw the master and crew throw the same overboard, being then about 2 miles from the above point, in Yarmouth.

21. The same person John McConnell, further deposed, that he saw the Magnolia about two weeks previously, when at anchor in the islands, send her boats away in the evening with nets, and return again the next morning with fish, which also again took place for several successive days. He further stated, that the crew of the Magnolia did about the same time acknowledge that they were then taking fish among the Tusket islands, and had before been doing the same.

31. David McConnell, of Yarmouth, made oath that the skipper of the American schooner "Independence," acknowledged to him on the 26th day of May, that he had hired nets belonging to that schooner, the skipper of an English fishing vessel to be set by him on shores.

4th. Jonathan Baker, of Yarmouth, deposed that between the 11th and 18th days of May last, he saw the crew of the American schooner "Java," then at anchor in the Tusket islands, put the nets out at different days, leave the vessel, and return in the mornings, with the nets and a quantity of herrings.

5th. Joseph Darby, commander of the schooner Victory, deposed that he did see from the said schooner Victory, then lying in the Tusket islands, the crew of the American fishing boat "Hart," cleaning fish on board of that vessel, and that the master of the "Hart" acknowledged to him that he did about a week previously procure from Benjamin Brown, two barrels of fresh herrings for bait.

The crew of the Magnolia positively deny the truth of the depositions made against them, and say that their vessel must have been mistaken for some other. The crew of the "Independence" also deny having hired their nets, and it is probable that the acknowledged sworn to as made by the master, has been misunderstood by the person to whom it was made, the real admission having been the lending the nets to an inhabitant of the Tusket islands, as is mentioned in the depositions of the master and crew of the "Independence." I need not remark upon the insufficiency of the evidence upon which the seizures of the "Independence" and "Hart" have been made. It consists entirely of verbal acknowledgments, which may and usually are, misunderstood or misconstrued, and can seldom be correctly repeated; and, indeed, taking for granted that the admissions sworn to have been made by the masters of these vessels, I cannot understand that they amount to sufficient evidence to authorise a seizure.

I may observe that these vessels have all been fitted out on shares—that is, each man on board, in lieu of wages, receives a share of fish at the termination of the voyage. This circumstance may be of importance, as it may effect their decision in the court of vice admiralty.

I have at present, at this consulate, two destitute American seamen of the boat "Hart," James Rich and Albert Douglass, who, if not contrary to your instructions, I have to request that you will receive on board the cutter Hamilton, and land them at some convenient port in the United States.

The crews of the "Java," "Magnolia" and "Independence," were put by me on board of a British schooner, the master of which landed them at Casco, in the state of Maine. They were in a perishing and destitute condition, the provisions and stores of the vessels having been seized. I had, therefore, to provide for them while they remained in this place, and to find them a passage to the United States. I am, sir, your obedient, humble servant,
HENRY GRANTHAU, consul & agent for the U. S. for the port of Yarmouth, (N. S.)

SEIZURE OF AMERICAN FISHERMEN.

On learning, a short time since, that very many of our fishing vessels had been seized by the British authorities in Nova Scotia, during the present season, the secretary of the treasury permitted the collector of this port to despatch the United States revenue cutter Hamilton on a cruise to Yarmouth and its vicinity, to inquire into the causes of such seizures, and to report the names of vessels and their Captains, thus detained by our provincial neighbors. Captain Sturgis, accompanied by col. Barnes, the naval officer of this port, immediately proceeded to Yarmouth, N. S. in the Hamilton, and thence up the bay of Fundy to this harbor, and near to Digby. The Hamilton also crossed over to Mount Desert, in Maine, where she landed two American fishermen taken on board at Yarmouth. Captain Sturgis has been absent but nine days on this cruise, having sailed eight hundred miles, and encountered much heavy weather. The citizens of Yarmouth returned the salute of the Hamilton, and treated the officers with much courtesy and kindness. It was the general opinion of the people of Yarmouth, that many of the seizures of American fishing vessels had been made without sufficient cause, and that the court of vice admiralty at Halifax, would release a majority of those now under seizure.

Col. Barnes and capt. Sturgis speak in the highest terms of praise of the exertions of our consular agent at Yarmouth, H. Grantham, esq. in behalf of the fishermen who, by the seizure of their vessels and provisions, have been left among strangers entirely destitute. We are permitted to make the statement of Mr. Grantham, which will furnish the facts in relation to the seizure of four of the vessels. There have been many other vessels seized at the Gut of Canso, but captain Sturgis could not learn their names, nor the names of the masters.

[Post.]

COMMERCE AND AGRICULTURE.

Georgia silk culture.—Owing to the large bounty wisely given to the state, the silk business is going ahead most vigorously. Around Athens alone, 457 pounds of cocoons have been raised, and brought in to county, and a silk journal is to be published. Mulberry trees are greatly wanted. It is expected two crops of silk can be made the same season.

Sheep Shearing.—We have heard of the large yield of wool from the back of the Bakewell and other sheep, recently introduced into the country at heavy prices. At a late shearing in the neighborhood of Warrenton, Fauquier county, Va. a sheep of an old stock, familiar to the farmers of that county, and known as the Whiting sheep, which was raised by Dr. Macrae, of Prince William, yielded, at fifteen months old, ten pounds, down weight. Another sheep, of the common stock raised by the owner, yielded at the second shearing 8½ pounds. In both cases, the tags and other filthy wool were not weighed. It appears to us, from these and other instances, that too little attention is paid to this branch of husbandry, and by far too little care is bestowed upon these valuable animals. Not excepting these counties in which the raising of sheep is the predominant interest, we think of few of all the earth, the best adapted to it. We have millions of acres on which the plough cannot be employed, which might be rendered highly profitable sheep walks. We have, too, regions adapted to the growth of the different varieties of the sheep—we have the warm plain for the coarser wools, and the mountain for the finer, with markets to consume all we can slaughter for the table. [Jeffersonian.]

Wool.—The Boston Price Current gives the annexed minute statement of the wool market—the supply and demand:

The season for sheep-shearing has passed, and we learn that there has been quite a large clip, and that the growers generally are convinced that they will not be able to obtain the extravagant prices, which a few months since was expected would be realized. In consequence of some advance in prices of woollen goods, last autumn, there was manifested by manufacturers, a strong disposition to lay in heavy supplies of wool, and an undue demand for the article was created, thereby causing a large advance in price, which was far from being warranted, even if the highest prices for goods, which were anticipated had been realized. But instead of any permanent improvement in woollens to any great extent, the advance which had taken place was not maintained, and prices receded to nearly the lowest point at which they had been during the preceding year. The consequence has been, that manufacturers generally have not been doing a profitable business in many cases, a saving business, and will not, for any length of time, continue their operations under such an unfavorable state of things. Already several establishments have stopped a portion of their machinery, and others will do so, unless the prices of wool shall justify their going on. Some manufacturers have sold their woollen machinery at a great loss, and are preparing to work cotton. We have information from the western part of Pennsylvania, that the growers are selling their wool at an advance of about five cents per lb. on the lowest prices realized last year. The wool grown in that region, is the best produced in the country. The quantity is very large, and is likely to be in market quite early this season. Prices range there from 35 to 55c. In some very choice flocks coming from 50 to 55c. In New York sales are making at from 30 to 50c. and in Vermont at from 30 to 50c. No new wool has yet been brought to the principal markets, and as prices cannot be fixed until sales have been effected there, we omit quotations for the present. The supply of pulled wool is limited, and sales continue to be made without any material change, as regards prices. Of coarse foreign wool there is not a large supply, but sufficient to meet the present demand, and prices are firm.

Unprecedented weight of sheep and wool.—When the sheep at Spout Run were sheared, on the 15th of May last, a yearling ram and five of the ewes were weighed, as follows: The ram, 174 lbs. his fleece 5 lbs. 1st ewe, 166 lbs. fleece 7½ lbs. 2d ewe, 170 lbs. 3d ewe, 190 lbs. fleece 10 lbs. 4th ewe, 164 lbs. fleece 5 lbs. 5th ewe, 164 lbs. fleece 5 lbs. Only two are considered at all above average weight of the flock. The wool was clean-washed, and otherwise the fleeces would have weighed from 7½ to 10 lbs. and the ewes were all suckling lambs. These two considerations taken into view, it is believed to be the greatest exhibit of weight of carcass and fleece ever made in the United States by a flock of ewes.—These sheep were raised and improved by my friend Mr. Thomas H. Burwell, of Spout Spring, Clarke county, Va. [Worcester Virginian.]

Washington's opinion of agriculture.—The following is an extract of a letter from general Washington to sir Arthur Young, who was distinguished for his devotion to agricultural pursuits:

"The more I am acquainted with agricultural affairs, the better I am pleased with them; inasmuch, that I can not where find so great satisfaction as in those ancient and useful pursuits. In indulging the feelings, and endeavoring to reflect how much more delightful to the unenlaced mind is the task of making improvements in the earth than all the vain glory which can be acquired, or envying it by the most uninterfered career of covetousness. The design of this observation is only to show how much, as a member of human society, I feel myself obliged by your labors to render respectable and advantageous an employment which is more congenial to the natural disposition of mankind than any other."

Marblehead fisheries.—The Salem Gazette contains a statement of the number of vessels engaged in the cod fishery, owned in Marblehead. This number is 53. Of these, 82 fish on the Grand Bank of Newfoundland, and 3 on the coast of Labrador. The number of tons engaged is 6,855—amount of bounty paid, $27,023. The bounty is $3 per ton for vessels of 90 tons and upwards—and $4 per ton for vessels under 90 tons. The vessel must be engaged 4 months to be entitled to the bounty. The average tonnage of the vessels is 80.3-4. The average number of hands employed is 7, making a total of 593 men and boys.

Martinique.—The French consul at New York has furnished the editor of the American the annexed official document respecting the trade of Martinique.

Important notice to commerce.—From Martinique. The consul general of France in the United States has received notice from his excellency, rear admiral —, governor of Martinique, and commander of the French naval force in the Antilles, that the Aréop, (free port), provisionally established at St. Pierre's, has been definitely authorized by royal ordinance since the 10th April last.

His excellency, the governor, announces equally that he has just authorized the exportation of sugars to foreign countries.

These two acts of the administration are of the greatest importance, not only to Martinique, but to the United States. The closest intercourse will be established between the two countries, and numerous adventures will be immediately undertaken—the New York shippers, who carry the produce of the United States to Martinique, being sure of finding there an advantageous re-urn freight.

For a year past the colony of Martinique has experienced the daily benefits of a wise, prudent and paternal administration. His excellency, rear admiral —, whose great capacity and services are too well known to need being recalled here, has comprehended the whole importance of his high and difficult station; and by his late measures, calculated to revive the prosperity of the colony, he abundantly justified the confidence of government, and all the flattering hopes of his administration, which the colonists had indulged.

The Union canal.—We learn from the Harrisburg (Pa.) Intelligence, that the bill authorizing the governor to subscribe $400,000 to the stock of the Union canal company, to be expended in enlarging the canal, has passed both branches of the legislature. It also contains an appropriation for the relief of the Danville and Pottsville rail road company.

Duty upon oil. The committee delegated by our citizens to present a memorial to the president of the United States relating to the recent decision of the treasury department, have proceeded to Washington in the fulfillment of that mission. If there be any particular branch of their commerce upon which the American people have ever looked with much pride, it is that which is connected with the adventurous employment of whaling. In the infancy of the trade, the exploits of our whalemen could call forth from Burke the beautiful encomium he then passed upon them, how much more do their present daring exploits entitle them not only to our admiration, but also to our protection! If there is a branch then, of our commerce that should be sustained and fostered by the national government, it is that which has relation to our fisheries. Aside from the advantage derived by the navy from the fisheries, which form a school in which brave and hardy seamen are trained for the defence of our national rights, the latter also deserve encouragement as their products are so much wealth gained from the ocean.

The decision of the treasury department is, however, only in keeping with the hostility that the present administration has ever shown toward every kind of enterprise; and in this only can it be found in inconsistency with their measures. In the memorial adopted by our citizens, (which we regret that we are not yet at liberty to publish), it was stated upon the information furnished by our oldest citizens, many years since engaged in the whaling business, that the practice of furnishing vessels employed in the whale fishery with registers, originated in the conviction, on the part of the government officers, that that document, as an evidence of the national character of the vessel, would be more certainly respected and insure greater protection than the enrolment or licence, which, until very recently, has never been accompanied by the sea letter on the Mediterranean passport, and also as furnishing peculiar advantages in foreign ports, not otherwise attainable in vessels thus employed.

As an evidence that the recent decision must be in its effects at least entirely opposed to the spirit and intention of the law, it has been ascertained that in a correspondence in the year 1793, between the then collector of this port and the comptroller of the treasury, the collector was expressly advised to furnish registers in all cases in which they should be desired by the owners or agents of vessels employed in the whale fishery; and subsequently the whole subject has remained almost entirely under advisement of the officers of the customs, without the remotest thought or suspicion on either side of any infraction of law, or liability to the severe penalties now demanded under the recent circular of the comptroller of the treasury.

We do not deem it necessary to extend our remarks at this time, the more especially as we shall, probably, in a few days, be at liberty to publish the document and correspondence to which we have referred. [New Bedford Mercury.]

LAW CASES.

From the Boston Atlas.

The license law of Mr. Jacobs. This morning justice Simmons delivered the opinion of the court upon the questions raised by Mr. Hallett, in the case of George C. Jacobs, convicted of selling spirituous liquors, in a less quantity than fifteen gallons, without a license. The principal question, as the public are already aware, was, whether the court have power to enforce the payment of fines, incurred under the present license law, by imprisonment.

The opinion of the court was written out at much length, and occupied about half an hour in the delivery. We have been politely favored, by justice Simmons, with the privilege of copying the manuscript, but have not room for the document to-day.

The substance of the opinion was this. The court had no doubt about the power to commit. They agreed with Mr. Hallett in the position that there is no special power to imprison given in the statute of 1833, either by that statute or by the 47th chapter of the revised statutes; but they were clearly of opinion that they possessed this power under a general principle of law, and by the common practice of courts, which had never been called in question before. This power, they believed, was also recognized by inference, in the revised statutes, in numerous instances; provision having been made, for certain proceedings, when this power had been exercised.

The court therefore directed the clerk to declare, that Geo. C. Jacobs, convicted of a violation of the license law, and sentenced to pay a fine of $10 and costs, having refused to pay the same, stand committed until this sentence be complied with, or until released by process of law.

The number of persons collected in Court street, and about the court house, was quite as large as on any former occasion during the progress of the case, but the people appeared less excited, and less disposed to create a disturbance.

The hour for the long expected riot had now arrived. The coach in which it was supposed that Mr. Jacobs would be carried to the jail, stood at the door. A pathway had been made by the officers, from the court house to the carriage. The city marshal and the high sheriff was seen bustling about, upon the steps of the court house, and in the open space in the crowd. The door of the coach was opened—the steps let down. The crowd clambered upon the fences, and carriages and omnibuses, and appeared at every window, and upon the house tops. Expectation was on tiptoe. The driver mounted his box, and took the reins in hand. The eagerness of the crowd increased. There was very little excitement, except the excitement of eager curiosity, and no noise or confusion. At length, that the elapsd, but still the prisoner did not appear. The city marshal then came out, and placed a small bundle in the coach. The steps were folded up, the door was closed, and the empty coach drove off! A few faint cheers announced its departure, and all was over! Two thousand people looked at each other and laughed! They caught the idea in a moment. It was a true Yankee trick. The coach, and the show of force in front of the court house was a mere gull. While they had been patiently watching for their man at one end of the court house, he had gone quietly out by another door in the rear, and was no doubt safely lodged in Leverett street jail. The news soon spread, and the assembled multitude soon dispersed.

Mr. Jacobs remained in prison but a short time. His fine and the costs of prosecution, were paid by a friend, and he was immediately set at liberty. We understand that it is his intention to bring, against the justices of the police court, a case of false imprisonment, fixing the damages at $5,000, for the purpose of further testing the question of the right to imprison in such cases.

We learn, also, from good authority, that about one hundred men, properly armed, with clubs and watch-hooks, were placed in the basement of the court house on this occasion, under the direction of the sheriffs, ready to assist the police, in case of necessity, in arresting any riotous or disorderly persons. Fortunately their assistance was not needed; but had they been called into action, we have no doubt they would have proved highly servicable. We cannot but commend the good sense and judiciousness of the sheriff, in preferring such a force to support the law, rather than by resorting to the dreadful alternative of military power.

New York superior court, Saturday June 22.

Before Judge Oakley.

Liability of shipping agents. William H. Beatty & Co. vs. Stark W. Lewis.—This was an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract, committed under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiffs are a mercantile firm doing business in Baltimore, and the defendant belongs to this city, and is agent for the schooner Mohican, trading between this port and Baltimore.

On the 14th of March, 1837, Messrs. W. G. Bull & Co. of this city, agents for the plaintiffs, shipped on board the Mohican 50 hhds. of sugar for Baltimore. The vessel being advertised to sail with immediate despatch, it was expected that the sugars would arrive out in season to sell for the then existing high price of the article.

It was afterwards learned that the vessel did not sail till after the 20th of March, and did not arrive in Baltimore till the 13th of April. The consequence was, that the shipment of sugar, instead of fetching the "top of the market" as was anticipated, the sale was made at the full decline of the article, which made a difference in the result of $2 00 per hundred weight to the plaintiffs. It was to recover this difference in price that the present suit was brought. The bill of lading for the sugar was produced and admitted.

For the defence it was contended that the voyage had been prosecuted with all due and reasonable diligence. And proof was adduced to show that after the 14th of March a storm of some ten days duration occurred which caused a corresponding delay in the voyage.

The jury under a brief charge by the court rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs of the amount claimed, with interest, viz: $512 73.

Counsel for the plaintiffs, D. Lord, jr. for the defendant, Griffin, sen. [Courier.]

Steamboat law. A case of some interest to steamboat commanders and officers, as well as to steamboat travellers, was lately tried in the court of common pleas of Hamilton county, Ohio. The plaintiff, William C. Lavrenson, sought to recover damages against Beech, Stewart & Holley, the captain, clerk and mate of the steamboat Gazelle, for an assault and battery alleged to have been committed by them upon him. From a report of the case, as given in the Cincinnati Gazette, it appears that on March 3, 1837, the plaintiff took passage on board the Gazelle, at Portsmouth, for Cincinnati; and that about one o'clock next morning, while on her way to the latter place, "the defendants caught plaintiff, and dragged him to the side of the boat, where one of the defendants flourished what one of the witnesses thought a knife and used abusive and threatening language. Plaintiff was then forced to the stern of the boat, put in the yawl, taken by Holley towards the shore, beaten in the yawl, and before reaching the shore was thrown into the river. When put into the yawl, plaintiff requested defendants to give him valise, containing clothes and letters of introduction to respectable persons in Cincinnati, which was refused. Plaintiff was left by the boat on the Kentucky shore, sixty miles from Cincinnati, about one o'clock at night."

This was the charge of the plaintiff, fully sustained by testimony, whose character for "integrity and correct bearing," was also established by a number of witnesses. The defence set up was, that the plaintiff was a deck passenger; that he wore a drab coat; and that some man wearing a drab coat was seen to enter the cabin of the boat, with his candle.—Contrary to a "custom of the river," to the effect that "whenever a deck passenger entered the cabin, he was put on shore."

The court, in charging the jury, stated that the defence rather tended to aggravate than to justify the case on the part of defendants. The jury were probably of the same opinion, as they rendered a verdict of $6,766 for the plaintiff.

In the Boston United States circuit court, on Monday, captain Frederick C. Taber, master of the whale ship Isabella, was convicted of having maliciously, and without justifiable cause, put on shore at Navigators' Island, in the Pacific ocean, Benjamin F. Heath, the second mate of the ship. Captain Taber moved for a new trial, on the ground of an alleged misdirection of the jury by the charge of the judge. This motion will be argued before the whole court. The penalty for the offence, as affixed by the statute, is a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding six months. The reason assigned for leaving the second mate as above was his having been found by the captain on the night previous, asleep on his watch.

An extra of the Ontario Messenger published at New York, and dated June 21st, gives the following particulars of the trial of Mackenzie, the patriot, for a breach of the neutrality law:

The trial of Wm. Lyon Mackenzie, for a violation of the neutral law of 1813, which was conmenced in this village yesterday morning, was brought to a close this afternoon, by a verdict from the jury of GUILTY.

The testimony in the case was but a recapitulation of a few of those facts with which the Navy Island affair had made the whole country familiar. Mackenzie had no counsel; nor did he introduce any testimony, that testimony which he proposed to introduce having been deemed inadmissible.

He addressed the court and jury after the evidence was closed, in a speech about eight hours long, which was made up most of historical matter in reference to himself and the patriot cause, and of divers political speculations which had little or no connexion with the question which was before the jury. He showed much ability, however, and his remarks were not infrequently, really eloquent.

Mr. Benton, the district attorney, occupied about an hour in presenting the argument on the part of the United States.

Judge Thompson charged the jury at considerable length, giving a very able and lucid exposition of the law and the facts of the case. The charge was decided by adverse to the defendant.

The jury was out three hours.

Majorie heard the verdict with calmness, though it is said that he had confidently anticipated an acquittal.

The sentence of the court was pronounced upon him soon after the verdict. It was, that he be imprisoned, during the term of eighteen months, in the county jail of Monroe county, and pay a fine of ten dollars.

At the Loudoun county court, on Monday last, Philip Nelson, a free colored man, was arraigned on a charge of being concerned directly or indirectly in the circulation of abolition papers, amongst the colored population. The evidence developed against Nelson (says the Leesburg Washingtonian) was not sufficiently strong to justify the court in executing the law to its full extent against him, which would have been transportation into slavery for life, but sufficiently to implicate him in being connected with the circulation of abolition papers to such an extent as to justify the court in ordering him and his entire family to leave the state within the period of twelve months, never to return to it again. During the investigation of Nelson's case, it appeared that Gerard a slave, had been the active agent in circulating these fire-brand publications among the slaves. He was, therefore, immediately arrested, and, on the next day, the court had him brought before it, and, after trying him on the charge of circulating these incendiary papers, which was fully proved, sentenced him to receive twenty lashes, and to be transported into slavery for life.

International law—Brazil. The public prints in this country have alluded to an occurrence which happened in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro, and which is represented to have caused great popular excitement in that city. The unfortunate event alluded to had been the subject of correspondence between Mr. Ouseley, her Britannic majesty's charge d'affaires, and senior Oliveira, the minister for foreign affairs. Mr. Ouseley's despatch to the British commodore Sullivan, which we extract from the Journal do Commercio, the government paper of Brazil, will explain the circumstances of the case. Mr. Ouseley was some years ago secretary of the British embassy in this city.

The government journal speaks of the sincere desire exhibited by her Britannic majesty's charge d'affaires to give ample satisfaction to the government and nation.

[Globe.]

Rio, April 25, 1839.
Sir: It is with extreme pain that I am to inform you of a distressing event, which has been officially communicated to me by H. E. the senior Candido Baptista de Oliveira, minister for foreign affairs.

By representations made to me by the government of this imperial majesty, I am informed that on the 21st inst. the steamboat Especuladora, returning from the island of Paqueta to this city, was fired into by the Ganges, one of the vessels lately captured, with Africans on board, and that a Brazilian gentleman on board was mortally wounded.

The communication of Senior Oliveira does not suggest that there was the slightest provocation for this act, nor is it said that it was accidental. Under these impressions, and until further explanations can be had of the origin of this painful event, or terms are so strong to express the censure and indignation with which such an offence should be viewed.

The painful regrets of a friendly nation should of only be excited by such an act of barbarity, but am sure, sir, that as commander-in-chief of H. B.

M's naval forces on this station, you will participate with me the feelings which compel me, not only as H. B. M.'s charge d'affaires, but as an Englishman, sincerely to deplore this event, and to desire the punishment of the individuals who may have committed this unprovoked crime.

I am persuaded, sir, that I shall have your cooperation in investigating the circumstances of this case, and obtaining proofs for the purpose of justice. For this object, I now request officially, that you will be pleased to receive on board your frigate, any legal or competent authorities, or such as the government may appoint to investigate this subject, and render every facility in obtaining evidence.

I am informed that, at half past four o'clock this evening, judicial authorities appointed by the imperial government for this object, will repair on board of her Britannic majesty's ship Stag, to obtain the necessary information.

Confiding in the sincerity with which you will aid my efforts on this occasion, I have the honor, &c. G. W. OUSELEY.

Com. Sullivan, commanding H. B. M. naval forces.

The bark inspection case. We published on Monday morning, a statement from the Philadelphia Commercial Advertiser, in reference to the seizure and detention by the bark inspector at this port of a load of bark, which, on account of circumstances over which the captain of the vessel had no control, was brought into the harbor of Baltimore to be re-shipped. We then expressed the opinion that our inspection laws would not bear the inspector out in what appeared to us to be an unwarranted oppression. It will be seen by the annexed report, which we find in an afternoon paper, that the state, through her agent, has been non-suited on the claims made, and we do not see, if the matter was carried still further, that damages might not be recovered.

INSPECTION OF GROUND BARK.

Trial of an important case before a magistrate. State of Maryland vs. John Smith, before William Eichelberger, esq. justice of the peace of the state of Maryland, in and for the city of Baltimore. Thirty-two warrants for the recovery of $20 pecuniary each.

The above cases arose under the following circumstances:

Caleb Ross, a citizen and resident of the state of Delaware, had contracted with Messrs. Weil & Barratt, merchants of Philadelphia, for the sale and delivery of a large quantity of ground black oak bark, a part of which had been delivered. Some time in the early part of the month of June, he shipped at Laurel in Delaware, on board of a schooner owned in Delaware, but licensed at Vienna, in Maryland, (there being no port of entry at Laurel) thirty-two bchs. of ground black oak bark, the growth and manufacture of Delaware, to be carried to Philadelphia by way of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, in fulfilment of the above contract. When the schooner arrived at the canal, the captain learned that, owing to a breach in the banking of the canal, he could not proceed through, and being without orders from Mr. Ross, and his vessel not being in condition to proceed to Philadelphia by way of the Chesapeake, he sailed to Baltimore, where he remained with the bark on board until he wrote to Mr. Ross, by whom he was directed to obey the orders of Mr. Smith, the defendant, in regard to the bark. Mr. Smith, in pursuance of the direction of Mr. Ross, ordered the captain to put the bark on board of another vessel for the purpose of being conveyed to Philadelphia, which was accordingly done. Both of the vessels lay in the port of Baltimore, without landing the bark, or any part thereof, on any wharf in the city of Baltimore. After the bark had thus been transferred, the inspector of bark for the city of Baltimore, called on Mr. Smith, and insisted on having the bark inspected, when Mr. Smith informed him that he did not think that the bark, under the circumstances, was liable to inspection.

The inspector then caused the bark to be seized and taken to the inspection warehouse, where the same was inspected—and marked 24 quality. In this state of things, Mr. Smith, for the purpose of avoiding further trouble and controversy, offered to pay the price of inspection and necessary expenses attending the same, still insisting, however, that the bark was not liable to inspection—but the inspector refused to deliver the same, insisting that it had been forfeited under the provisions of the act of assembly of 1821, ch. 77, which provides that no ground black oak bark shall be exported from the port of Baltimore until the same shall be inspected; and also, that the person or persons who shall have shipped the same without inspection, shall forfeit the same, together with $20, for each and every cask so shipped, &c.

The price of inspection, and expenses attending the same, were then tendered by Mr. Smith to the inspector, and by him refused. A replevin issued delivered to Mr. Smith, by whom it was sent to Philadelphia. Afterwards the above warrants were issued against him for the purpose of recovering the penalty of $20 for each hoghead, and the cases came up for trial on Thursday last at 4 P. M. The counsel for the plaintiff contended that the bark had been shipped for exportation contrary to the provisions of the inspection laws, and consequently forfeited, together with the penalties, for which the warrants were issued.

The counsel for the defendant contended. 1st. That the transfer of bark from one vessel to the other, as above stated, made no difference in this case; that the case should be considered precisely the same as if the bark had not been transferred, from one to the other, but continued in the same vessel in which it was originally shipped; and that, therefore, it had not been shipped in the port of Baltimore for exportation, contrary to the provisions of the act aforesaid.

2d. That if this was a case which came within the strict letter of the inspection law, the legislature of Maryland had no right, under the constitution of the United States, to pass such law, as it was a violation of the 8th and 10th sections of the 1st article of the constitution of the U. States, and therefore, void.

3d. That the act of 1821 ch. 77, under which the penalty was claimed, was so far a penal one, and should be strictly construed, and that it applied to the owner of the bark who shipped the same contrary to its provisions, and not a mere agent, such as the defendant was. The cases were held by the justice under consideration until yesterday (Monday) morning, when he rendered judgments of non-suit in each case.

Wm. J. Cole and John Scott, esqrs. for the plaintiff, and Wm. H. Collins, esq. for the defendant.

A somewhat uncommon case was tried last week at Lowell. It was an action of trespass, Montgomery, es. Parker, for taking and carrying away a letter put into the post office for plaintiff. It appeared in evidence that Parker took the letter, which was written by a lady, from the post office, broke the seal, and read its contents to another person, to prove an assertion he had made that the writer of the letter and the plaintiff "kept company." The letter was afterwards shown and read to two other persons by defendant.

The defendant's counsel insisted that the plaintiff ought to prove that the letter was a real letter, actually written by the signer to the plaintiff—but the court ruled otherwise. Counsel then contended that an action for trespass could not be maintained; the plaintiff never had possession of the letter, and it was not his property when taken from the office; that if the action were sustained, the damages should be small—it was not a case for smart money. The plaintiff's counsel contended that when a letter was written by one person, directed to another, and put into the post office for that person, the person to whom it was directed, was the owner, and entitled to the immediate possession, and might therefore maintain an action of trespass. It was a case for exemplary damages—the conduct of the defendant was flagitious.

The court decided that a letter is property, and the damages for taking it away may be estimated. An article devoted, set aside and marked off for a person and put in the way of conveyance is the property of the person to whom it is so devoted, &c. Possession follows ownership of personal property, if a man has the ownership, and is entitled to the immediate possession, he may maintain an action of trespass. This was a fit case for exemplary damages. Judgment for the plaintiff: damages $15.

The newspaper press in France. A correspondent of the National Intelligencer says that by the laws of France the proprietors of every newspaper are compelled by law to insert the reply of any individual who may have been named or attacked in their journal, (from the king down to the beggar), under a penalty of from fifty to five hundred francs, without prejudice to any damages to which the article may have given rise. This reply must be inserted in the number of the day which follows the receipt of it, and without charge, unless the reply be more than double the length of the original article; or, paragraph, in which case it must be paid for as an advertisement.

If such a law prevailed here, some papers, if the persons slandered should avoid themselves of their rights, would contain nothing for months but replies to their slanders. [Baltimore Patriot.]

CHRONICLE.

Intemperance and crime. Josiah Hussey, esq. of Nantucket, who has been a magistrate for many years, has published an article in reply to an inquiry, as to the proportion of crimes committed by drunkards, that have come under his cognizance during the last twenty years. He states, that from an examination of his docket, he feels warranted in saying, that about ninety male offenders out of a hundred were drunkards—and that among the females that have been brought before him for various crimes and offences, seven-eighths of them were grossly intemperate.

The beautiful steamship Natchez, built in Baltimore, for the New York and Natchez trade, was sold at auction in New York, on Friday, the 17th inst. for $10,000. The purchaser was the only bidder, and he had a claim on her for more than three-times the amount she brought. Originally she cost over $100,000.

Foreign engineer. The chevalier Francis de Guernsey is now on a visit in this country for the purpose of inspecting our internal improvements. The chevalier constructed the first rail road in Belgium, and after introducing that great improvement of the age into Russia, by the successful construction of the rail road from St. Petersburg to Moscow, arrived in the United States in November last. He has already passed over 2,000 miles of rail roads in the United States, and expects to pass over at least 1,000 more before returning to Europe.

A bill has passed both houses of the legislature of Pennsylvania, and received the signature of the governor, appropriating $50,000 to the constructing of the Cross-cut canal, connecting the Pennsylvania and Erie canals at Conowingo, in the State of Ohio. This appropriation enables the company to complete the entire work by next spring, and thus open an artificial inland navigation, extending about 500 miles, through the states of Pennsylvania and Ohio.

A fire occurred at Port Gibson, (Miss.) on the 1st inst. which destroyed a large portion of that town. A letter to the editor of the New Orleans Louisianaian, says:

The loss of property is estimated at not less than seven hundred thousand dollars—by some persons to one million. Most of the principal merchants are utterly ruined. The court house was totally destroyed; and the whole of the principal business street, is nothing but a heap of ruins. The houses were principally built of brick. I have just returned from the scene of calamity, and I have been more moved by the sight of the calamity than at this. The citizens and the strangers in town were in the greatest agitation; some of the unfortunate inhabitants were frantic with loss. The circuit court of Claiborne county was in session last week, but this terrible calamity has caused the judge to adjourn the court, the records and papers to be removed from the burning court house being in too much confusion to be arranged easily for several days. It is to be hoped the sympathies of the whole country will be for the unhappy people of Port Gibson.

Manufacturers at Lowell. There are eight cotton manufactorys at Lowell, Miss. which turn out an aggregate of about a million and a quarter of yards of cloth weekly.

Large cocoonery. The New York Star states that the Messrs. Prince, at Flushing, have in their cocoonery, a million and a quarter of silk worms, now feeding. The number is sufficient to produce about 500 bushels of cocoons, and 100 lbs. of silk. They have also a large quantity of silk worms' eggs in their ice house, whose hatching is thus retarded for the purpose of producing successive crops.

The following resolutions were adopted by the whig members of the Connecticut legislature at its late session:

Resolved, That the confidence we have ever felt in the integrity, pure and talents of Henry Clay, is confirmed and strengthened by the daily history of his public life, as well as by the constant and increasing attachment of his fellow citizens throughout the United States.

Resolved, That of all the candidates proposed for the presidency of the United States, we prefer Henry Clay. But as we regard principle more than men, and our country more than our party, we will cheerfully unite in the support of the candidate who shall be nominated by our political friends in national convention.

The Delaware Journal states that the ship Jefferson, of Baltimore, has been purchased by the Wilmington whaling company, and is to be immediately employed in the whaling business. This is the fifth vessel owned by this company. Two of their ships, recently arrived with full cargoes, are now getting ready to depart on another cruise.

A correspondent of the Savannah Republican makes the following statement of the distances and changes on the route of travel between that city and New York:

Table with columns: Distances, Passage, and amounts for routes from Savannah to Charleston, Wilmington, Weldon, Pottsmouth, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York.

General Washington's teeth. A few days since an engraved profile was shown to us, under which were these words: "John Greenwood, dentist to his excellency George Washington." This led to further inquiries, when we were informed that Gen. Washington, in the latter part of his life, wore a complete set of artificial teeth, on both jaws, which were manufactured by this Mr. Greenwood who then resided in the city of New York. Washington usually had two sets on hand, in order to meet any sudden emergency, in case those in use were broken. A letter is extant in that it might be prepared to speak before the ensuing congress. The last tooth, which was extracted from the general, being carefully preserved came ultimately into the possession of the son of Mr. Greenwood, also an eminent dentist of New York, who had it secured very choicely in a gold set, many years ago, and which is still kept, and believed to be the only organic relic, not extant, of the great and good man.

Parisian embassy. The Madisonian learns that Mr. L. O'Sullivan, of the United States Magazine and Democratic Review, has been nominated to the secretaryship of the legation at Paris, and only awaits the approbation of governor Cass, our minister there, for the consummation of the appointment. Mr. O'Sullivan is a gentleman of fine talents and will prove a valuable member of the embassy.

Fatal accident. Yesterday evening, a man apparently intoxicated, fell over a fence, directly over a rail of the Southwark rail road; a car full of passengers passing over his neck separated the unfortunate man's head from his shoulders. This is another sad example for those who unduly use intoxicating drinks.

Light houses lighted with gas. The light house at Balls Bluff, in Chateaugue county, N. York, is lighted by natural gas, which escapes from fissures in the rocks near the shore. The supply is a never failing one and no light equals it in power. A rude reservoir has been erected over one of the fissures in the rock, by which the gas is conveyed in pipes to the light house. The Buffalovertiser remarks that the light gas is of a nature similar to that found in Portland or Barcelona, in the neighborhood of Erdunna, a few miles from Barcelona, and that the supply obtained from them has been used for lighting that flourishing village; but few have any knowledge of the fact above mentioned. It is certainly curious that gas of so pure a quality should issue from the earth in such quantities, and for such a length of time.

Troubles ahead. The annexed letter which we copy from the Sandwich Island Gazette, shows that the English mean to establish themselves permanently in the Oregon territory. The forts which they are building, ostensibly to defend themselves against the Indians, will in due time be employed against Americans:

Extract of a letter from a friend of Columbia river: "The company expect to build a fort on Vancouver's island this summer, for the raising of furs, cattle and sheep. There are extensive plains on the south east side of the island, well calculated for pasturage. They have already about one thousand sheep at the head of Pagets Sound, also on the Cowitch and Will-a-mett (two branches of the Columbia) they have large herds of cattle. In a few years they anticipate they will import annually to England, cargoes of furs, cattle and wool. The two Catholic priests who came out this year are to be established on the Lawlich to enlighten the rising generation."

Horse thieves, in some states, fare worse than murderers. In Petersburg, Va. a fellow, who stole a horse and saddle, was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. The general synod of the Reformed Dutch church, at their late session in Philadelphia, passed resolutions with great unanimity, in favor of the colonization society.

Fire. The Planter's Hotel, with all the outbuildings, situated at the corner of Broadway and Broadway, was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 18th inst. One or two small buildings on the opposite side of the street were also destroyed. All the property burned, except one small and unimportant building, belonging to Samuel Hale, esq. The loss is estimated at $25,000, on which there is insurance as follows: The Gloucester insurance company, $8,000; Hartford insurance company, $7,000; Phoenix office, London, $5,000. Among the travellers staying at the hotel was Mr. Buckingham, the oriental traveller, his wife and son,—probably all of his valuable manuscripts were saved from the flames.

Army movements. The steamboat Charleston arrived at Savannah on Friday the 21st inst. from Gregory's Ferry, with the following officers on board: Major B. Bennett, raymaster, U. S. A. Capt. Bryant, 2d dragons and family; also, Lieut. Ker, Graham and Arnold, of the same regiment—Lieut. Metcalf, ordnance, and Dr. Lamb, a surgeon, U. S. A. with two companies of the 2d dragons.

All of the officers before named, proceed, with the dragons, for Florida, excepting Major Bennett and Dr. Bennett, who return to Florida in a few days.

Two companies of the 2d regiment of dragons, (E and C) arrived at Fort Columbus, (New York harbor), from Florida, on Sunday last, in the brig Mary Bernard, under the command of Lieut. H. W. Merrill and Z. P. Inge.

The last of the Huguenots. Died at Charleston, South Carolina, on the 17th inst. Mr. Stephen Thomas in the 89th year of his age. Mr. T. was a native of St. Germain, France, who came to America on the 19th of August, A. D. 1750, and fled with an elder maiden sister to London, in 1764, to join the rev. Mr. Gibert, who with his congregation had also been compelled to seek an asylum from the persecutions which they endured in their native land. This congregation of exiles consisted of nearly one hundred persons; and when the remainder of the British fleet in safety on the 12th of April, 1764, where the subject of this notice has ever since resided. At an early period of the revolutionary struggle, Mr. T. returned to his native country on business, where he suffered a painful detention from his family for about three years. On his return, he was captured by the British fleet in the Chesapeake, and he remained some time a prisoner. At length, being exchanged he returned to Charleston, and immediately joined the troops in defence of his adopted country, was at the battle of Fort Mifflin, and afterwards was with general Marion to the close of the war.

New invention. A surgeon of Guernsey, Mr. Le Mesurier, has recently invented a new pump for slips and mines, on a principle infinitely superior, for all practical purposes, to any yet discovered. In this pump the piston is dispensed with, and a vacuum is produced by means of an air-tight rubber stretched over the top of the cylinder. Some of its peculiarities are the total absence of friction, the impossibility of getting choked by sand, wheat or even small stones, and a capability in a small sized one worked by one man, of delivering a hoghead of water in a minute and a half. Mr. Le Mesurier has been offered three thousand pounds for the patent.

Interest of Russia in American steam navigation. It is stated in the Pittsburg Gazette, that captain Pepin, who, in conjunction with lieutenant Sharonben, took the Russian naval engineer service, is invited to visit the United States, in order to make themselves acquainted with the steam navigation on those waters—has reached that city in the prosecution of the duty confided to him. Among other matters which engaged his attention at Pittsburg was the U. S. snag boat, for the removal of snags from the rivers, of which he has made a drawing, with an explanation on rings. Some of his peculiarities are the Don and Volga, and other Russian rivers.

J. Fenimore Cooper. In the last Cooperstown, (Ontario county), Republican, there is a paragraph which states that the grand jury of that county had just found bills for libel, at the instigation of Mr. Cooper, against Mr. Webb, editor of the Courier and Enquirer; Mr. Weed, editor of the Albany Evening Journal; and Mr. Fellet, editor of the Chateaugue Telegraph.

Curious case. When Dr. Theller, the patriot, was taken prisoner near Malden, by the British, he was taken money and a watch about him to the value of $55. Of this, according to the practice of war, he was immediately robbed by the captors. Dr. Reynolds, of Malden, was one of the capturing party, and he happening to be in Detroit, was arrested at the suit of Theller for the debt. The case has since been tried before a justice at Detroit, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of Dr. Theller, for $25 and a good deal more than that, as the money was by order of his commanding officer.

Vigorous old age. Says the Salem Gazette, Capt Benjamin Webber, of Gloucester, a veteran of the revolution, now 84 years old, started from home about 1 o'clock in the morning, on foot, walked to Salem, a distance of about 15 miles, and took the 10 o'clock train of cars for Boston. After walking a good deal, he then took the afternoon cars for Salem. On arriving at Salem, he resumed his homeward walk, and arrived within a few miles of his residence, when he was taken up by the Gloucester stage, and carried the rest of the way. All this was accomplished in less than two hours, and the veteran had walked more than thirty miles, and travelled on the rail road about the same distance.

FLORIDA. From the Army and Navy Chronicle. Judging from the tone of the newspapers in that territory, we should be induced to suppose that a great degree of excitement existed with respect to the late pacification of the Indians; but other accounts both oral and written, give a contrary impression, and represent that the excitement is confined to those who are interested in continuing the war, or for some cause desire the total expulsion of the Indians.

Among the latest and most positive testimony that we have seen, of the peaceable intentions of the Indians, and of the satisfaction of the inhabitants at the conclusion of hostilities, is contained in a letter written to major general Macomb by colonels Warren and Mills, who commanded each a regiment of Florida militia, have traversed the whole territory, and are familiar with the views and feelings of the citizens. This letter is so much to the point, that we requested and have obtained a copy for publication.

Jacksonville, Florida, June 15, 1839.

General: You will no doubt have been somewhat surprised at seeing by the papers of St. Augustine and Tallahassee, that great excitement is stated by them to prevail in the country, in consequence of the treaty or provisional agreement entered into by you with the Indians. You may be assured that this feeling exists no where in the country. The nerve and sinews of the counties of Alachua, Columbia, Duval and Nassau, who have suffered so much by this war, most readily agreed long since that the expulsion of the Indians by an armed force was a matter to be terminated some twenty years hence; and having suffered such great losses of property, as well as of life, particularly for the last year, hail with great satisfaction the present arrangement, as affording the only probable assurance of peace and quiet.

Those persons who are so loud in their denunciations, are for the most part men who have never been through the country at all, and are therefore unacquainted with the nature of the country or of the enemy to be contended with. It will readily be admitted that it would be much better to have the Indians removed; but if that object cannot be effected without such immense sacrifices, we say peace is actually indispensable.

If they will keep to the limits assigned them, there will be no difficulty between the citizens and them; and if, at any future time, the government desire to remove them, it can much more readily be effected after all angry feelings shall have subsided, and when the country bordering the limits assigned them will be settled up. With sentiments of high respect, we are, general, your most obedient servants,

JOHN WARREN,
W. J. MILLS.

Maj. gen. A. Macomb, commanding U. S. army.
VOL. VI.—SRO. 19.

Garry's Ferry, E. F. June 18th, 1839.

Since my last, nothing of interest has transpired. Indians, wandering in all directions, are daily met by the expresses that constantly pass between this depot and the numerous posts north of the Withlacoochee, and seem peacefully inclined.

It has doubtless been suggested to your mind on perusing general Macomb's "order" of the 18th of May, announcing the termination of hostilities, that his arrangement is a tacit but free avowal of the fraudulence of the Payne's Landing treaty, which produced this atrocious and expensive war. A favorite system of policy of general Cass, while administering the affairs of the Indian department was to consummate all his treaties by force. I will instance the present case. He invested a commissioner with restrictive powers to negotiate with the Seminoles; and the ingenious architect of flimsy fabrications—such as Cass's Indian treaties—met and acquainted them of his being sent by the president to buy their lands if they would go west. They answered "no; we prefer remaining where we are."

"That won't do," said the colonel, "general Jackson's proviso is this land, and you must go west; here's the land he will give you in exchange." The negro interpreters being bribed with a promise of two hundred dollars each, had no difficulty in getting the Indians after they had been plied with whiskey to drunkenness, to yield their assent to the thing called treaty, and a deputation was hustled off to examine the western lands. Misrepresentation again took place, and the Indians signified their approbation of what they did not comprehend; the agents construed it into a ratification of a treaty, which the Indians have constantly declared was forced upon them. A war ensued. Twenty or more millions are expended; and the commanding general of the army finally sues for peace, and yields to his victors as much or more land than the Payne's Landing treaty contemplated defrauding them of? Another part of the general's order is worthy of comment. Instead of interdicting intercourse of whatever character, except by regularly constituted agents, and otherwise making it a penal offence, the general authorizes the commanding officers of posts to grant permission to whomsoever they may think proper. And for what? Who has business there unless they be agents of government? And do they require any other permission than the warrant of the president, which they carry in their pockets? But here's the evil. Officers having authority to grant or deny permission to applicants, unpopularity, nay, proscription is the lot of him who refuses; because none but the president's friends, for whose especial benefit the war was got up, seek intercourse from mercenary views, and to oppose them would be the warranto mori. The same evil exists in the present army regulation.—by the by, also got up by the general. If one officer exercises that judicious authority conferred by law, and prohibits the sullen crediting his (the officer's) company for more each month than one half their monthly pay, whilst another, less regardless of the interests or happiness of his men, permits the sutler to take all their pay—the former will be inevitably sacrificed to gratify the vengeance of the sutler, (who of course is a loco loco), and the latter officer renders himself the more popular. This frequently occurs.

The boat on the verge of departure, and the quartermaster's cry "be off captain," admonishes me to close for the present, with the promise of further views by next boat.

We copy the following from the Tallahassee Flo-ridian of the 22d ult.

The extract of a letter from Mr. Poinsett to a citizen of this territory, affords satisfactory evidence that the government have resolved that under no circumstances shall the Seminoles be suffered to remain permanently in Florida. The Washington Metropolis, a paper supposed to be in the confidence lately of this territory, confirms this determination of the executive, by information derived from "undoubted authority." So far so good. We learn governor Call has not been officially informed of the views of the government since gen. Macomb's arrangement.

Sir: I take the liberty of requesting the publication of the enclosed extract from a letter from the secretary at war, which places the arrangement made by Macomb in its true light. It clearly shows (that the administration have no idea of substituting the armistice made by gen. Macomb for the treaty of Payne's Landing:

"We must expect hostilities to be partially continued for a short period after an armistice; but, I am of opinion that the arrangement made by gen. Macomb will lead to the pacification of the country and enable me to remove the Indians from the territory much sooner than can be done by force."

BRANDON BANK. A respectable gentleman of this city, who has recently returned from a visit to Brandon, assures us that he was informed by the officers of the bank at that place, that they will, without doubt, redeem their issues by paying one-third the amount by the 1st of July next, giving post notes with 5 per cent. interest for the balance; and by the 1st of August they will resume entirely. The bank has recently received all her account sales of 52,000 bales from Humphreys & Biddle, through the house of Hobson & Gouch, of this city, and is also ready to draw on 8,000 bales of last year's advances a part of which were sold in New Orleans, and 7,000 bales which were sold in New York from Washington's press, Vicksburg, making in the whole 68,000 bales, which will probably average forty dollars per bale, making 2,400,000 dollars. The bank has only drawn for 1,200,000 dollars of which she has used but about 900,000 dollars.

If this statement be correct, and we have no reason to doubt it, we expect to see the Brandon bank come out all right after all. [N. Orleans Pic.]

SAFETY FUND BANK NOTES. By the following letter copied from the Argus of yesterday, it appears that the three banks in this city, which agreed to redeem the bills of the country safety fund banks, have given notice that such agreement shall cease "from and after the 27th of July next." This, we hesitate not to say, is a very judicious step on the part of the banks in this city; and we believe also that the country banks will be equally benefited. Unless some such arrangement is made as exists with the banks in Boston, the country banks will find their interests best promoted by making individual arrangements in this city for the redemption of their bills, or not, as they shall deem best.

New York, 26th June, 1839.

Sir: On the 18th of May last, the Bank of the State of New York, the Merchants' Exchange Bank and the Leather Manufacturers' Bank, renewed the arrangement with the western banks, until the first of August, 1840—either party having the privilege of discontinuing the arrangement, at any time prior to that date, after 30 days notice to that effect.

In the published report of the committee on behalf of the western banks, it is truly stated that the amount of safety fund bank notes, which had appeared for several weeks previous, had been so much larger than was anticipated, that the city banks had entered into the renewal of the arrangement with some reluctance, but the committee on behalf of the western banks, so strongly expressed an opinion that the pressure would cease after a few weeks, and knowing that last year, the influx of country bank notes greatly decreased about the first of June—and referring also to the right of ending the arrangement by giving 30 days notice, the city banks were induced to agree to the renewal.

The city banks were also greatly influenced in continuing the business, by a reluctance to break up an arrangement which was believed to be a great public convenience, and which had a tendency to give general confidence.

Since the 15th of May, however, the expectations then entertained, in relation to a diminished amount to be received, have not been realized; for, on the evening of Saturday the 22d inst, the Bank of the State of New York alone held the notes of the country banks to the amount of $1,788,002.—Another week commenced on Monday, when it took in $74,190; and on Tuesday $103,924, with a prospect that, by Saturday evening next, the bank will again hold more than $1,500,000.

Without, therefore, adverting to any other causes, the three city banks have come to the conclusion, that they have not the means to do justice to their city dealers and continue the arrangement.

☞ The three city banks accordingly hereby give notice, that from and after the 27th day of July next, they will cease taking the notes of the country banks under the arrangement made in May 1838, and renewed on the 18th of May, of this year. Very respectfully,

C. W. LAWRENCE, president.
R. WITHERS, cashier.
W. M. VERMILYE, cashier.
F. C. TUCKER, president.

THE PHILADELPHIA LOAN COMPANY. The Ledger states that the expected report of the committee was made to the meeting of creditors on Friday afternoon. The debts due by the company consist of $310,000 of certificates, $50,000 deposits, and $1,000 issue of small notes. The assets are stated at $280,000, details not mentioned. During the three years of its existence, the bad debts have been $135,000, and doubtful $30,000. The stock of the company is $500,000, of which $330,000 is pledged on stock notes, and $50,000 forfeited and purchased by the company, making the actual stock paid, $70,000. The committee recommended a rescission.

DYOTT'S MANUAL LABOR BANK. The mayor's decision. Jacob Ridgway, Daniel Mann and Thos W. Dyott, jr. appeared on Wednesday morning before the mayor, at 11 o'clock, when his honor delivered, in substance, the following opinion relative to certain charges preferred against them. We commend it to attention as a proper and dispassionate view of the position in which the defendants are placed, without any testimony having been heard in their favor:

"This is a case of conspiracy, in which certain individuals are charged with colluding together to do an unlawful act.

"It is one of deep interest to the parties concerned, and highly important to the community. I need not here remind the parties that this is only an examination by the mayor, in order to decide if there be probable cause for a judicial investigation; but it may be proper to suggest to others, who have heard so much testimony given here and spread before the public, that this is an ex parte examination, in which all the testimony is heard against the defendants, and none in their favor; and although it may be the duty of a magistrate to bind over, a judicial tribunal may entirely acquit. It is unjust, then, to form an opinion unfavorable to these parties, some of whom have for many years been among the most respectable of our community.

"From the partial nature of our examination, it must fall heavily on the defendants. Let us, then, forbear hastily to condemn any one. The duty of the magistrate is to hear the testimony, and if he is satisfied there is cause to bind over, he must do so. After carefully considering the testimony in the case, I am of opinion that there is cause to bind over the defendants.

"I therefore direct that Thomas W. Dyott, and Jacob Ridgway, and T. W. Dyott and Daniel Mann be bound over to the next court of criminal sessions, on a charge of conspiracy to defraud, in the sum of $5,000 each. T. W. Dyott is already in custody; J. B. & C. W. Dyott have not appeared before me. There does not appear to be any testimony to authorize the binding over of Thomas W. Dyott, jr. and Jacob Ridgway.

"Much has been said during the examination relative to Stephen Simpson, a witness for the prosecution, and of his connexion with T. W. Dyott. I have not been able to remove the impression from my mind that he has been an active agent in the transactions of the Manual Labor bank from its very commencement. I therefore hold Stephen Simpson to bail in the sum of $1,000, to the next court of criminal sessions, on a charge of conspiracy with Dr. Dyott."

Daniel Mann and Stephen Simpson gave bail; Jacob Ridgway refused to give bail, and surrendered himself into the custody of the high constable, and applied to the court of common pleas for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted. The writ was made returnable on Wednesday next, and in the mean time, Judge Randall held Mr. Ridgway to bail in the required sum of $5,000 for his appearance. By this proceeding, his whole case will have to undergo another examination, the object in view being the final discharge of the defendant, as his counsel assume that sufficient cause has not been shown authorising his being bound over on the charge alleged against him.

MISSOURI IRON MOUNTAIN. The St. Louis Bulletin of the 19th June says that the Iron Mountain rail road company has succeeded in disposing of $600,000 of their stock in New York, to Messrs. Rothschilds, through the agency of Mr. Seshel, and that general Jones leaves immediately for Europe to complete the engagement and receive the money. It is added "that the Rothschilds expressed themselves gratified with the charter, and were anxious to obtain the whole amount of the stock; and have likewise offered the company as much money as they required to carry on the operations, at 5 per cent. per annum. Two extensive manufacturers in New York, and one from New York, and the other from Baltimore, are now on their way to the mountain for the purpose of examination."

MISSOURI RIVER. The Globe states that information has been received at the engineer department from the superintendent of the improvement of the Missouri river, that the steam snag boat Heliopolis had worked 250 miles up from the mouth, and removed all the most dangerous snags from the main channel. The river is represented as being much changed in its appearance, and the navigation so much improved, that up to the point reached by the snag boat, steamers are now enabled to run in the night, which was not attempted by any of them previous to the commencement of the work.

SILK FARM IN PENNSYLVANIA. The Danville Reporter announces the arrival there of Mr. Morris Pollock, the enterprising proprietor of the Glovan Silk factory, near Glasgow in Scotland. As already understood by our readers, he proposes to establish a silk farm near Danville, on which he expects to raise $150,000 worth of the raw material annually to supply his establishment in Scotland. The Danville Reporter says that he intends to commence operations immediately. The superintendent of the establishment, and several hands just from the "old country," were "upon the ground." Mr. P. brought with him several species of the mulberry. He also brought over many of the finest varieties of the grapes, and designs to test the adaptation of the soil and climate about Danville to the growth of the vine. We predict that he will find both admirably suited.

THE NAVAL SCHOOL for boys at Brooklyn is said to be fulfilling the highest expectation of its friends. The discipline and instruction is such as to inspire the pupils with a high self-respect, while they are instructed in all the branches of science and art, which pertain to good seamanship. The United States sloop of war, St. Louis, captain Franck Forrest, now ready for a cruise to the Pacific, has been rigged entirely by the apprentice boys, under the direction of captain H. W. Odgen, of the Hudson frigate, and the 1st lieutenant J. Harding Marshall. It is said that the blocks are strappd, and the rigging set up in a style worthy of old tars.

There are about 100,000 seamen in the United States, and of this number a great majority are foreigners. The plan of school ships, if carried out, would probably train up an adequate body of American seamen.

NEWFOUNDLAND. A disagreement between the governor and the legislature, on a question of privilege, has led to the prorogation of the latter, until the home government could determine the point.—

The case is this: the clerk of the assembly being absent, the governor commissioned a Mr. H. W. Hyles as acting clerk. The assembly looked upon this as an invasion—and so it would seem to be—of their rights; and immediately appointed Mr. W. Dillon, who took his seat at the table. Thereupon, the governor prorogued the assembly.

UPPER CANADA. The Toronto Examiner alleges that constant emigration is going on from Upper Canada to the United States, owing to "tory persecution," and the uncertain condition of the province. There is no doubt, we apprehend, that the attempts at revolution have paralysed all undertakings, and materially injured the country. Revolutions are not playthings—and least of all, such revolutions as that attempted in the Canadas, where, after stimulating the unthinking and excitable into open revolt, the ring-leaders, almost without exception, fled to our borders, leaving their deluded and more sincere followers to bear the penalty of the whole offence.

CONSUL TRUST. This eminent personage ought not to write letters; or if he does he should enjoin his friends not to publish them, here is an extract from one of his effusions, which some very injudicious crows has communicated to one of the New Orleans papers.

"With regard to the newspapers, the only concern they give me is through my friends. As for the thing itself, and its direct bearing upon me, they might howl or bray ad libitum from one end of the year to the other, and the subject would be one of just as much interest to me as the croaking of the crows in any given marais of Louisiana, 1,000 miles off.

"But my friends and the public are entitled to hear some truth in the midst of all this lying, and they shall have it, but they must be patient. My friends must rest satisfied with the assurance which I give them, that they could not wish for me a prouder distinction than that which awaits me. If you were to set your imagination to work to devise all the shapes which falsehood could assume toward a man in my position, you would not count up half the heads of the hydra now hissing at me, and which it has been given me to exterminate. I wish you could see, were it ever so partially, the club that I have got.

"I have a number of issues to make before the American people, and those who have compelled me to make them, will be sicker of the undertaking than ever they were of any in their lives before."

If the consul is going to do such wonders with his club, we wish he would set about it. He brags fiercely—we would like to see how his performance will match.

THE LATE ELECTION IN PENNSYLVANIA. A correspondent wishes to know what was the real vote for governor, and upon the question of the amended constitution, at the October election.—The subjoined are the returns, as reported to the senate a few weeks since, by a committee appointed for the purpose of examining well the subject, and adopted and placed on the journals of that body as the true and complete vote. They include all the districts which had been omitted or rejected in the first returns.

MORMON MEETING. Agreeably to public notice, a meeting was held in the college chapel last evening, which was opened by a few remarks from a gentleman accompanying Mr. Greene; after which Mr. Greene gave a statement of the early settlement of the Mormons in Missouri, and a history of their persecution, which has hardly a parallel even in the persecution of the primitive Christians. They were ruthlessly driven from their homes, their property destroyed, the women and children forced into the woods without any shelter from the inclemency of the weather, (it being the month of January) where they roamed about till their feet became so sore that their enemies tracked them by foot-prints of blood. The men were in many instances cruelly murdered. On one occasion the mob attacked a smith-shop, into which nine of the Mormons and two boys had taken refuge; it being a log house, the mob fired between the logs, and killed every one of the nine men; then tered and dragged the two boys from under the floor who begged for mercy in most piteous wails, one of the miscreants applying his rifle to the ear of the youngest, (who was but nine years old) said, "my lad, we have no time to quarter you, but we will halve you," and immediately shot away the whole upper portion of his head. The other boy was severely wounded in the hip, but had the presence of mind to fall and remain quiet, and so escaped: he is still living, and is at Quincy, Ill.—Speaking of the massacre he said, "they had killed my father and brother, and I was afraid if I moved they would kill me too." To cap the climax, the sailors plundered the dead bodies of their clothes.

In another instance, a part of the mob pursued an aged man, who, finding he could not escape, knelt, and raising his hands to heaven, begged for mercy; the reply he received was a shot from a rifle, which he fell mortally wounded; he still besought them to spare him, when one of the party picked up a whip, or sickle, and literally hacked him to pieces as he lay on the ground. This man assisted in the achievement of our liberties in the revolutionary war. Mr. Green's narrative contained many such instances, and was indeed a tale of woe and suffering, at which the heart sickens.

On motion, a chairman and secretary were appointed, and resolutions passed condemning the conduct of the executive of Missouri; appointing a committee to prepare a statement of the treatment received by this distressed people, and recommending them to the favorable notice of the people of Cincinnati. BREAKING UP OF THE SLAVE TRADE. In conversation with captain McDonald of the brig North, that arrived at this port from the coast of Africa, we learn that thirty-one slave vessels had been captured, carried into Sierra Leone, and condemned between the first of January and the first of April last; that the British cruisers had also landed men and broke up several slave establishments on shore, particularly on the island of Boobala, a place so called by Portuguese.

Captain McDonald also states that the commander of the British brig of war Partage, told him in conversation that they had fallen in with several vessels which had the appearance of being slaves, but having American colors and papers, furnished the consul at Havana, he had to let them pass, and afterwards fell in with them, and captured them with slaves on board, that being proof positive of their true character.

More slave vessels had been captured lately between the river Gambia and Sierra Leone, than at any given time before; that part of the coast being near to the British settlement, and one of the principal rendezvous for men of war, that they did not think it required watching so closely, and whereby thousands of slaves were let slip, most of which would have been retaken and liberated, had they been aware of the extent to which the traffic had been carried on, almost under their own eyes.

Captain McDonald further states that the brig Transit of New York, in passing down the river Amazon, had been boarded by the people of one of the kings of that country, and robbed of a considerable amount of property, and one man killed belonging to the ship, before they surrendered. The property had, however, afterwards been all restored in their being told that an American man of war was lying in the Gambia and would be in the Nooeez in a few days, and destroy their town, which was very close to the shore, if it were not restored. No American man of war was there, however, for an American man of war seldom goes on the coast of Africa, and never for the protection of our trade, which is highly important and merits attention.—The reason the king gave the supercargo of the ship for robbing her, was that they had sold powder to his enemies up the river, with whom he was at war, and which enabled them to invade his dominions, and make slaves of his people.

EXPEDITION TO LIBERIA. The ship Saluda, captain Waters, just returned from Liberia, will be despatched again for that colony about the 1st of August. She will sail from Norfolk, and it is desirable that all emigrants who are to take passage there should be got ready who are to take passage as possible. The pilot ready who are to take passage are solicited to aid these emigrants in making their preparations, and in reaching the place at which they are to embark.

Editors in Virginia and North Carolina friendly to the cause of African colonization, are respectfully requested to forward this notice with an early insertion. S. WILKESON, Gen. agent Am. col. society.

BREAD. There is a general and well founded complaint that the loaves of bread made by the bakers of this city, are as small and as dear as they were when flour was nearly double its present price. This is a serious evil, but we doubt whether the passage of new laws or the revival of old ones, to regulate the bakers, as called for by some of the newspapers, is the proper and effectual remedy.—We might just as well fix the cost of shoes by law when leather is selling at a certain price, or do the same in regard to coats, according to the market price of cloth. Laws in such matters do nothing but mischief, and in the end injure instead of benefiting the consumer. The remedy is to be found in competition. Let it be understood that the baker who furnishes good bread at reasonable rates, will receive a large and steady patronage, and loaves will soon grow in size. The young bakers, who either wish to set up business for themselves, or are anxious to obtain more extensive custom, have now a glorious opportunity of reaping a harvest which will be lasting. Let them advertise their willingness to furnish loaves in due proportion to the price of flour, leaving themselves a reasonable profit—let them make their bread of proper quality of flour, and continue to do so, and their success is certain. If they hold back, persons more enterprising will come from other places and secure the prize which they neglect.

It appears that flour is selling in this city at little over six dollars a barrel, and the loaves are about the same in size, price, and remaining stationary, as when flour sold for $3 per barrel, a remaining stationary to those who have disposed to avail themselves of it; for even if they compel their brethren to follow their example, still they gain a business which will remain with them. Here are the business inducements, and in business it is as idle in itself, as it is erroneous in the philosophy of the thing, to hold out other reasons for pursuing a new course. Some of our cotemporaries ask for cheap bread on the score of charity to the poorer portions of the public. If this be a sound principle, which would in the end destroy every business subjected to it, why not whine to the butcher, the tailor, the hatter, the grocer, the shoemaker, to reduce prices on the score of benevolence—why not appeal to the philanthropy of the coal dealer for cheap coals—to the tender heartedness of the wollen merchant for cheap blankets—why not pass laws to regulate the business for them? Because we know better, but it is sometimes forgotten that the better does not form an exemption from the free action of trade, and in bread as in other matters of necessity, high prices, though grinding enough at the present time, are very often blessing instead of an evil, for they cause us to be economical in seasons of scarcity, and prevent a return of such periods by stimulating production; so that the evil of legal intermeddling is apparent. When prices are kept up without true cause, competition must be relied on to bring them down. If it should be known as a fact that more bakers are wanted in Philadelphia, we shall soon have them, and if bread brings more than a proper profit, the new bakers will soon reduce it, if the old ones are determinedly leagued together. Our people are ready enough to rush into any business which promises fairly. [Pennsylvaniaan.]

LAW CASES. New York court of common pleas. Judge Ulshoeffer, presiding. James Watson Webb vs. Joseph F. Atwell. This was an action to recover the amount of a bill for advertising in the Courier and Enquirer. It appeared that the defendant had been a yearly advertiser with the Courier, prior to July 1836, when he ceased to advertise by the year. In the course of the year 1838, several advertisements of the defendant's were sent to the Courier office, and published in that paper, and the present action was brought to recover the amount.

The defence set up was that the defendant had not sent these advertisements to the Courier. From the evidence it appeared that the defendant intended that these advertisements should be sent to another paper, and that they were sent to the Courier through the mistake of some person in defendant's employment. It was contended by counsel for defendant that even if he was liable to pay for the advertisements, he should be only charged the same price he would have had to pay as a yearly subscriber, and not the price charged him, which was at the same rate as was charged for casual advertisements.

The court charged the jury. It appears when these advertisements were published, the defendant was a yearly advertiser with the Commercial Advertiser, and the advertisements were left at the Courier office in mistake. Nevertheless, the plaintiff is entitled to be paid the same sum as he would from any other persons who sent advertisements to his office.

The plaintiff is not to be responsible for the mistakes of the defendant's servant, or on that account to suffer loss.

If there were two prices for advertising, you ought perhaps in the present instance to allow the plaintiff only the lower price, as the case occurred from accident. But there is no ground for such a question, except that yearly advertisers pay less than the rate charged the defendant. But the defendant had for more than a year discounted his advertisements, and therefore these advertisements can only be considered as casual advertisements, subject to the same prices as are charged in such cases. I have no doubt that the defendant is acting in perfect good faith, under the impression that he ought not to pay this debt, as he had not knowingly incurred it. He is nevertheless liable to pay the same as any one else would, who had sent the advertisements to the plaintiff's for publication.

Verdict for the plaintiff, $54 15, being the amount claimed.

Magdalena Bell vs. the mayor, alderman, &c. of the city of New York. An incorrect statement of the above case having appeared in some of the daily papers, the following brief account of the proceedings in it, and the result, may not be uninteresting, and may be relied on as entirely accurate.

Mrs. Bell claims a right of dower in Blackwell's Island as the widow of James T. Bell, esq. formerly sheriff of the city and county of New York, who in 1823 had purchased the island from Mr. Blackwell, and who died seized of the premises in 1825. After his death a mortgage, executed by him upon this island, to secure the payment of twenty thousand dollars, (a portion of the purchase money), was foreclosed in chancery and the property sold; and under these proceedings in chancery the corporation derive title. Mrs. Bell was not made a party to the proceedings of foreclosure, and she now claims her dower in the island, or that the corporation allow her to redeem, and convey to her the premises upon the payment of the amount due upon the mortgage.
